Subsection (b) specifies the elements of second degree possession of a prohibited weapon or accessory. Paragraph (b)(1) specifies that to commit second degree possession of a prohibited weapon or accessory, a person must act at least knowingly.[20] That is, the person must be practically certain that they possess an item[21] and must be practically certain that the item they possess is a firearm accessory or ammunition.[22] "Ammunition" is a defined term, which means cartridge cases, shells, projectiles (including shot), primers, bullets (including restricted pistol bullets), propellant powder, or other devices or materials designed, redesigned, or intended for use in a firearm or destructive device. "Possesses" is a defined term and includes both actual and constructive possession.[23] Constructive possession requires intent to exercise dominion and control over an object and to guide its destiny.[24] Evidence of knowledge of an item's location is required, but not necessarily sufficient, to demonstrate constructive possession.[25]

Paragraph (b)(2) specifies that a person must be at least reckless as to whether the accessory or ammunition is of the prohibited variety.[26] "Reckless" is a defined term,[27] which, applied here, means the person must consciously disregard a substantial risk that the item is a firearm silencer, bump stock, or large capacity ammunition feeding device.

---

[19] A person who carries a lantern, fireworks, pest exterminators, or demolition dynamite with intent to injure another person may still commit Possession of a Dangerous Weapon to Commit Crime (RCC § 22E-4103) or third degree Carrying a Dangerous Weapon (RCC § 22E-4102). A person who uses fire or explosives to damage property or to injure another person may commit Arson (RCC § 22E-2501), Reckless Burning (RCC § 22E-2502), or Assault (RCC § 22E-1202).

[20] "Knowingly" is defined in RCC § 22E-206.

[21] Knowledge of a gun's presence may be inferred from surrounding circumstances; direct evidence is not required. Logan v. United States, 489 A.2d 485 (D.C. 1985); see also Matter of T.M., 577 A.2d 1149 (D.C. 1990). However, the government must show a connection between the seized weapon and the criminal venture in order to enable the jury reasonably to infer the venturer's knowledge of the weapon. Easley v. United States, 482 A.2d 779 (D.C. 1984).

[22] Consider, for example, a person who finds firearm silencer on the street and, without recognizing the object, carries it away out of curiosity. That person does not commit possession of a prohibited weapon or accessory.

[23] RCC § 22E-701.

[24] See, e.g., In re M.I.W., 667 A.2d 573 (D.C. 1995); Guishard v. United States, 669 A.2d 1306, 1312 (D.C. 1995).

[25] See, e.g., Walker v. United States, 982 A.2d 723 (D.C. 2009) (holding while factfinder could infer that defendant knew of presence of gun, gun was inferentially in companion's sole possession throughout time police observed defendant and companion); Matter of L.A.V., 578 A.2d 708 (D.C. 1990). However, a person may be said to know the location of an object if they are generally aware of its whereabouts, even without knowing its exact position. For example, a person who is practically certain that their keys are somewhere in a set of drawers constructively possesses their keys.

[26] RCC § 22E-207.

[27] RCC § 22E-206.

The risk must be of such a nature and degree that, considering the nature of and motivation for the person's conduct and the circumstances the person is aware of, the person's conscious disregard of that risk is a gross deviation from the ordinary standard of conduct.[28] The government is not required to prove that the person should have been aware that it is illegal to have the item. Subparagraphs (b)(2)(A) – (C) categorically criminalize possession of three classes of prohibited objects.

Subparagraph (b)(2)(A) makes it unlawful to possess a firearm silencer. A silencer is a device that is designed[29] to reduce the sound of gunfire.

Subparagraph (b)(2)(B) makes it unlawful to possess a bump stock. The term "bump stock" is defined in RCC § 22E-701. The term includes any rifle stock or other device that enables the shooter to fire repeatedly—though less accurately—without moving the trigger finger. These stocks use spring action to propel the stock forward using the kickback from each previous shot.

Subparagraph (b)(2)(C) makes it unlawful to possess a large capacity ammunition feeding device. The term "large capacity ammunition feeding device" is defined[30] to include extended clips or drums that hold more than 10 rounds at a time.

Subsection (c) cross-references applicable exclusions from liability for certain weapons offenses in the RCC. Subsection (c) specifies "in fact," a defined term in RCC § 22E-207 that indicates there is no culpable mental state requirement for a given element, here the fact that the actor satisfies the criteria in RCC § 22E-4118.

Subsection (d) establishes an affirmative defense for a person who is voluntarily surrendering a weapon. The person must comply with the requirements of a District or federal voluntary surrender statute or rule.[31] Per RCC § 22E-201(b), the defense has the burden of proving an affirmative defense by a preponderance of the evidence.

Subsection (e) provides the penalty for each gradation of the revised offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.] Paragraph (e)(3) specifies that a conviction for possession of a prohibited weapon or accessory does not merge with any other offense arising from the same course of conduct.

Subsection (f) cross-references applicable definitions in the RCC.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised possession of a prohibited weapon or accessory statute clearly changes current District law in three main ways.

First, the RCC limits prohibited items to restricted explosives, firearms, and firearm accessories, grading possession of firearm accessories lower than possession of restricted

[28] RCC § 22E-206.

[29] Although everyday household items, such as soda bottles, may also be used to muffle noise, possession of such items which are not designed as silencers is not prohibited under this section, irrespective of unlawful intent.

[30] See RCC § 22E-701.

[31] See, e.g., D.C. Code §§ 7-2507.05; 7-2510.07(f)(1); see also Worthy v. United States, 420 A.2d 1216, 1218 (D.C. 1980) (citing Logan v. United States, 402 A.2d 822 (D.C. 1979); Hines v. United States, 326 A.2d 247, 248 (D.C. 1974)); Stein v. United States, 532 A.2d 641, 646 (D.C. 1987); Yoon v. United States, 594 A.2d 1056 (D.C. 1991); see also RCC § 22E-502, Temporary Possession.

explosives and firearms. D.C. Code § 22-4514(a) provides a single penalty gradation for possession of "any machine gun, sawed-off shotgun, bump stock, ghost gun, knuckles, or any instrument or weapon of the kind commonly known as a blackjack, slungshot, sand club, sandbag, switchblade knife, nor any instrument, attachment, or appliance for causing the firing of any firearm to be silent or intended to lessen or muffle the noise of the firing of any firearms…" In contrast, the revised offense punishes only possession of specified items that are likely to avoid security detection or cause or facilitate multiple fatalities in a single event. Possession of blackjacks and other dangerous weapons[32] is illegal if they are carried outside of the home,[33] possessed with intent to commit a crime,[34] or possessed during a crime.[35] Additionally, the RCC punishes some offenses more severely if a dangerous weapon is displayed or used, including robbery,[36] assault,[37] criminal threats,[38] sexual assault,[39] kidnapping,[40] and criminal restraint.[41] This change logically reorders and improves the proportionality of the revised offenses.

Second, the revised statute eliminates the repeat offender penalty enhancements consistent with other nonviolent revised offenses. Current D.C. Code § 22-4514(c) provides that a first possession of a prohibited weapon offense is punishable by a maximum of one year in jail and a second possession of a prohibited weapon offense (or a possession of a prohibited weapon offense committed by a person who has been previously convicted of a felony) is punishable by a maximum of 10 years in prison. Current D.C. Code § 22-4515a(d) provides that a first possession of a Molotov cocktail offense is punishable by 1-5 years in prison, a second is punishable by 3-15, and a third is punishable by 5-30. It further provides that a person convicted for a third time may not benefit from the Federal Youth Corrections Act. In contrast, the RCC does not provide an offense-specific penalty enhancement for a second or subsequent offense. The RCC general recidivism enhancement (RCC § 22E-606) is limited to RCC offenses against persons and enhanced burglary, which requires the presence of a dangerous weapon or imitation firearm. The RCC also punishes possession of a firearm by a person who has previously convicted of a felony or weapons offense under RCC § 22E-4105. This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised statute.

Third, the revised statute requires that a person be at least reckless as to the weapon or accessory being of the variety that is prohibited. Current D.C. Code § 22-4514(a) does [32] The term "dangerous weapon" is defined in RCC § 22E-701 to include "[a]ny object, other than a body part or stationary object, that in the manner of its actual, attempted, or threatened use is likely to cause death or serious bodily injury to a person."

[33] RCC § 22E-4102.
[34] RCC § 22E-4103.
[35] RCC § 22E-4104.
[36] RCC § 22E-1201.
[37] RCC § 22E-1202.
[38] RCC § 22E-1204.
[39] RCC § 22E-1301.
[40] RCC § 22E-1401.
[41] RCC § 22E-1402.

not specify a requisite mental state.[42] However, legislative history indicates that Congress intended to create a general intent crime,[43] such that the mere possession of certain enumerated weapons is prohibited, even if the person is unaware of the attributes that render the weapon unlawful.[44] In some instances, the unlawful attribute is not apparent on visual inspection. For example, a semiautomatic weapon may be converted, either by internal modification or simply by wear and tear, into a machine gun within the meaning of the statute.[45] The revised statute requires that a person consciously disregard a substantial risk that the item has the characteristics of a prohibited weapon or accessory. Requiring, at a minimum, a knowing culpable mental state for the elements of an offense that make otherwise legal conduct illegal is a generally accepted legal principle.[46] However, recklessness has been upheld in some cases as a minimal basis for punishing morally culpable crime.[47] This change improves the proportionality of the revised offense.

Beyond these three changes to current District law, two other aspects of the revised statute may constitute substantive changes to District law.

First, the revised statute does not include an explicit reference to manufacturing, transferring, using, transporting, or selling a prohibited weapon. D.C. Code § 7-2506.01(b) makes it unlawful to possess, sell, or transfer any large capacity ammunition feeding device. This conduct is also prohibited by D.C. Code § 7-2504.01(b).[48] D.C. Code § 22-4515a makes it unlawful to manufacture, transfer, use, possess, or transport a Molotov cocktail. This conduct is also prohibited by D.C. Code §§ 7-2502.01[49] and 7-2505.01.[50]

---

[42] District case law requires knowledge for the actual or constructive possession of any item. See, e.g., Campos v. United States, 617 A.2d 185, 187-88 (D.C. 1992); United States v. Joseph, 892 F.2d 118, 125 (D.C. Cir. 1989); Thompson v. United States, 567 A.2d 907, 908 (D.C. 1989); Easley v. United States, 482 A.2d 779, 781 (D.C. 1984).

[43] "General intent" is not used in or defined in the current statute, but the DCCA has said that it is frequently defined as "intent to do the prohibited act" which requires "the absence of an exculpatory state of mind." Morgan v. District of Columbia, 476 A.2d 1128, 1132 (D.C. 1984).

[44] See McBride v. United States, 441 A.2d 644, 660 n. 7 (D.C.1982); Worthy v. United States, 420 A.2d 1216, 1218 (1980); United States v. Brooks, 330 A.2d 245, 247 (D.C.1974); In re D.S., 747 A.2d 1182, 1186 (D.C. 2000).

[45] See Staples v. United States, 511 U.S. 600, 614-15 (1994).

[46] Elonis v. United States," 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2010, 192 L.Ed.2d 1 (2015) ("When interpreting federal criminal statutes that are silent on the required mental state, we read into the statute 'only that mens rea which is necessary to separate wrongful conduct from 'otherwise innocent conduct.'" Carter v. United States, 530 U.S. 255, 269, 120 S.Ct. 2159, 147 L.Ed.2d 203 (2000) (quoting X-citement Video, 513 U.S., at 72, 115 S.Ct. 464).").

[47] Elonis v. United States," 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2015, 192 L.Ed.2d 1 (2015) (J. Alito, concurring) ("There can be no real dispute that recklessness regarding a risk of serious harm is wrongful conduct. In a wide variety of contexts, we have described reckless conduct as morally culpable.").

[48] "No person or organization shall engage in the business of selling…any firearm…[or] parts therefor…without first obtaining a dealer's license."

[49] "[N]o person or organization…shall…transfer, offer for sale, sell, give, or deliver any destructive device." See also D.C. Code § 7-2501.01 (defining the term "destructive device" to include "[a]n explosive, incendiary, or poison gas bomb, grenade, rocket, missile, mine, or similar device," such as a Molotov cocktail).

[50] "No person or organization shall sell, transfer or otherwise dispose of any…destructive device…except as provided in § 7-2502.10(c), § 7-2505.02, or § 7-2507.05." See also D.C. Code § 7-2501.01 (defining the

In contrast, the RCC's definition of possess[51] includes actual possession and constructive possession. A person who knowingly manufactures, transfers, uses, transports, or sells a prohibited weapon appears to either violate the revised statute by having the ability and desire to exercise control over the object, or, when falsely advertising an object for sale, is engaged in conduct criminalized elsewhere.[52] This change improves the consistency of the revised statutes and reduces unnecessary overlap between offenses.

Second, the revised statute does not include an explicit exception for possession of a Molotov cocktail during a state of emergency. D.C. Code § 22-4515a(c) provides that a person may not manufacture, transfer, use, possess, or transport an explosive during a state of emergency "except at his or her residence or place of business." There is no clear rationale for why, at present, person can make and transfer explosives during a state of emergency. This conduct is prohibited by D.C. Code §§ 7-2502.01, 7-2504.01(b), and 7-2505.01, none of which contain a similar state-of-emergency exception. Where a state of emergency is occasioned by mass disorder such as rioting, the sale of Molotov cocktails may be even more dangerous than during a time of peace. This change improves the consistency of the revised statutes and reduces an unnecessary gap in liability.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

First, the revised statute uses the undefined term "firearm silencer." Current D.C. Code § 22-4514(a) makes it unlawful to possess "any instrument, attachment, or appliance for causing the firing of any firearm to be silent or intended to lessen or muffle the noise of the firing of any firearms." It is unclear from the statute whether it is intended to include only items that are designed to silence firearms or to also include any object[53] that is actually used or could be used to muffle the sound of gunfire. Case law has not addressed the issue. In contrast, the phrase "firearm silencer," which appears twice in D.C. Code § 7-2501.01,[54] more directly refers to items that are designed to silence a firearm.

term "destructive device" to include "[a]n explosive, incendiary, or poison gas bomb, grenade, rocket, missile, mine, or similar device," such as a Molotov cocktail).

[51] RCC § 22E-701.

[52] See D.C. Code § 22-1511 (Fraudulent advertising).

[53] For example, a plastic bottle may muffle the sound of a firearm discharging.

[54] "Firearm muffler or silencer" appears in the current definition of "firearm." "Silencer" appears in the definition of "assault weapon."

RCC § 22E-4102. Carrying a Dangerous Weapon.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the carrying a dangerous weapon offense and penalty gradations for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The offense proscribes carrying a firearm without a license. It also proscribes carrying another dangerous weapon with intent to use it in a manner likely to cause death or a serious bodily injury. The revised offense replaces D.C. Code §§ 22-4502.01 (Gun free zones; enhanced penalty) and 22-4504(a) and (a-1).

Subsection (a) punishes carrying a firearm, unlicensed pistol, or restricted explosive in a prohibited location[1] as first degree carrying a dangerous weapon.[2]

Paragraph (a)(1) specifies that a person must knowingly possess a weapon.[3] "Knowingly" is a defined term[4] and applied here means that the person must be practically certain that they possess the weapon. "Possesses" is a defined term and includes both actual and constructive possession.[5] Constructive possession requires intent to exercise dominion and control over an object and to guide its destiny.[6] The person must know they possess a weapon[7] or that they possess component parts that could be arranged to make a whole firearm.[8] Evidence of knowledge of an item's location is required, but not necessarily sufficient, to demonstrate constructive possession.[9]

Subparagraphs (a)(1)(A) – (C) specify that a person commits the offense by having a firearm other than a pistol, a pistol without a license, or a restricted explosive. "Firearm," and "pistol" are defined terms,[10] which include inoperable weapons that may be

---

[1] See Wrenn v. Dist. of Columbia, 864 F.3d 650, 662 (D.C. Cir. 2017) (stating, "'[W]hen a state bans guns merely in particular places, such as public schools, a person can preserve an undiminished right of self-defense by not entering those places…' By contrast, a ban on owning or storing guns at home leaves no alternative channels for keeping arms." (Emphasis in original.) (Internal citations omitted.)).

[2] The revised first degree carrying a dangerous weapon offense replaces D.C. Code § 22-4502.01, which provides an enhanced penalty for illegally carrying a firearm in a gun free zone.

[3] Knowledge of a gun's presence may be inferred from surrounding circumstances; direct evidence is not required. Logan v. United States, 489 A.2d 485 (D.C. 1985); see also Matter of T.M., 577 A.2d 1149 (D.C. 1990). However, the government must show a connection between the seized weapon and the criminal venture in order to enable the jury reasonably to infer the venturer's knowledge of the weapon. Easley v. United States, 482 A.2d 779 (D.C. 1984).

[4] "Knowingly" is defined in RCC § 22E-206.

[5] RCC § 22E-701.

[6] See, e.g., In re M.I.W., 667 A.2d 573 (D.C. 1995); Guishard v. United States, 669 A.2d 1306, 1312 (D.C. 1995).

[7] See Campos v. United States, 617 A.2d 185, 187-88 (D.C. 1992) (explaining, that a person who has no knowledge that he or she has a pistol, despite the fact that it is located on his or her person, does not exercise direct physical control over the pistol).

[8] Myers v. United States, 56 A.3d 1148 (D.C. 2012).

[9] See, e.g., Walker v. United States, 982 A.2d 723 (D.C. 2009) (holding while factfinder could infer that defendant knew of presence of gun, gun was inferentially in companion's sole possession throughout time police observed defendant and companion); Matter of L.A.V., 578 A.2d 708 (D.C. 1990). However, a person may be said to know the location of an object if they are generally aware of its whereabouts, even without knowing its exact position. For example, a person who is practically certain that their keys are somewhere in a set of drawers constructively possesses their keys.

[10] RCC § 22E-701.

redesigned, remade or readily converted or restored to operability[11] but exclude antiques.[12] Pistols are a subset of firearms that are either designed to be fired by a single hand or have a barrel shorter than 12 inches.[13] District law allows civilians to apply for a license to carry a pistol,[14] however, carrying a larger firearm is categorically prohibited. The term "restricted explosive" is defined[15] to include Molotov cocktails, bombs, grenades, and missiles. However, the term does not include explosive and combustible objects lawfully and commercially manufactured for a lawful purpose, which may exclude liability for items such as lanterns, fireworks, pest exterminators, or demolition dynamite.[16]

Paragraph (a)(2) and subparagraph (a)(3)(A) explain that two elements must be proven to establish that a person "carried" a firearm or explosive. Paragraph (a)(2) specifies that a person must carry the weapon in a manner that it is both conveniently accessible and within reach.[17] Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the person must know—that is, be practically certain—that the weapon is conveniently accessible and within reach. Subparagraph (a)(3)(A) requires that the person possess the weapon in a location other than their own home,[18] place of business, or land. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the person must know—that is, be practically certain—that the location is not their own home, business place, or land.

Subparagraph (a)(3)(B) provides elevated liability for illegally carrying a firearm or explosive within 300 feet of a location that operates as a school, college, university, public swimming pool, public playground, public youth center, or public library, or children's day care center.[19] The 300-foot distance is calculated from the boundary line, not from the edge of a building.[20] Sub-subparagraph (a)(3)(B)(ii) requires that the location displays clear and conspicuous signage that indicates firearms or explosives are

---

[11] Townsend v. United States, 559 A.2d 1319 (D.C. 1989).

[12] Unless there is evidence that the firearm is antique, the government is not required to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the firearms are not antique as an element of the offense in its case-in-chief. Toler v. United States, 198 A.3d 767 (D.C. 2018).

[13] RCC § 22E-701.

[14] D.C. Code § 22-4506; 24 DCMR §§ 2332 – 2342; see also Wrenn v. Dist. of Columbia, 864 F.3d 650 (D.C. Cir. 2017).

[15] RCC § 22E-701.

[16] A person who carries a lantern, fireworks, pest exterminators, or demolition dynamite with intent to injure another person may still commit Possession of a Dangerous Weapon to Commit Crime (RCC § 22E-4103) or third degree Carrying a Dangerous Weapon (RCC § 22E-4102). A person who uses fire or explosives to damage property or to injure another person may commit Arson (RCC § 22E-2501), Reckless Burning (RCC § 22E-2502), or Assault (RCC § 22E-1202).

[17] See White v. United States, 714 A.2d 115, 119 (D.C.1998); Johnson v. United States, 840 A.2d 1277, 1280 (D.C. 2004). For example, where there is an obstacle to a person's access to a weapon, such as a locked trunk, the person has not carried a weapon under the revised statute. See, e.g., Henderson v. United States, 687 A.2d 918, 922 (D.C. 1996); Wilson v. United States, 198 F.2d 299, 300 (D.C. Cir. 1952).

[18] Unlike the term "dwelling," which is defined in RCC § 22E-701, the word "home" refers to the person's own place of abode. It is not necessary to prove that the location is the person's bona fide residence or domicile. However, "home" does not include momentary sleeping quarters such as a guest room or hotel room. See, e.g., Osterweil v. Bartlett, 21 N.Y.3d 580 (2013).

[19] These locations include buildings or building grounds that are being used for the specified purpose. They do not include, for example, an address that is used only to receive mail for an online education program or a Free Little Library book exchange box.

[20] See Jeffrey v. United States, 892 A.2d 1122 (D.C. 2006).

prohibited.[21] Whether a sign is clear and conspicuous may depend on facts including its placement, legibility, and word choice.[22] Subparagraph (a)(3)(B) uses the term "in fact" to specify that there is no culpable mental state required as to whether the person is in an appropriately identified school, college building, university building, public swimming pool, public playground, public youth center, or public library, or children's day care center.

Subsection (b) punishes carrying a firearm, unlicensed pistol, or restricted explosive in any location anywhere other than the person's home, place of business, or land as second degree carrying a dangerous weapon.[23] This gradation of the offense does not require proof of a prohibited location (a "school zone") but otherwise has elements identical to first degree carrying a dangerous weapon.

Subsection (c) punishes carrying a dangerous weapon with intent to use the weapon in a manner likely to seriously injure or kill another person[24] as third degree carrying a dangerous weapon.[25] Paragraph (c)(1) specifies that a person must knowingly[26] possess a dangerous weapon.[27] "Possesses" is a defined term and includes both actual and constructive possession.[28] Constructive possession requires intent to exercise dominion and control over an object and to guide its destiny.[29] The person must be practically certain that the item is one of the objects that qualifies as a dangerous weapon.[30] Evidence of knowledge of an item's location is required, but not necessarily sufficient, to demonstrate constructive possession.[31]

---

[21] E.g., a sign reading, "Gun Free Zone."

[22] This is a more flexible standard than provided in the District's current municipal regulation of signage preventing entry onto private property with a concealed firearm. 24 DCMR § 2346 (requiring a sign at the that is at least eight (8) inches by ten (10) inches in size and contains writing in contrasting ink using not less than thirty-six (36) point type).

[23] The revised second and third degree carrying a dangerous weapon offenses replace D.C. Code §§ 22-4504(a) and (a-1), which criminalize carrying a pistol without a license, a deadly or dangerous weapon, or a rifle or shotgun.

[24] The revised third degree carrying a dangerous weapon offense differs from the revised third degree possession of a dangerous weapon during a crime offense RCC § 22E-4104(c) insofar as: (1) it does not include stun guns, (2) it requires carrying in a manner that is conveniently accessible and within reach, and (3) it criminalizes possession for purposes of non-immediate, conditional self-defense.

[25] The revised second and third degree carrying a dangerous weapon offenses replace D.C. Code §§ 22-4504(a) and (a-1), which criminalize carrying a pistol without a license, a deadly or dangerous weapon, or a rifle or shotgun.

[26] "Knowingly" is defined in RCC § 22E-206.

[27] See, e.g., United States v. Matthews, 480 F.2d 1191, 1192 (D.C. Cir. 1973).

[28] RCC § 22E-701.

[29] See, e.g., In re M.I.W., 667 A.2d 573 (D.C. 1995); Guishard v. United States, 669 A.2d 1306, 1312 (D.C. 1995).

[30] "Dangerous weapon" is defined in RCC § 22E-701 to include firearms, explosives, daggers, blackjacks, false knuckles and other items. It also includes any object, if the actual, attempted, or threatened use is likely to inflict a serious bodily injury. Consider, for example, a person who picks up a brick with intent to strike another person. The person commits carrying a dangerous weapon only if they intend to strike the person in a manner that will likely cause a serious bodily injury (e.g., a blow to the head).

[31] See, e.g., Walker v. United States, 982 A.2d 723 (D.C. 2009) (holding while factfinder could infer that defendant knew of presence of gun, gun was inferentially in companion's sole possession throughout time police observed defendant and companion); Matter of L.A.V., 578 A.2d 708 (D.C. 1990). However, a person may be said to know the location of an object if they are generally aware of its whereabouts, even Paragraphs (c)(2) and (c)(3) explain that two elements must be proven to establish that a person "carried" a dangerous weapon. Paragraph (c)(2) specifies that a person must carry the weapon in a manner that it is both conveniently accessible and within reach. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the person must know—that is, be practically certain—that the weapon is conveniently accessible and within reach. Subparagraph (c)(3) requires that the person possess the weapon in a location other than their own home, place of business, or land. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the person must know—that is, be practically certain—that the location is not their own home, business place, or land.

Paragraph (c)(4) specifies that the person must possess the dangerous weapon with intent to use the weapon in a manner that is likely to cause death or serious bodily injury to another person. "Intent" is a defined term,[32] which, applied here, means the accused must be practically certain that the intended use would cause a serious bodily injury or death. The government is not required to prove intent to use the weapon unlawfully,[33] but is required to prove intent to use the item as a dangerous weapon.[34] "Serious bodily injury" is defined in the RCC to require a substantial risk of death, protracted and obvious disfigurement, protracted loss or impairment of the function of a bodily member or organ or protracted loss of consciousness.[35] The word "likely" clarifies that the danger of harm must be objectively more probable than not. Some dangerous weapons are of such limited lethality and dangerousness that they typically will not meet this standard.[36] Paragraph (c)(4) specifies that the intent to use the weapon may be conditional.[37] Although general defenses such as defense of self or another person[38] and defense of property[39] apply to this without knowing its exact position. For example, a person who is practically certain that their keys are somewhere in a set of drawers constructively possesses their keys.

---

[32] RCC § 22E-206.

[33] See In re S.P., 465 A.2d 823, 824 (D.C. 1983) (affirming a conviction for carrying a dangerous weapon where the defendant was swinging and twirling nunchaku in a crowd of onlookers); see also Cooke v. United States, 275 F.2d 887, 888 (D.C. Cir. 1960) (upholding a conviction for carrying a pistol in self-defense).

[34] Strong v. United States, 581 A.2d 383 (D.C. 1990); see also Tuckson v. United States, 77 A.3d 357, 361 (D.C. 2013) (finding no probable cause for possession of a prohibited weapon where a defendant possessed a collapsible police baton in his car, as the design and purpose of the instrument was not for use as a weapon, and defendant did not display, wield, or hold the baton in the presence of police officers).

[35] RCC § 22E-701.

[36] In most instances, use of a stun gun is unlikely to cause "serious bodily injury," which is defined in RCC § 22E-701 to require "protracted loss or impairment of the function of a bodily member or organ."

[37] Proof of an intent to use the weapon for an unlawful purpose is not an element of the offense. Scott v. United States, 243 A.2d 54, 56 (D.C. 1968) (citing United States v. Shannon, D.C.Mun.App., 144 A.2d 267 (1958)). Proof of intent to use the weapon for a dangerous purpose is sufficient. See In re M.L., 24 A.3d 63, 68 (D.C. 2011) (citing Lewis v. United States, 767 A.2d 219, 222-23 (D.C. 2001); Monroe v. United States, 598 A.2d 439, 441 (D.C.1991)).

[38] See RCC § 22E-403; see also Williams v. United States, 90 A.3d 1124, 1127 (D.C. 2014); Reid v. United States, 581 A.2d 359, 367 (D.C. 1990); Potter v. United States, 534 A.2d 943, 946 (D.C. 1987); McBride v. United States, 441 A.2d 644, 649 (D.C. 1982); Cooke v. United States, 213 A.2d 508, 510 (D.C. 1965); United States v. Christian, 187 F.3d 663, 666 (D.C. Cir. 1999).

[39] See RCC § 22E-404; see also Doby v. United States, 550 A.2d 919 (D.C. 1988).

offense, carrying a dangerous weapon for purposes of non-imminent self-defense is prohibited.[40]

Subsection (d) cross-references applicable exclusions from liability for certain weapons offenses in the RCC. Subsection (d) specifies "in fact," a defined term in RCC § 22E-207 that indicates there is no culpable mental state requirement for a given element, here the fact that the actor satisfies the criteria in RCC § 22E-4118.

Subsection (e) establishes an affirmative defense for a person who is voluntarily surrendering a weapon. The person must comply with the requirements of a District or federal voluntary surrender statute or rule.[41] Per RCC § 22E-201(b), the defense has the burden of proving an affirmative defense by a preponderance of the evidence.

Subsection (f) provides the penalty for each gradation of the revised offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.]

Subsection (g) cross-references applicable definitions in the RCC.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised carrying a dangerous weapon statute clearly changes current District law in five main ways.

First, the revised offense applies only to people who are outside of their own home, place of business, or land. D.C. Code § 22-4504 distinguishes a higher penalty gradation for possession of a firearm outside of "the person's dwelling place, place of business, or on other land possessed by the person."[42] In Heller I, the United States Supreme Court explained that it violates the Second Amendment to inhibit the operability of a lawful firearm in the home for the purpose of immediate self-defense.[43] The Court required the District to permit the plaintiff to register his handgun and to issue him a license to carry it in the home, fully assembled, loaded, and without a trigger lock. The RCC does not separately punish carrying a lawfully registered firearm at home.[44] This change reduces unnecessary overlap between the possession and carrying offenses and may improve the constitutionality of the revised offense.

Second, the revised offense punishes carrying a firearm or a restricted explosive in a school zone. Current D.C. Code § 22-4502.01 establishes a penalty enhancement for any person who carries a gun within 1000 feet of a school, playground, or public housing. The term "gun" is not defined in the statute and case law does not clarify whether it is intended to include air guns, spring guns, stun guns, imitation firearms, toys, or antiques. There is [40] For example, a person who carries a dagger in their purse to protect against any potential attackers commits third degree carrying a dangerous weapon. This is true even if the perceived threat is objectively reasonable under the circumstances.

---

[41] See, e.g., D.C. Code §§ 7-2507.05; 7-2510.07(f)(1); see also Worthy v. United States, 420 A.2d 1216, 1218 (D.C. 1980) (citing Logan v. United States, 402 A.2d 822 (D.C. 1979); Hines v. United States, 326 A.2d 247, 248 (D.C. 1974)); Stein v. United States, 532 A.2d 641, 646 (D.C. 1987); Yoon v. United States, 594 A.2d 1056 (D.C. 1991); see also RCC § 22E-502, Temporary Possession.

[42] D.C. Code § 22-4502.01 establishes a penalty enhancement for any person carries a gun within 1000 feet of a school, playground, or public housing, without any exception for a person whose dwelling, business or land is located inside a gun free zone.

[43] 554 U.S. 570 (2008).

[44] Mere possession of an unregistered firearm is punished under RCC § 7-2502.01A.

no clear rationale for excluding explosives—which may be as lethal or more lethal than firearms—from the reach of the enhancement. In contrast, the revised code defines the terms "firearm" and "restricted explosive"[45] and specifies that a person who unlawfully carries either class of weapon near a school, playground, or day care center is subject to a more severe penalty than a person who carries such a weapon in another location. This change clarifies the revised offense, eliminates an unnecessary gap in liability, and improves the proportionality of the revised offenses.

Third, the first degree of the revised offense requires that the person know that they are proximate to a school, college, university, public swimming pool, public playground, public youth center, public library, or children's day care center. D.C. Code § 22-4502.01 does not specify a culpable mental state as to the location. It does, however, require that the location be "appropriately identified," that is, bearing "a sign that identifies the building or area as a gun free zone." In contrast, the revised offense applies the standard culpable mental state definition of "knowingly" used throughout the RCC.[46] Applying a knowledge culpable mental state requirement to statutory elements that distinguish innocent from criminal behavior is a well-established practice in American jurisprudence.[47] This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised offense.

Fourth, the revised statute narrows the list of locations that elevate a carrying a dangerous weapon offense from second degree to first degree. Current D.C. Code § 22-4502.01 establishes a 1000-foot radius for gun free zones and describes them to include any "video arcade" and "in and around public housing as defined in section 3(1) of the United States Housing Act of 1937, approved August 22, 1974 (88 Stat. 654; 42 U.S.C. § 1437a(b)), the development or administration of which is assisted by the United States Department of Housing and Urban Development, or in or around housing that is owned, operated, or financially assisted by the District of Columbia Housing Authority." Video arcades are considerably less common in modern times than when the statute became law in 1981. In fact, the District does not appear to have any arcades that are open to minor children presently advertised online. On the other hand, large sections of the District fall within a 1000-foot radius of public housing.[48] In contrast, the revised offense protects a

[45] RCC § 22E-701.
[46] RCC § 22E-206.
[47] There is a presumption that the legislature intends to require a defendant to possess a degree of knowledge sufficient to "mak[e] a person legally responsible for the consequences of his or her act or omission" regarding "each of the statutory elements that criminalize otherwise innocent conduct," even when the legislature does not specify any scienter in the statutory text. Rehaif v. United States, 17-9560, 2019 WL 2552487, at *3 (U.S. June 21, 2019) (citing United States v. X-Citement Video, Inc., 513 U. S. 64, 72 (1994); Morissette v. United States, 342 U. S. 246, 256-258 (1952); Staples v. United States, 511 U. S. 600, 606 (1994); Black's Law Dictionary 1547 (10th ed. 2014)); see also Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2009 (2015) ("[O]ur cases have explained that a defendant generally must 'know the facts that make his conduct fit the definition of the offense,' even if he does not know that those facts give rise to a crime." (Internal citation omitted)).
[48] At least one court has held that public housing tenants have a right to bear arms in common areas. Doe v. Wilmington Hous. Auth., 88 A.3d 654 (Del. 2014); see also Mo. Ann. Stat. § 571.107(1)(6) (explicitly exempting any building used for public housing by private persons from any restriction on the carrying or possession of a firearm); but see People v. Cunningham, 1-16-0709, 2019 WL 1429072 (Ill. App. Ct. Mar. 29, 2019) (holding that a ban in public housing is constitutional). The D.C. Department of Housing and 300-foot radius around every "school, college building, university building, public swimming pool, public playground, public youth center, or public library, or children's day care center." These locations are similarly protected from stun guns[49] and drug activity[50] under the revised code. This change improves the consistency of the revised offenses and eliminates an unnecessary gap in liability.

Fifth, the revised statute eliminates repeat offender penalty enhancements consistent with other nonviolent revised offenses. Current D.C. Code § 22-4504 provides that a first carrying a dangerous weapon offense is punishable by a maximum of one year in jail and a second carrying a dangerous weapon offense (or a carrying a dangerous weapon offense committed by a person who has been previously convicted of a felony) is punishable by a maximum of 10 years in prison. In contrast, the RCC does not provide an offense-specific penalty enhancement for a second or subsequent offense. The RCC general recidivism enhancement (RCC § 22E-606) is limited to RCC offenses against persons and enhanced burglary, which requires the presence of a dangerous weapon or imitation firearm. The RCC also punishes possession of a firearm by a person who has previously convicted of a felony or weapons offense under RCC § 22E-4105. This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised statute.

Beyond these five changes to current District law, two other aspects of the revised statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised offense applies a heightened penalty for carrying a pistol in a school zone only if the pistol is carried without a license. Current D.C. Code § 22-4502.01 establishes a penalty enhancement for any person carrying a gun illegally in a prohibited location. The term "illegally" is not defined in the statute and District case law has not addressed its meaning.[51] The revised code attaches a location enhancement to the offense of carrying a firearm or explosive without permission only when a person carries a pistol without a license.[52] This change improves the clarity of the revised offenses.

Second, the RCC separately codifies a list of exclusions from liability for possessory weapons offenses that are incorporated into the revised carrying a dangerous weapon offense by reference.[53] Current D.C. Code § 22-4504 does not include any exceptions for law enforcement officers, weapons dealers, government employees, and nonresidents who carry a dangerous weapon. In contrast, RCC § 22E-4118 provides a comprehensive list of exclusions from liability, accounting for these and other legitimate

---

Community Development, along with Urban Institute, the Coalition for Non Profit Housing and Economic Development, and Code for D.C., produced an interactive tool at HousingInsights.org. The map illustrates that large portions of some neighborhoods—and much of an entire city ward—are subject to the current enhancement penalty.

[49] RCC § 7-2502.15.

[50] See RCC § 48-904.01b(g)(7)(C)(i).

[51] D.C. Code § 22-4502.01(c) provides an exception for licensees who live or work within 1000 feet of a gun free zone. This may indicate that licensees are otherwise included within the statute's intended reach.

[52] A person who has a license to carry but does so in an illegal manner per RCC § 7-2509.06A, carrying a pistol in an unlawful manner, is not liable for carrying a firearm or explosive without permission or its first degree gradation containing a location enhancement.

[53] RCC § 22E-4118.

circumstances. Moreover, legitimate use of weapons by law enforcement and others fall under the general provisions' justification defense for execution of public duty.[54] This change improves the clarity, consistency, and completeness of the revised code.

[54] RCC § 22E-402.

RCC § 22E-4103. Possession of a Dangerous Weapon with Intent to Commit Crime.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the possession of a dangerous weapon with intent to commit crime offense and penalty gradations for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The offense proscribes having an explosive, imitation firearm or other dangerous weapon with intent to commit an offense against persons or specified property crimes. The revised offense replaces D.C. Code §§ 22-4514(b) (Possession of a dangerous weapon with intent to use unlawfully against another)[1] and 22-4515a(b) (Manufacture, transfer, use, possession, or transportation of Molotov cocktails, or other explosives for unlawful purposes, prohibited; definitions; penalties).[2]

Subsection (a) specifies the elements of first degree possession of a dangerous with intent to commit crime.

Paragraph (a)(1) specifies that a person must at least knowingly[3] possess an object designed to explode or produce uncontained combustion. "Possesses" is a defined term and includes both actual and constructive possession.[4] Constructive possession requires intent to exercise dominion and control over an object and to guide its destiny.[5] The person must be practically certain that the object is explosive. Evidence of knowledge of an object's location is required, but not necessarily sufficient, to demonstrate constructive possession.[6]

Paragraph (a)(2) specifies that the person must possess the explosive with intent to commit a crime. "Intent" is a defined term[7] which, applied here, means the accused must be practically certain that they are engaging in the conduct that constitutes an offense against persons or an offense against property. The intended conduct must be criminal.[8] The burden of proof rests with the government and does not shift to the defense to prove innocent possession.[9] Evidence of an actual attempt to do harm is not required.[10]

---

[1] The revised possession of a prohibited weapon or accessory offense (RCC § 22E-4101) and the revised possession of a dangerous weapon with intent to commit crime offense (RCC § 22E-4103) together replace the penalty provisions in D.C. Code § 22-4514(c) – (d).

[2] The revised possession of a prohibited weapon or accessory offense (RCC § 22E-4101) and the revised possession of a dangerous weapon with intent to commit crime offense (RCC § 22E-4103) together replace the penalty provisions in D.C. Code § 22-4515a(d) – (e).

[3] "Knowingly" is defined in RCC § 22E-206.

[4] RCC § 22E-701.

[5] See, e.g., In re M.I.W., 667 A.2d 573 (D.C. 1995); Guishard v. United States, 669 A.2d 1306, 1312 (D.C. 1995).

[6] See, e.g., Walker v. United States, 982 A.2d 723 (D.C. 2009) (holding while factfinder could infer that defendant knew of presence of gun, gun was inferentially in companion's sole possession throughout time police observed defendant and companion); Matter of L.A.V., 578 A.2d 708 (D.C. 1990). However, a person may be said to know the location of an object if they are generally aware of its whereabouts, even without knowing its exact position. For example, a person who is practically certain that their keys are somewhere in a set of drawers constructively possesses their keys.

[7] RCC § 22E-206.

[8] General defenses under Chapter 4 in Subtitle I, such as defense of self or another person, are applicable to the offense.

[9] United States v. Brooks, 330 A.2d 245, 246 (D.C. 1974).

[10] Jones v. United States, 401 A.2d 473 (D.C. 1979).

Subparagraphs (a)(2)(A) and (a)(2)(B) specify that the person must intend to commit a criminal harm[11] that is either an offense against persons[12] or an offense against property.[13] Subparagraphs (a)(2)(A) and (a)(2)(B) use the term "in fact" to specify that there is no culpable mental state required as to whether the intended harm meets the definition of an offense against persons or offense against property.[14] A person is strictly liable as to the intended conduct being of the variety described in paragraph subparagraphs (a)(2)(A) and (a)(2)(B).[15]

Subsection (b) specifies the elements of second degree possession of a dangerous with intent to commit crime.

Subparagraphs (b)(1)(A) and (b)(1)(B) specify that a person must at least knowingly[16] possess an imitation firearm or a dangerous weapon. The terms "imitation firearm" and "dangerous weapon" are defined in the RCC. An imitation firearm is "any instrument that resembles an actual firearm, closely enough, that a person observing it might reasonably believe it to be real."[17] A dangerous weapon includes restricted explosives,[18] other enumerated weapons, and "any object, other than a body part, that in the manner of its actual, attempted, or threatened use is likely to cause death or serious bodily injury to a person."[19] It does not include attached fixtures.[20]

Paragraph (b)(2) specifies that the person must possess the imitation firearm or dangerous weapon with intent to commit a crime. "Intent" is a defined term[21] which, applied here, means the accused must be practically certain that they are engaging in the conduct that constitutes an offense against persons or burglary.[22] The intended conduct must be criminal.[23] The burden of proof rests with the government and does not shift to the defense to prove innocent possession.[24] There is no requirement of evidence of an attempt to do harm.[25]

---

[11] The word "criminal" modifies the words that follow. The governing criminal statute must include as an element, the infliction of a bodily injury, taking of property, or damage to property. Courts should take a categorical, not a conduct-specific approach.
[12] Subtitle II of Title 22E.
[13] Subtitle III of Title 22E.
[14] RCC § 22E-207.
[15] Although a person is strictly liable, justification defenses may apply, under Chapter 4 in Subtitle I. See Blades v. United States, 200 A.3d 230 (D.C. 2019).
[16] "Knowingly" is defined in RCC § 22E-206.
[17] RCC § 22E-701.
[18] Second degree possession of a dangerous weapon with intent to commit crime is a lesser-included offense of first degree possession of a dangerous weapon with intent to commit crime. The term "dangerous weapon" broadly includes objects designed to explode or produce uncontained combustion and other "restricted explosives." RCC § 22E-701.
[19] RCC § 22E-701.
[20] Edwards v. United States, 583 A.2d 661, 667 (D.C. 1990).
[21] RCC § 22E-206.
[22] The person must intend to use the object unlawfully against another person. See D.C. Code § 22-4514(b); In re M.L., 24 A.3d 63 (D.C. 2011); Mihas v. United States, 618 A.2d 197 (D.C. 1992); Reid v. United States, 581 A.2d 359 (D.C. 1990).
[23] General defenses such as defense of self or another person under RCC § 22E-403 are applicable to the offense.
[24] United States v. Brooks, 330 A.2d 245, 246 (D.C. 1974).
[25] Jones v. United States, 401 A.2d 473 (D.C. 1979).

Subparagraphs (b)(2)(A) and (b)(2)(B) specify that the person must intend to commit either an offense against persons[26] or a burglary.[27] Subparagraphs (b)(2)(A) and (b)(2)(B) uses the term "in fact" to specify that there is no culpable mental state required as to whether the intended harm meets the definition of an offense against persons or burglary.[28] A person is strictly liable as to the intended conduct being of the variety described in paragraph subparagraphs (b)(2)(A) and (b)(2)(B).[29]

Subsection (c) provides limitations to attempt liability. Under this subsection, attempt liability as defined under RCC § 22E-301 does not apply unless the actor actually possesses an item with intent to use it to commit an offense under Subtitle II or III of this title. If an actor merely comes dangerously close to possessing an item designed to explode or produce uncontained combustion, a dangerous weapon, or imitation firearm, attempt liability is barred. However, if an actor actually possesses an item falsely believing it is an explosive, dangerous weapon, or imitation firearm, with intent to use it to commit an offense, attempt liability may apply.

Subsection (d) provides the penalty for each gradation of the revised offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.]

Subsection (e) cross-references applicable definitions in the RCC.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised possession of a dangerous weapon with intent to commit crime statute clearly changes current District law in two main ways.

First, he revised statute specifies the intended harm required for the offense must be a particular type of District crime. D.C. Code § 22-4514(b) disallows possession of a weapon "with intent to use [it] unlawfully against another."[30] D.C. Code § 22-4515a(b) disallows possession of a weapon "with the intent that the same may be used unlawfully against any person or property." District case law has explained that the phrase "unlawfully against another" requires the accused carry the object with the purpose of using it "as a weapon."[31] However, case law has not specifically ruled whether "as a weapon" is limited to criminal infliction of bodily injury or also property damage or threatening conduct. In contrast, the revised offense cross-references all RCC offenses against persons and either offenses against property (for first degree) or burglary (for second degree). This change clarifies the revised offense and may eliminate an unnecessary gap in liability.

Second, the revised statute bars attempt liability in cases in which the actor does not actually possess an item with intent to use it to commit an offense. The current D.C.

---

[26] Subtitle II of Title 22E.
[27] RCC § 22E-2701.
[28] RCC § 22E-207.
[29] Although a person is strictly liable, justification defenses may apply, under Chapter 4 in Subtitle I. See Blades v. United States, 200 A.3d 230 (D.C. 2019).
[30] Similarly, D.C. Code § 22-4515a(b) disallows possession of an explosive "with the intent that the same may be used unlawfully against any person or property."
[31] See Peay v. United States, 597 A.2d 1318, 1321 (D.C. 1991) (explaining the test to be applied in determining whether an item is a "deadly or dangerous weapon" is whether, under the circumstances, the purpose of carrying the item was its use as a weapon) (citing Nelson v. United States, 280 A.2d 531, 533 (D.C.1971) (per curiam); Clarke v. United States, 256 A.2d 782, 786 (D.C.1969)).

Code does not specifically limit attempt liability for possession of a prohibited weapon under § 22-4514(b). The D.C Court of Appeals (DCCA) has never held whether a person may be convicted of attempted possession of a prohibited weapon if the defendant never actually possesses a weapon or item with intent to use it unlawfully.[32] By contrast, the revised statute specifies that attempt liability does not apply if the actor never actually possesses a weapon or item with intent to use it to commit a criminal offense. This change improves the clarity and proportionality of the revised criminal code.

Beyond these two changes to current District law, two other aspects of the revised statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised statute requires the accused know that they possess the weapon. The current statutes[33] do not specify a culpable mental state, however, District case law requires knowledge for the actual or constructive possession of any item.[34] The revised statute requires that the person know that they possess the item and that the person know that the item is a weapon. Applying a knowledge or intent requirement to statutory elements that distinguish innocent from criminal behavior is a well-established practice in American jurisprudence.[35] This change improves the revised offenses by describing all elements, including mental states, that must be proven in a clear, consistent manner.

Second, the revised statute does not include an explicit reference to manufacturing, transferring, using, or transporting an explosive. D.C. Code § 22-4515a(b) makes it unlawful to manufacture, transfer, use, possess, or transport any device, instrument, or object designed to explode or produce uncontained combustion. This conduct is also prohibited by D.C. Code §§ 7-2502.01[36] and 7-2505.01.[37] In contrast, the RCC's definition of possess[38] includes actual possession and constructive possession. A person who knowingly manufactures, transfers, uses, or transports an explosive appears to either violate the revised statute by having the ability and desire to exercise control over the [32] The DCCA has stated that "In a prosecution for attempted possession of a prohibited weapon, the government must prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant possessed the weapon with the specific intent to use it unlawfully." Stroman v. United States, 878 A.2d 1241, 1245 (D.C. 2005). However, in this case the defendant actually possessed the alleged weapon.

---

[33] D.C. Code §§ 22-4514(b); 22-4515a(b).

[34] See, e.g., Campos v. United States, 617 A.2d 185, 187-88 (D.C. 1992); United States v. Joseph, 892 F.2d 118, 125 (D.C. Cir. 1989); Thompson v. United States, 567 A.2d 907, 908 (D.C. 1989); Easley v. United States, 482 A.2d 779, 781 (D.C. 1984).

[35] See, Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2009 (2015) ("[O]ur cases have explained that a defendant generally must 'know the facts that make his conduct fit the definition of the offense,' even if he does not know that those facts give rise to a crime." (Internal citation omitted.)).

[36] "[N]o person or organization…shall…transfer, offer for sale, sell, give, or deliver any destructive device." See also D.C. Code § 7-2501.01 (defining the term "destructive device" to include "[a]n explosive, incendiary, or poison gas bomb, grenade, rocket, missile, mine, or similar device," such as a Molotov cocktail).

[37] "No person or organization shall sell, transfer or otherwise dispose of any…destructive device…except as provided in § 7-2502.10(c), § 7-2505.02, or § 7-2507.05." See also D.C. Code § 7-2501.01 (defining the term "destructive device" to include "[a]n explosive, incendiary, or poison gas bomb, grenade, rocket, missile, mine, or similar device," such as a Molotov cocktail).

[38] RCC § 22E-701.

object, or, when falsely advertising an object for sale, is engaged in conduct criminalized elsewhere.[39] This change improves the consistency of the revised statutes and reduces unnecessary overlap between offenses.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

First, the revised code defines "possession" in its general part.[40] The D.C. Code does not codify a definition of possession, although it is an element of several property, drug, and weapon offenses. Instead, parties rely on District case law concerning what evidence is or is not sufficient to establish that the accused actually or constructively or jointly possessed an unlawful item.[41] The RCC definition of "possession,"[42] with the requirement in the offense that the possession be "knowing,"[43] matches the meaning of possession in current DCCA case law.[44] The RCC definition of possession improves the consistency of possessory elements throughout revised statutes.

Second, the revised statute applies the RCC's standardized definition of "with intent." D.C. Code § 22-4514(b) disallows possession of a weapon "with intent to use [it] unlawfully against another."[45] D.C. Code § 22-4515a(b) disallows possession of a weapon "with the intent that the same may be used unlawfully against any person or property." The current statutes do not define "with intent." In contrast, the RCC defines all culpable mental states in its general part.[46] This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised statutes.

Third, the revised offense applies a standardized definition of "dangerous weapon" used throughout the RCC. D.C. Code § 22-4514(b) prohibits possession of "an imitation pistol, or a dagger, dirk, razor, stiletto, or knife with a blade longer than 3 inches, or other

---

[39] See D.C. Code § 22-1511 (Fraudulent advertising).
[40] RCC § 22E-202.
[41] See Criminal Jury Instructions for the District of Columbia Instruction 3.104 (2018).
[42] RCC § 22E-701.
[43] RCC § 22E-206.
[44] See United States v. Hubbard, 429 A.2d 1334, 1338 (D.C. 1981) ("Actual possession has been defined as the ability of a person to knowingly exercise direct physical custody or control over the property in question. See United States v. Spears, 145 U.S.App.D.C. 284, 293, 449 F.2d 946, 955 (1971); Spencer v. United States, 73 U.S.App.D.C. 98, 99, 116 F.2d 801, 802 (1940)."); see also Rivas v. U.S., 783 A.2d 125, 128 (D.C. 2001) (en banc) ("[I]n…constructive possession cases, there must be something more in the totality of the circumstances–a word or deed, a relationship or other probative factor–that, considered in conjunction with the evidence of proximity and knowledge, proves beyond a reasonable doubt that the passenger intended to exercise dominion or control over the drugs, and was not a mere bystander." (Emphasis in original.)); Guishard v. United States, 669 A.2d 1306, 1312 (D.C. 1995) ("To obtain a conviction based on a theory of constructive possession, the government must prove that the defendant knew of the location of the contraband, that he had the ability to exercise dominion and control over it, and that he 'intended to guide [its] destiny.' Speight v. United States, 599 A.2d 794, 796 (D.C.1991); In re T.M., 577 A.2d 1149, 1151–1152 n. 5 (D.C.1990); Bernard v. United States, 575 A.2d 1191, 1195–1196 (D.C.1990).").
[45] Similarly, D.C. Code § 22-4515a(b) disallows possession of an explosive "with the intent that the same may be used unlawfully against any person or property."
[46] RCC § 22E-206.

dangerous weapon." The term "dangerous weapon" is not defined in Chapter 45.[47] However, District case law has held that an object is a dangerous weapon if it is detached[48] and "known to be 'likely to produce death or great bodily injury' in the manner it is used, intended to be used, or threatened to be used."[49] The RCC codifies a common definition to be applied to all revised offenses. This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised offenses.

[47] See D.C. Code § 22-4501 (Definitions).
[48] Edwards v. United States, 583 A.2d 661, 667 (D.C. 1990).
[49] Alfaro v. United States, 859 A.2d 149, 160 (D.C. 2004) (citing Harper v. United States, 811 A.2d 808, 810 (D.C.2002)); Stroman v. United States, 878 A.2d 1241, 1245 (D.C. 2005);

RCC § 22E-4104. Possession of a Dangerous Weapon During a Crime.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the possession of a dangerous weapon during a crime offense and penalty gradations for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The offense proscribes having a firearm or other dangerous weapon in furtherance of an offense against persons. In conjunction with the revised Trafficking of a Controlled Substance statute,[1] the revised offense replaces D.C. Code § 22-4502 (Additional penalty for committing crime when armed). The revised offense also replaces D.C. Code §§ 22-4504(b) (Possession of a firearm during a crime of violence or dangerous crime).

Subsection (a) specifies the elements of first degree possession of a dangerous weapon during a crime. Paragraph (a)(1) specifies that a person must knowingly possess a firearm.[2] "Knowingly" is a defined term[3] and applied here means that the person must be practically certain that they possess the firearm. "Possesses" is a defined term and includes both actual and constructive possession.[4] Constructive possession requires intent to exercise dominion and control over an object and to guide its destiny.[5] The person must know they possess a firearm[6] or that they possess component parts that could be arranged to make a whole firearm.[7] Evidence of knowledge of an item's location is required, but not necessarily sufficient, to demonstrate constructive possession.[8] "Firearm" is a defined term,[9] which includes inoperable weapons that may be redesigned, remade or readily converted or restored to operability[10] but excludes antiques.[11]

Paragraph (a)(2) requires that the person possess the firearm in furtherance of and while committing a crime. The phrase "in furtherance of" has the same meaning as in 18

---

[1] RCC § 48-904.01b.

[2] Knowledge of a gun's presence may be inferred from surrounding circumstances; direct evidence is not required. Logan v. United States, 489 A.2d 485 (D.C. 1985); see also Matter of T.M., 577 A.2d 1149 (D.C. 1990). However, the government must show a connection between the seized weapon and the criminal venture in order to enable the jury reasonably to infer the venturer's knowledge of the weapon. Easley v. United States, 482 A.2d 779 (D.C. 1984).

[3] "Knowingly" is defined in RCC § 22E-206.

[4] RCC § 22E-701.

[5] See, e.g., In re M.I.W., 667 A.2d 573 (D.C. 1995); Guishard v. United States, 669 A.2d 1306, 1312 (D.C. 1995).

[6] See Campos v. United States, 617 A.2d 185, 187-88 (D.C. 1992) (explaining, that a person who has no knowledge that he or she has a pistol, despite the fact that it is located on his or her person, does not exercise direct physical control over the pistol).

[7] Myers v. United States, 56 A.3d 1148 (D.C. 2012).

[8] See, e.g., Walker v. United States, 982 A.2d 723 (D.C. 2009) (holding while factfinder could infer that defendant knew of presence of gun, gun was inferentially in companion's sole possession throughout time police observed defendant and companion); Matter of L.A.V., 578 A.2d 708 (D.C. 1990). However, a person may be said to know the location of an object if they are generally aware of its whereabouts, even without knowing its exact position. For example, a person who is practically certain that their keys are somewhere in a set of drawers constructively possesses their keys.

[9] RCC § 22E-701.

[10] Townsend v. United States, 559 A.2d 1319 (D.C. 1989).

[11] Unless there is evidence that the firearm is antique, the government is not required to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the firearms are not antique as an element of the offense in its case-in-chief. Toler v. United States, 198 A.3d 767 (D.C. 2018).

U.S.C. § 924(c)(1).[12] This requires specific evidence of a nexus between the weapon and the defendant's intent to advance or facilitate the underlying criminal activity.[13] The mere presence of a firearm near a criminal act, criminal proceeds, or contraband is insufficient.[14] The phrase "while committing" requires that the person must engage in the conduct constituting the underlying offense at the same time as they possess the firearm. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the person must know—that is, be practically certain—that he or she is acting in furtherance of the predicate crime.

Subparagraphs (a)(2)(A) and (a)(2)(B) specify that the person must commit[15] an offense against persons.[16] Some offenses against persons also provide for a heightened penalty gradation if a firearm or other dangerous weapon is displayed or used.[17] Possession of a firearm in furtherance of a drug crime is punished under RCC § 48-904.01b.

Subsection (b) punishes possession of an imitation firearm or a dangerous weapon in furtherance of a crime as second degree possession of a dangerous weapon during a crime under Subtitle II of the RCC. The terms "imitation firearm" and "dangerous weapon" are defined in RCC § 22E-701. An imitation firearm is "any instrument that resembles an actual firearm, closely enough, that a person observing it might reasonably believe it to be real."[18] A dangerous weapon includes firearms, other enumerated weapons, and "any object, other than a body part, that in the manner of its actual, attempted, or [12] Another aspect of this statute was recently held to be unconstitutionally vague. United States v. Davis, 18-431, 2019 WL 2570623 (U.S. June 24, 2019).

---

[13] See H.R. Rep. No. 105-344, 1997 WL 668339 (reporting that the "fact that drug dealers in general often carry guns for protection is insufficient to show possession in furtherance of drug activity"; rather, the government must clearly show through "specific facts that tie the defendant to the firearm," that a weapon was possessed to advance or promote the commission of the underlying offense, and the "mere presence of a firearm in an area where a criminal act occurs" is not a sufficient basis for imposing a sentence under this provision).

[14] Most circuits have identified specific factors that allow a court to distinguish guilty possession from innocent "possession at the scene," including: the accessibility of the firearm, the type of weapon, whether the possession is illegal, whether the gun is loaded, and the time and circumstances under which the gun is found. United States v. Renteria, 720 F.3d 1245, 1255 (10th Cir. 2013); see also United States v. Brown, 715 F.3d 985, 993-94 (6th Cir. 2013); United States v. Gill, 685 F.3d 606, 611 (6th Cir. 2012); United States v. Johnson, 677 F.3d 138, 143 (3d Cir. 2012); United States v. Eller, 670 F.3d 762, 766 (7th Cir. 2012); United States v. London, 568 F.3d 553, 559 (5th Cir. 2009); United States v. Lopez-Garcia, 565 F.3d 1306, 1322 (11th Cir. 2009); United States v. Perry, 560 F.3d 246, 254 (4th Cir. 2009); see also United States v. Chavez, 549 F.3d 119, 130 (2d Cir. 2008); but see United States v. Hector, 474 F.3d 1150, 1157 (9th Cir. 2007)(internal citations omitted)("Although the Fifth Circuit has developed a non-exclusive list of factors…we have concluded that this approach is not particularly helpful in close cases…In our most recent case addressing the 'in furtherance question,' we reiterated the importance of the factual inquiry. We declined once again to adopt a checklist approach to deciding this issue and held that it is the totality of the circumstances, coupled with a healthy dose of a jury's common sense when evaluating the facts in evidence, which will determine whether the evidence suffices to support a conviction").

[15] Here, the word "commit" includes an attempt to commit and a conspiracy to commit. See, e.g., Morris v. United States, 622 A.2d 1116 (D.C. 1993) (sustaining a conviction for possession of a firearm during an attempted armed robbery).

[16] Subtitle II of Title 22E.

[17] RCC §§ 22E-1201 (robbery); 22E-1202 (assault); 22E-1204 (criminal threats); 22E-1301 (sexual assault); 22E-1401 (kidnapping).

[18] RCC § 22E-701.

threatened use is likely to cause death or serious bodily injury to a person."[19] It does not include attached fixtures.[20] This gradation of the offense does not require proof of an actual firearm but otherwise has elements identical to first degree possession of a dangerous weapon during a crime.

Subsection (c) provides the penalty for each gradation of the revised offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.]

Subsection (d) cross-references applicable definitions in the RCC.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised possession of a dangerous weapon during a crime statute clearly changes current District law in two main ways.

First, the revised offense generally expands the number of crimes that are a predicate for possession of a dangerous weapon during a crime liability. Current D.C. Code §§ 22-4502 and 22-4504 prohibit possession of a weapon only during a "crime of violence" which is defined in D.C. Code § 22-4501 to include felony offenses enumerated in D.C. Code § 23-1331(4).[21] In contrast, the revised offense punishes possession of a weapon during any offense against persons—including misdemeanor assault or misdemeanor sex offenses. It is not clear that the potential risk in possessing (but not displaying or using) a dangerous weapon when engaged in an offense against persons varies significantly between misdemeanor and felony level conduct. In a few instances, changes to offenses against persons in the RCC may narrow liability for possession of a dangerous weapon during a crime.[22] This change improves the proportionality of the revised statute and eliminates an unnecessary gap in liability.

Second, the revised offense does not require proof that the weapon is readily available. Current D.C. Code § 22-4502 requires evidence that a firearm was "in close proximity or easily accessible" during the commission of the underlying offense.[23]

---

[19] RCC § 22E-701.

[20] Edwards v. United States, 583 A.2d 661, 667 (D.C. 1990).

[21]

> The term "crime of violence" means aggravated assault; act of terrorism; arson; assault on a police officer (felony); assault with a dangerous weapon; assault with intent to kill, commit first degree sexual abuse, commit second degree sexual abuse, or commit child sexual abuse; assault with significant bodily injury; assault with intent to commit any other offense; burglary; carjacking; armed carjacking; child sexual abuse; cruelty to children in the first degree; extortion or blackmail accompanied by threats of violence; gang recruitment, participation, or retention by the use or threatened use of force, coercion, or intimidation; kidnapping; malicious disfigurement; manslaughter; manufacture or possession of a weapon of mass destruction; mayhem; murder; robbery; sexual abuse in the first, second, or third degrees; use, dissemination, or detonation of a weapon of mass destruction; or an attempt, solicitation, or conspiracy to commit any of the foregoing offenses.

[22] For example, the RCC robbery statute, RCC § 22E-1201, is narrower than the current D.C. Code robbery statute, D.C. Code § 22-2801, insofar as some of the current statute's conduct (sudden and stealthy snatching) is criminalized as third degree theft, RCC § 22E-2101(c), which is not within the scope of the revised offense of possession of a dangerous weapon during a crime.

[23] Clyburn v. United States, 48 A.3d 147, 153-54 (D.C. 2012).

However, D.C. Code § 22-4504(b) does not include a similar proximity requirement. In contrast, liability under the revised statute turns only on the relationship between the weapon and the unlawful activity instead of ease of access.[24] That is, the revised offense requires that the weapon—wherever it is located—be possessed "in furtherance of" the underlying crime. This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised offenses.

Beyond these two changes to current District law, two other aspects of the revised offense may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised statute requires the accused know that they possess the weapon. The current statutes[25] do not specify a culpable mental state, however, District case law requires knowledge for the actual or constructive possession of any item.[26] The revised statute requires that the person know that they possess the item and that the person know that the item is a weapon or imitation firearm. Applying a knowledge or intent requirement to statutory elements that distinguish innocent from criminal behavior is a well-established practice in American jurisprudence.[27] This change improves the revised offenses by describing all elements, including mental states, that must be proven in a clear, consistent manner.

Second, the revised offense does not include possession of a firearm in furtherance of a drug crime. Current D.C. Code §§ 22-4502(a) and 22-4504(b) punish possession of a firearm during a dangerous crime. The term "dangerous crime" is defined in D.C. Code § 22-4501 to mean "distribution of or possession with intent to distribute a controlled substance." In contrast, the RCC reorganizes the controlled substances statutes to include an enhancement for drug trafficking while armed.[28] The enhancement requires that the firearm is "readily available," which is consistent with D.C. Code § 22-4502(a)[29] but

---

[24] Compare for example, Person A who carries a pocketknife for self-defense but does not use it during a simple assault and Person B who threatens to retrieve a firearm from the trunk of his car while committing a robbery. See Strong v. United States, 581 A.2d 383, 387 (D.C. 1990) (explaining "The prevention of coercion is at the heart of enhancement provisions which include imitation weapons within their scope" and holding "Convictions under the 'while armed' statute will stand only if a defendant (1) has committed some violent crime, and (2) has used the threat of injury by a dangerous weapon to force his victims to comply with his illegal requests") (citing Paris v. United States, 515 A.2d 199 (D.C.1986)).

[25] D.C. Code §§ 22-4502; 22-4504(b).

[26] See, e.g., Campos v. United States, 617 A.2d 185, 187-88 (D.C. 1992); United States v. Joseph, 892 F.2d 118, 125 (D.C. Cir. 1989); Thompson v. United States, 567 A.2d 907, 908 (D.C. 1989); Easley v. United States, 482 A.2d 779, 781 (D.C. 1984).

[27] See, Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2009 (2015) ("[O]ur cases have explained that a defendant generally must 'know the facts that make his conduct fit the definition of the offense,' even if he does not know that those facts give rise to a crime." (Internal citation omitted.)).

[28] RCC § 48-904.01b(g)(7)(B).

[29] "Armed with" means "actual physical possession of the pistol or other firearm." Cox v. United States, 999 A.2d 63, 69 (D.C. 2010). "Readily available" means "in close proximity or easily accessible during the commission of the underlying PWID offense, as evidenced by lay or expert testimony (and reasonable inferences) describing the distance between the appellant and the firearm, and the ease with which the appellant can reach the firearm during the commission of the offense." Clyburn v. United States, 48 A.3d 147, 153-54 (D.C. 2012).

possibly narrower than § 22-4504(b).[30] This change logically reorders and improves the consistency of the revised offenses.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

First, the revised code defines "possession" in its general part.[31] The D.C. Code does not codify a definition of possession, although it is an element of several property, drug, and weapon offenses. Instead, parties rely on District case law concerning what evidence is or is not sufficient to establish that the accused actually or constructively or jointly possessed an unlawful item.[32] The RCC definition of "possession,"[33] with the requirement in the offense that the possession be "knowing,"[34] matches the meaning of possession in current DCCA case law.[35] The RCC definition of possession improves the consistency of possessory elements throughout revised statutes.

Second, the revised offense applies a standardized definition of "dangerous weapon" used throughout the RCC. D.C. Code § 22-4502 prohibits possession of "any pistol or other firearm (or imitation thereof) or other dangerous or deadly weapon (including a sawed-off shotgun, shotgun, machine gun, rifle, stun gun, dirk, bowie knife, butcher knife, switchblade knife, razor, blackjack, billy, or metallic or other false knuckles)." The term "dangerous weapon" is not defined in Chapter 45.[36] However, District case law has held that an object is a dangerous weapon if it is detached[37] and "known to be 'likely to produce death or great bodily injury' in the manner it is used, intended to be used, or threatened to be used."[38] The RCC codifies a common definition to be applied to all revised offenses. This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised offenses.

---

[30] D.C. Code § 22-4504(b) makes it unlawful to possess any firearm or imitation firearm "while committing a crime."
[31] RCC § 22E-202.
[32] See Criminal Jury Instructions for the District of Columbia Instruction 3.104 (2018).
[33] RCC § 22E-701.
[34] RCC § 22E-206.
[35] See United States v. Hubbard, 429 A.2d 1334, 1338 (D.C. 1981) ("Actual possession has been defined as the ability of a person to knowingly exercise direct physical custody or control over the property in question. See United States v. Spears, 145 U.S.App.D.C. 284, 293, 449 F.2d 946, 955 (1971); Spencer v. United States, 73 U.S.App.D.C. 98, 99, 116 F.2d 801, 802 (1940)."); see also Rivas v. U.S., 783 A.2d 125, 128 (D.C. 2001) (en banc) ("[I]n…constructive possession cases, there must be something more in the totality of the circumstances–a word or deed, a relationship or other probative factor–that, considered in conjunction with the evidence of proximity and knowledge, proves beyond a reasonable doubt that the passenger intended to exercise dominion or control over the drugs, and was not a mere bystander." (Emphasis in original.)); Guishard v. United States, 669 A.2d 1306, 1312 (D.C. 1995) ("To obtain a conviction based on a theory of constructive possession, the government must prove that the defendant knew of the location of the contraband, that he had the ability to exercise dominion and control over it, and that he 'intended to guide [its] destiny.' Speight v. United States, 599 A.2d 794, 796 (D.C.1991); In re T.M., 577 A.2d 1149, 1151–1152 n. 5 (D.C.1990); Bernard v. United States, 575 A.2d 1191, 1195–1196 (D.C.1990).").
[36] See D.C. Code § 22-4501 (Definitions).
[37] Edwards v. United States, 583 A.2d 661, 667 (D.C. 1990).
[38] Alfaro v. United States, 859 A.2d 149, 160 (D.C. 2004) (citing Harper v. United States, 811 A.2d 808, 810 (D.C.2002)); Stroman v. United States, 878 A.2d 1241, 1245 (D.C. 2005);

RCC § 22E-4105. Possession of a Firearm by an Unauthorized Person.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the possession of a firearm by an unauthorized person offense and penalty gradations for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The offense proscribes knowing possession of a firearm by a person who has been previously been involved in criminal activity or is subject to a relevant court order. The revised offense replaces D.C. Code § 22-4503 (Unlawful Possession of a Firearm) and a minimum statutory penalty for the offense.[1]

Subsection (a) generally punishes possession of a firearm by a person who previously has been convicted of a crime of violence as first degree possession of a firearm by an unauthorized person.

Paragraph (a)(1) specifies that a person must knowingly possess a firearm.[2] "Knowingly" is a defined term[3] and applied here means that the person must be practically certain that they possess the firearm. "Possesses" is a defined term and includes both actual and constructive possession.[4] Constructive possession requires intent to exercise dominion and control over an object and to guide its destiny.[5] The person must know they possess a firearm[6] or that they possess component parts that could be arranged to make a whole firearm.[7] Evidence of knowledge of an item's location is required, but not necessarily sufficient, to demonstrate constructive possession.[8] RCC § 22E-203 requires that a person commit the offense voluntarily.[9] "Firearm" is a defined term,[10] which includes inoperable

[1] D.C. Code § 24-403.01(f)(2) ("The sentence imposed under this section shall not be less than 1 year for a person who was over 18 years of age at the time of the offense and was convicted of . . . (2) Illegal possession of a pistol in violation of § 22-4503, occurring after the person has been convicted of violating that section.").

[2] Knowledge of a gun's presence may be inferred from surrounding circumstances; direct evidence is not required. Logan v. United States, 489 A.2d 485 (D.C. 1985); see also Matter of T.M., 577 A.2d 1149 (D.C. 1990). However, the government must show a connection between the seized weapon and the criminal venture in order to enable the jury reasonably to infer the venturer's knowledge of the weapon. Easley v. United States, 482 A.2d 779 (D.C. 1984).

[3] "Knowingly" is defined in RCC § 22E-206.

[4] RCC § 22E-701.

[5] See, e.g., In re M.I.W., 667 A.2d 573 (D.C. 1995); Guishard v. United States, 669 A.2d 1306, 1312 (D.C. 1995).

[6] See Campos v. United States, 617 A.2d 185, 187-88 (D.C. 1992) (explaining, that a person who has no knowledge that he or she has a pistol, despite the fact that it is located on his or her person, does not exercise direct physical control over the pistol).

[7] Myers v. United States, 56 A.3d 1148 (D.C. 2012).

[8] See, e.g., Walker v. United States, 982 A.2d 723 (D.C. 2009) (holding while factfinder could infer that defendant knew of presence of gun, gun was inferentially in companion's sole possession throughout time police observed defendant and companion); Matter of L.A.V., 578 A.2d 708 (D.C. 1990). However, a person may be said to know the location of an object if they are generally aware of its whereabouts, even without knowing its exact position. For example, a person who is practically certain that their keys are somewhere in a set of drawers constructively possesses their keys.

[9] A person who lawfully owns a firearm does not necessarily commit possession of a firearm by an unauthorized person at the moment the person is convicted of a disqualifying offense. Consider, for example, a person who is awaiting a verdict in a case alleging a disqualifying offense. The person does not commit an offense the instant the verdict is delivered.

[10] RCC § 22E-701.

weapons that may be redesigned, remade or readily converted or restored to operability[11] but excludes antiques.[12]

Paragraph (a)(2) requires that the person has a prior conviction. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the person must know—that is, be practically certain—that they have a prior conviction. The term "prior conviction" is defined in RCC § 22E-701 to mean a finding of guilt for a criminal offense committed by an adult, with limited exceptions. Paragraph (a)(2) uses the term "in fact" to specify that there is no culpable mental state required as to whether the prior conviction was for a crime of violence or comparable offense.[13] A person is strictly liable as to the prior conviction being of the variety described in paragraph (a)(2).[14] Paragraph (a)(2) requires that the prior offense is a crime of violence other than conspiracy. The term "crime of violence" is defined in the RCC's general part as consisting of specified crimes and otherwise would include convictions for conspiracy to commit those specified crimes.[15] Whether a prior conviction is for conspiracy is based upon how the crime is charged, not based on the theory of liability that is described in the charging documents or advanced at trial.[16] The term "comparable offense" is defined in RCC § 22E-701 and means "a crime committed against the District of Columbia, a state, a federally-recognized Indian tribe, or the United States and its territories, with elements that would necessarily prove the elements of a corresponding District crime." The determination of whether a conviction in another jurisdiction is for a "comparable offense" is a matter of law.

Subsection (b) establishes five classes of persons who are subject to second degree liability for possession of a firearm by an unauthorized person.

Subparagraph (b)(2)(A) criminalizes gun ownership by any person who is presently a fugitive from justice. The term "fugitive from justice" is defined in paragraph (e)(2). Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the culpable mental state of "knowingly" in paragraph (b)(1) applies to subparagraph (b)(2)(A) and a person must know—that is, be practically certain—that they are avoiding apprehension. RCC § 22E-203 requires that a person commit the offense voluntarily.[17]

The next three classes are persons with recent prior convictions for crimes. Just as in the first degree offense, the defendant must be practically certain that they possess a firearm and practically certain that they have a prior conviction. "Prior conviction," "possess," and "firearm" are defined in RCC § 22E-701. Subparagraph (b)(2)(B) uses the term "in fact" to specify that there is no culpable mental state required as to whether the

[11] Townsend v. United States, 559 A.2d 1319 (D.C. 1989).
[12] Unless there is evidence that the firearm is antique, the government is not required to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the firearms are not antique as an element of the offense in its case-in-chief. Toler v. United States, 198 A.3d 767 (D.C. 2018).
[13] RCC § 22E-207.
[14] Although a person is strictly liable, justification defenses may apply, under Chapter 4 in Subtitle I. See Blades v. United States, 200 A.3d 230 (D.C. 2019).
[15] RCC § 22E-701.
[16] See Bland v. United States, 153 A.3d 78, 81 (D.C. 2016).
[17] A person who lawfully owns a firearm does not necessarily commit possession of a firearm by an unauthorized person at the moment the person becomes a fugitive from justice.

prior conviction was for one of the predicate offenses.[18] A person is strictly liable as to the prior conviction being of the variety described in sub-subparagraphs (b)(2)(B)(i) – (iii).[19]

Sub-subparagraph (b)(2)(B)(i) generally criminalizes gun ownership by any person who has been convicted of a District felony, i.e. a crime punishable by more than a year of incarceration.[20] The term "comparable offense" is defined to require elements that would necessarily prove the elements of a corresponding RCC offense.[21] The term "comparable offense" does not mean any offense in another jurisdiction that is punishable by more than a year of incarceration. Sub-subparagraph (b)(2)(A)(i) specifies that the prior conviction must be for an offense that occurred within 10 years of the current firearm possession.

Sub-subparagraph (b)(2)(B)(ii) criminalizes gun ownership by any person who has been convicted of a weapon offense under Chapter 41. The term "comparable offense" is defined to require elements that would necessarily prove the elements of a corresponding RCC offense.[22] Sub-subparagraph (b)(2)(B)(ii) specifies that the prior conviction must be for an offense that occurred within 5 years of the current firearm possession.

Sub-subparagraph (b)(2)(B)(iii) criminalizes gun ownership by any person who has been convicted of violence against a family member, i.e. an intrafamily felony or misdemeanor[23] offense involving confinement, a sexual act, a sexual contact, bodily injury, or threats. This includes convictions for inchoate versions of such an offense (e.g., attempt, solicitation). The term "intrafamily offense" is defined in D.C. Code § 16-1001 to include interpersonal, intimate partner, or intrafamily violence. "Interpersonal violence," "intimate partner violence," and "intrafamily violence" are also defined in § 16-1001 and broadly include relationships between blood relatives,[24] current and former roommates,[25] and people who have previously shared the same romantic partner.[26] The term "comparable offense" is defined to require elements that would necessarily prove the elements of a corresponding RCC offense.[27] With respect to out-of-state intrafamily offenses, it is not required that the comparable statute include an identical definition of "intrafamily offense." However, the familial relationship must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt in the prosecution of the second degree possession of a firearm by an unauthorized person

[18] RCC § 22E-207.
[19] Although a person is strictly liable, justification defenses may apply, under Chapter 4 in Subtitle I. See Blades v. United States, 200 A.3d 230 (D.C. 2019).
[20] See RCC § 22E-601. Current District law has both misdemeanors that are punishable by more than one year and felonies that are punishable by less than one year. D.C. Code § 5-115.03 (two-year misdemeanor); D.C. Code § 16-1024(b)(1) (six-month felony). Other jurisdictions also have misdemeanors that are punishable by more than one year. See, e.g., Md. Code, Criminal Law § 3-211 (three-year misdemeanor).
[21] RCC § 22E-701.
[22] RCC § 22E-701.
[23] See, e.g., United States v. Skoien, 614 F.3d 638, 641 (7th Cir. 2010).
[24] D.C. Code § 16-1001(9).
[25] D.C. Code § 16-1001(6)(A).
[26] D.C. Code § 16-1001(6)(B).
[27] RCC § 22E-701.

offense.[28] Sub-subparagraph (b)(2)(B)(iii) specifies that the prior conviction must be for an offense that occurred within 5 years of the current firearm possession.

Subparagraph (b)(2)(C) criminalizes gun ownership by any person who is subject to a final civil protection order issued in D.C. Code § 16-1005 or a final anti-stalking order issued under D.C. Code § 16-1064.[29] Subparagraph (b)(2)(C) uses the term "in fact" to specify that there is no culpable mental state required as to whether the person is subject to a final civil protection or anti-stalking order.[30]

Subsection (c) provides that the actor does not commit possession of a firearm by an unauthorized person at the moment a conviction or civil protection order occurs. Rather, a 24-hour grace period normally applies unless a judicial officer specifies a shorter amount of time. Within the 24-hour period or, when specified by a judicial officer, a shorter period, the actor is not liable for possessing the firearm under RCC § 22E-4105. Subsection (c) specifies "in fact," a defined term in RCC § 22E-207 that indicates there is no culpable mental state requirement for a given element, which here is the fact that the actor possesses a firearm within the first 24 hours of the prior conviction or service of the protection order, or within the shorter time specified by the judicial officer.

Subsection (d) establishes an affirmative defense for a person who is voluntarily surrendering a weapon. The person must comply with the requirements of a District or federal voluntary surrender statute or rule.[31] Per RCC § 22E-201(b), the defense has the burden of proving an affirmative defense by a preponderance of the evidence.

Subsection (e) provides the penalty for each gradation of the revised offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.]

Subsection (f) cross-references applicable definitions in the RCC and provides a definition for the term "fugitive from justice."

Paragraph (f)(2) specifies three types of fugitives from justice. The term refers to people who are presently avoiding apprehension, prosecution, or other government action. It does not include people who have previously been subject to a warrant that is now closed or a subpoena that was never enforced by a court of law.

Subparagraph (f)(2)(A) specifies that a person is classified as a fugitive from justice if they have fled to avoid prosecution for a crime. This classification is not limited by jurisdiction.[32]

---

[28] See United States v. Hayes, 555 U.S. 415 (2009) (A domestic relationship, although it must be established beyond a reasonable doubt in an 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(9) firearms possession prosecution, need not be a defining element of the predicate offense).

[29] D.C. Code § 16-1064 is a statute under a recently enacted law, with a projected law date of May 24, 2021.

[30] RCC § 22E-207. Although a person is strictly liable, justification defenses may apply, under Chapter 4 in Subtitle I. See Blades v. United States, 200 A.3d 230 (D.C. 2019).

[31] See, e.g., D.C. Code §§ 7-2507.05; 7-2510.07(f)(1); see also Worthy v. United States, 420 A.2d 1216, 1218 (D.C. 1980) (citing Logan v. United States, 402 A.2d 822 (D.C. 1979); Hines v. United States, 326 A.2d 247, 248 (D.C. 1974)); Stein v. United States, 532 A.2d 641, 646 (D.C. 1987); Yoon v. United States, 594 A.2d 1056 (D.C. 1991).

[32] For example, a person who is subject to a non-extraditable arrest warrant from another state is a fugitive from justice.

Subparagraph (f)(2)(B) specifies that a person is classified as a fugitive from justice if they have fled to avoid giving testimony in a criminal proceeding. The phrase "criminal proceeding" refers to formal hearings and presentations of evidence, such as a trial or an appearance before a grand jury. It does not include witnesses who have refused to participate in a criminal investigation or negotiation. This classification is not limited by jurisdiction.[33]

Subparagraph (f)(2)(C) specifies that a person is classified as a fugitive from justice if they have committed an escape, as defined in RCC § 22E-3401.[34]

Relation to Current District Law. The revised possession of a firearm by an unauthorized person statute clearly changes current District law in six main ways.

First, a prior conviction for a nonviolent offense is a predicate for unauthorized possession liability only if it is for an offense that occurred within ten years.[35] Current D.C. Code § 22-4503 generally[36] imposes a five-year time limit for misdemeanor convictions[37] and no time limit for felonies. There is no District case law on the constitutionality of these provisions insofar as they involve non-violent offenses, however the matter has been litigated in other jurisdictions. Some courts have held that Second Amendment rights can be curtailed based on a prior conviction only if the conviction indicates a propensity for gun violence.[38] Other courts have held that a person may prove themselves "unvirtuous" of Second Amendment protections by committing any serious

---

[33] For example, a person who is subject to a non-extraditable bench warrant from another state is a fugitive from justice.

[34] This offense includes jailbreaks and escaping a law enforcement officer. It does not include resisting or eluding.

[35] In the RCC (and under the current D.C. Code, excepting drug crimes) there are few offenses other than crimes of violence that carry a 10-year or more imprisonment penalty.

[36] Current District law has both misdemeanors that are punishable by more than one year and felonies that are punishable by less than one year. D.C. Code § 5-115.03 (two-year misdemeanor); D.C. Code § 16-1024(b)(1) (six-month felony). Other jurisdictions also have misdemeanors that are punishable by more than one year. See, e.g., Md. Code, Criminal Law § 3-211 (three-year misdemeanor).

[37] D.C. Code § 22-4504(a)(6).

[38] Binderup v. Attorney Gen. United States of Am., 836 F.3d 336, 348 (3d Cir. 2016) (citing Skoien, 614 F.3d at 642; Voisine, 136 S.Ct. at 2280; Heller v. District of Columbia, 554 U.S. at 626; United States v. Everist, 368 F.3d 517, 519 (5th Cir. 2004); Don B. Kates & Clayton E. Cramer, Second Amendment Limitations & Criminological Considerations, 60 Hastings L.J. 1339, 1363–64 (2009); Vongxay, 594 F.3d at 1115); see also Halloway v. Sessions, 349 F. Supp. 3d 451, 460-61 (M.D. Pa. 2018) (holding that federal FIP statute 18 U.S.C. § 922(g) was, per the Second Amendment, unconstitutional as applied to a DUI-offender plaintiff because the government failed to prove, under intermediate scrutiny, that applying the statute to offenders like plaintiff sufficiently furthered the compelling interest of "preventing armed mayhem"); United States v. Smoot, 690 F.3d 215, 221 (4th Cir. 2012), cert. denied, 133 S. Ct. 962 (2013) (dispossession would be improper if a litigant could demonstrate that he fell within "the scope of Second Amendment protections for 'law-abiding responsible citizens to use arms in defense of hearth and home'"); United States v. Barton, 633 F.3d 168, 173 (3d Cir. 2011)("As the Government concedes, Heller's statement regarding the presumptive validity of felon gun dispossession statutes does not foreclose Barton's as-applied challenge."); United States. v. Williams, 616 F.3d 685, 692 (7th Cir. 2010) ("[T]here must exist the possibility that [a firearm] ban could be unconstitutional in the face of an as-applied challenge."); see also United States v. McCane, 573 F.3d 1037, 1049 (10th Cir. 2009) (Tymkovich, J., concurring) ("Non-violent felons, for example, certainly have the same right to self-defense in their homes as non-felons.").

crime.[39] In contrast, the revised offense generally imposes a five-year time limit from the time of the offense for misdemeanor convictions, a ten-year time limit from the time of the offense for felonies, and maintains no time limit for crimes of violence. This change improves the proportionality and, perhaps, the constitutionality of the revised offense.

Second, an intrafamily misdemeanor conviction is a predicate for unauthorized possession liability only if it required proof of confinement, sexual act, sexual contact, bodily injury, or threats and offense occurred within 5 years of the firearm possession. Current D.C. Code § 22-4503(6) disallows gun possession within 5 years of any intrafamily misdemeanor conviction. As a result, a person loses their constitutionally protected right to bear arms if they commit a minor nonviolent crime against someone known to them[40] but not if they commit a violent offense against a stranger.[41] In contrast, the revised offense aligns its unauthorized person criteria with the District's firearm registration requirements, which define "misdemeanor crime of domestic violence" to require "the use or attempted use of physical force, or the threatened use of a deadly weapon."[42] The revised offense also sets the five year time window based on the time of the offense, not the time of the conviction. This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised offense and may better ensure constitutional applications.[43]

---

[39] See U.nited States v. Skoien, 614 F.3d 638 (7th Cir. 2010), cert. denied, 131 S. Ct. 1674, 179 L. Ed. 2d 645 (2011) (en banc) (explaining why §922(g) may constitutionally be applied to an individual repeatedly convicted of misdemeanor domestic violence). United States v. Bena, 664 F.3d 1180, 1184 (8th Cir. 2011); C. Kevin Marshall, Why Can't Martha Stewart Have A Gun?, 32 Harv. J.L. & Pub. Pol'y 695, 727-28 (2009).

[40] For example, one roommate who is short on rent may commit misdemeanor check fraud against another roommate. See D.C. Code § 22-1510.

[41] For example, a person may commit simple assault in violation of D.C. Code § 22-404(a)(1) or misdemeanor sexual abuse in violation of D.C. Code § 22-3006.

[42] See 24 DCMR § 2309; see also United States v. Castleman, 572 U.S. 157, 162-63 (2014) (holding that Congress incorporated the common-law meaning of "force"—namely, offensive touching—in § 921(a)(33)(A)'s definition of a "misdemeanor crime of domestic violence").

[43] There is a common-law tradition that the right to bear arms is limited to peaceable or virtuous citizens. See United States v. Bena, 664 F.3d 1180, 1184 (8th Cir. 2011); C. Kevin Marshall, Why Can't Martha Stewart Have A Gun?, 32 Harv. J.L. & Pub. Pol'y 695, 727-28 (2009). Conversely, a conviction for an offense that is neither violent nor serious may be an improper basis for dispossession. See Binderup v. Attorney Gen. United States of Am., 836 F.3d 336, 348 (3d Cir. 2016) (citing Skoien, 614 F.3d at 642; Voisine, 136 S.Ct. at 2280; Heller v. District of Columbia, 554 U.S. at 626; United States v. Everist, 368 F.3d 517, 519 (5th Cir. 2004); Don B. Kates & Clayton E. Cramer, Second Amendment Limitations & Criminological Considerations, 60 Hastings L.J. 1339, 1363–64 (2009); Vongxay, 594 F.3d at 1115); see also Halloway v. Sessions, 349 F. Supp. 3d 451, 460-61 (M.D. Pa. 2018) (holding that federal FIP statute 18 U.S.C. § 922(g) was, per the Second Amendment, unconstitutional as applied to a DUI-offender plaintiff because the government failed to prove, under intermediate scrutiny, that applying the statute to offenders like plaintiff sufficiently furthered the compelling interest of "preventing armed mayhem"); United States v. Smoot, 690 F.3d 215, 221 (4th Cir. 2012), cert. denied, 133 S. Ct. 962 (2013) (dispossession would be improper if a litigant could demonstrate that he fell within "the scope of Second Amendment protections for 'law-abiding responsible citizens to use arms in defense of hearth and home'"); United States v. Barton, 633 F.3d 168, 173 (3d Cir. 2011)("As the Government concedes, Heller's statement regarding the presumptive validity of felon gun dispossession statutes does not foreclose Barton's as-applied challenge."); United States. v. Williams, 616 F.3d 685, 692 (7th Cir. 2010) ("[T]here must exist the possibility that [a firearm] ban could be unconstitutional in the face of an as-applied challenge."); see also United States v. McCane, 573 F.3d 1037, 1049 (10th Cir. 2009) (Tymkovich, J., concurring) ("Non-violent felons, for example, certainly have the same right to self-defense in their homes as non-felons.").

Third, an out-of-state conviction is a predicate for unauthorized possession liability if it has elements that would necessarily prove the elements of a corresponding District crime. Current D.C. Code § 22-4503(a)(1) disallows gun ownership by any person who has "been convicted in any court of a crime punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year." There are instances in which the District punishes conduct more harshly than other states[44] and vice versa.[45] There are also many instances in which other states punish the same conduct differently. As a result, there are cases in which the current statute punishes constitutionally protected activity based on the location instead of the seriousness of the conduct. The revised offense applies to any person who has been convicted of an offense that would be punished by one year if committed in the District, basing liability on the District's specific legislative views on the seriousness of the conduct, irrespective of the maximum penalty in the other jurisdiction. This change reduces an unnecessary gap in liability and improves the consistency[46] and proportionality of the revised offense.

Fourth, a person's dependency on a controlled substance is not a predicate for unauthorized possession liability. Current law punishes possession of a firearm by a person who is "addicted to any controlled substance."[47] The term "addicted" is not defined in Chapter 45 and case law has not interpreted its meaning.[48] Other considerations of fitness to safely store and use gun—such as age, intellectual disabilities, psychiatric disorders—appear in the District's registration requirements[49] and not in the current unlawful possession of a firearm offense. In contrast, the revised statute eliminates a vague reference to addiction to a controlled substance. The boundaries of addiction are amorphous,[50] making the current provision nearly impossible to enforce evenhandedly and inviting

But see U.S. v. Skoien, 614 F.3d 638 (7th Cir. 2010), cert. denied, 131 S. Ct. 1674, 179 L. Ed. 2d 645 (2011) (en banc) (explaining why §922(g) may constitutionally be applied to an individual repeatedly convicted of misdemeanor domestic violence).

[44] For example, inciting a riot currently carries a maximum penalty of 10 years in the District but carries a maximum penalty of one year in New York. See D.C. Code § 22-1322(c); N.Y. Penal Law § 240.08.

[45] For example, possession of 50 grams of marijuana is legal in the District but carries a maximum penalty of 18 months in New Jersey (equivalent to recklessly causing bodily injury with a deadly weapon). See D.C. Code § 48-904.01(a)(1)(A); N.J. Stat. Ann. § 2C:35-10.

[46] Current D.C. Code § 22-4503(a)(6) disallows gun ownership by any person who has "been convicted…of an intrafamily offense, as defined in D.C. Official Code § 16-1001(8), or any similar provision in the law of another jurisdiction." (Emphasis added.)

[47] D.C. Code § 22-4503(a)(4).

[48] D.C. Code § 23-1331(5) defines "addict" to mean any individual who habitually uses any narcotic drug as defined by section 4731 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 so as to endanger the public morals, health, safety, or welfare. D.C. Code § 48-902.01(24) defines "addict" to mean any individual who habitually uses any narcotic drug or abusive drug so as to endanger the public morals, health, safety, or welfare, or who is or has been so far addicted to the use of such narcotic drug or abusive drug as to have lost the power of self-control with reference to his addiction.

[49] See, e.g., D.C. Code §§ 7-2502.03 and 22-4507; 24 DCMR §§ 2308; 2313.8; and 2332(d).

[50] For example, it is unclear whether a person who is predisposed to chemical dependency but is currently drug-free qualifies as an addict.

challenges on due process grounds.[51] This change improves the consistency of the revised code and may ensure the constitutionality of the revised statute.

Fifth, the revised offense applies to any person who is subject to a final civil protection order issued under D.C. Code § 16-1005 or a final anti-stalking order issued under D.C. Code § 16-1064.[52] Current D.C. Code § 22-4503(a)(5) describes "a court order that: (A)(i) Was issued after a hearing of which the person received actual notice, and at which the person had an opportunity to participate; or (ii) Remained in effect after the person failed to appear for a hearing of which the person received actual notice; (B) Restrains the person from assaulting, harassing, stalking, or threatening the petitioner or any other person named in the order; and (C) Requires the person to relinquish possession of any firearms…" Reference to "petitioner" in D.C. Code § 22-4503(a)(5)(B) suggests that the orders referred to are in civil cases only. In contrast, the revised statute applies to any final civil protection order issued under D.C. Code § 16-1005, or a final anti-stalking order issued under D.C. Code § 16-1064. The current D.C. Code § 22-4503(a)(5) definition appears to be underinclusive, as some civil protection orders restrain a person from coming within close physical proximity of a petitioner, without specifying that they may not assault, harass, stalk, or threaten. It is also potentially overinclusive, to the extent that it could be read to apply to court orders in criminal, civil, and family court cases, instead of only to civil protection order cases. By specifying that the protection order must be final, the RCC statute ensures that there was actual notice and a hearing at which the person had an opportunity to participate. The RCC statute also includes final anti-stalking orders, civil orders issued by a mechanism that also requires appropriate notice and a hearing. This change eliminates a gap in liability and clarifies the revised statute.

Sixth, the revised statute normally provides a 24-hour grace period between the time the person is convicted or served with a protection order, unless a judicial officer specifies a shorter period. The current D.C. Code § 22-4503(a)(5) provides no exception for having a reasonable opportunity to safely dispose of a firearm after a protection order goes into effect. In contrast, the revised statute ensures that a law-abiding gun owner does not commit an offense the moment their status changes to a someone who is now unauthorized to possess a firearm. The person may retrieve and safely transport the firearm and relinquish ownership within 24 hours or, when the judicial officer specifies a shorter time, within the timeframe established by the judicial officer. This change improves the proportionality of the revised statute.

Beyond these six changes to current District law, two other aspects of the revised offense may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised offense requires that the accused know that they have a prior conviction or open warrant. D.C. Code § 22-4503 does not specify a culpable mental state for any element of the current unlawful possession of a firearm offense. The District of [51] The current statute does not provide a procedure for notifying a person that they are considered an addict for purposes of D.C. Code § 22-4503 or for providing that person with a hearing.

[52] D.C. Code § 16-1064 is a statute under a recently enacted law, with a projected law date of May 24, 2021.

Columbia Court of Appeals ("DCCA") has held that a person must know that they possess a firearm or component parts that can be pieced together to make a firearm.[53] However, the court has not clearly held whether a person must know that they have a conviction, warrant, or civil protection order.[54] Applying a knowledge culpable mental state requirement to statutory elements that distinguish innocent from criminal behavior is a well-established practice in American jurisprudence.[55] At least one federal court considering a similar federal statute has noted that it would be sensible to require the government to prove that the defendant had knowledge of the only fact (his felony status) separating criminal behavior from not just permissible, but constitutionally protected, conduct.[56] The United States Supreme Court recently interpreted the penalty provision for the same federal offense[57] to require exactly that.[58] The revised statute does not require that a person know of their felony status,[59] but does require that the person know that they have a prior conviction, open warrant, or order to not possess any firearms.[60] This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised offense.

Second, the revised offense holds the accused strictly liable for the existence of a court order to relinquish all firearms. Current D.C. Code § 22-4503(a)(5) does not specify a culpable mental state. However, the statute specifies that it applies only if the order was issued after the person received actual notice of a hearing and either had an opportunity to participate during the hearing or failed to appear. Although applying a knowledge culpable mental state requirement to statutory elements that distinguish innocent from criminal

---

[53] Myers v. United States, 56 A.3d 1148, 1152 (D.C. 2012).

[54] But see Goodall v. United States, 686 A.2d 178 (D.C. 1996) (permitting the parties to stipulate to the existence of a prior felony at trial); Bland v. United States, 153 A.3d 78, 79 (D.C. 2016) (finding that whether a crime is a "crime of violence" for purposes of the statute's sentencing enhancement is a legal question, not a factual question) (citing Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466 (2000); Almendarez-Torres v. United States, 523 U.S. 224 (1998)).

[55] There is a presumption that the legislature intends to require a defendant to possess a degree of knowledge sufficient to "mak[e] a person legally responsible for the consequences of his or her act or omission" regarding "each of the statutory elements that criminalize otherwise innocent conduct," even when the legislature does not specify any scienter in the statutory text. Rehaif v. United States, 17-9560, 2019 WL 2552487, at *3 (U.S. June 21, 2019) (citing United States v. X-Citement Video, Inc., 513 U. S. 64, 72 (1994); Morissette v. United States, 342 U. S. 246, 256-258 (1952); Staples v. United States, 511 U. S. 600, 606 (1994); Black's Law Dictionary 1547 (10th ed. 2014)); see also Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2009 (2015) ("[O]ur cases have explained that a defendant generally must 'know the facts that make his conduct fit the definition of the offense,' even if he does not know that those facts give rise to a crime." (Internal citation omitted)).

[56] United States v. Games-Perez, 667 F.3d 1136, 1144-45 (10th Cir. 2012) (Gorsuch, J., concurring) (interpreting 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)).

[57] 18 U.S.C. § 924(a)(2).

[58] Rehaif v. United States, 17-9560, 2019 WL 2552487 (U.S. June 21, 2019).

[59] The phrase "in fact" in RCC §§ 22E-4105(a)(2) and (b)(2)(A) holds an actor strictly liable as to a conviction being disqualifying. See RCC § 22E-207.

[60] To require actual knowledge that the prior conviction is disqualifying may impose an insurmountable evidentiary burden in some cases, creating an unnecessary gap in liability. For example, the government might be required to prove that the person was not intoxicated, knew the date of their conviction was within the proscribed period, or knew that they conviction was for conduct that is legally considered an act of domestic violence. See Rehaif v. United States, 17-9560, 2019 WL 2552487, at *8 (U.S. June 21, 2019) (J. Alito, dissenting).

behavior is a well-established practice in American jurisprudence,[61] a person who fails to appear for a hearing may not have actual knowledge of the relinquishment order. The revised statute nevertheless holds a person strictly liable, provided that the person had notice of their right to appear at the hearing. This change clarifies the revised statute and may eliminate an unnecessary gap in law.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

The revised code defines "possession" in its general part.[62] The D.C. Code does not codify a definition of possession, although it is an element of several property, drug, and weapon offenses. Instead, parties rely on District case law concerning what evidence is or is not sufficient to establish that the accused actually or constructively or jointly possessed an unlawful item.[63] The RCC definition of "possession,"[64] with the requirement in the offense that the possession be "knowing,"[65] matches the meaning of possession in current DCCA case law.[66] The RCC definition of possession improves the consistency of possessory elements throughout revised statutes.

---

[61] There is a presumption that the legislature intends to require a defendant to possess a degree of knowledge sufficient to "mak[e] a person legally responsible for the consequences of his or her act or omission" regarding "each of the statutory elements that criminalize otherwise innocent conduct," even when the legislature does not specify any scienter in the statutory text. Rehaif v. United States, 17-9560, 2019 WL 2552487, at *3 (U.S. June 21, 2019) (citing United States v. X-Citement Video, Inc., 513 U. S. 64, 72 (1994); Morissette v. United States, 342 U. S. 246, 256–258 (1952); Staples v. United States, 511 U. S. 600, 606 (1994); Black's Law Dictionary 1547 (10th ed. 2014)); see also Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2009 (2015) ("[O]ur cases have explained that a defendant generally must 'know the facts that make his conduct fit the definition of the offense,' even if he does not know that those facts give rise to a crime." (Internal citation omitted)).

[62] RCC § 22E-202.

[63] See Criminal Jury Instructions for the District of Columbia Instruction 3.104 (2018).

[64] RCC § 22E-701.

[65] RCC § 22E-206.

[66] See United States v. Hubbard, 429 A.2d 1334, 1338 (D.C. 1981) ("Actual possession has been defined as the ability of a person to knowingly exercise direct physical custody or control over the property in question. See United States v. Spears, 145 U.S.App.D.C. 284, 293, 449 F.2d 946, 955 (1971); Spencer v. United States, 73 U.S.App.D.C. 98, 99, 116 F.2d 801, 802 (1940)."); see also Rivas v. U.S., 783 A.2d 125, 128 (D.C. 2001) (en banc) ("[I]n…constructive possession cases, there must be something more in the totality of the circumstances–a word or deed, a relationship or other probative factor–that, considered in conjunction with the evidence of proximity and knowledge, proves beyond a reasonable doubt that the passenger intended to exercise dominion or control over the drugs, and was not a mere bystander." (Emphasis in original.)); Guishard v. United States, 669 A.2d 1306, 1312 (D.C. 1995) ("To obtain a conviction based on a theory of constructive possession, the government must prove that the defendant knew of the location of the contraband, that he had the ability to exercise dominion and control over it, and that he 'intended to guide [its] destiny.' Speight v. United States, 599 A.2d 794, 796 (D.C.1991); In re T.M., 577 A.2d 1149, 1151–1152 n. 5 (D.C.1990); Bernard v. United States, 575 A.2d 1191, 1195–1196 (D.C.1990).").

RCC § 22E-4106. Negligent Discharge of Firearm.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the negligent discharge of a firearm offense for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The offense proscribes discharging a firearm without permission to do so.[1] The revised offense replaces D.C. Code § 22-4503.01 (Unlawful discharge of a firearm) and 24 DCMR §§ 2300.1 – 2300.3 (Discharge of weapons).

Paragraph (a)(1) specifies that the person must discharge a projectile from a firearm outside of a licensed firing range.[2] Per its ordinary meaning,[3] a "discharge" does not require aiming a weapon. "Firearm" is a defined term that refers to a weapon "which will, or is designed or redesigned, made or remade, readily converted, restored, or repaired, or is intended to, expel a projectile or projectiles by the action of an explosive" and excludes antiques.[4] Paragraph (a)(1) specifies that to be criminally liable for discharging a projectile firearm, a person must act at least negligently, a defined term.[5] That is, at a minimum, the person should be aware of a substantial risk that the object is a firearm and that it has discharged in a location other than a licensed firing range. Negligence also requires that the risk is of such a nature and degree that, considering the nature of and motivation for the person's conduct and the circumstances person is aware of, the person's failure to perceive that risk is a gross deviation from the ordinary standard of care.[6]

Paragraph (a)(2) uses the term "in fact" to specify that there is no culpable mental state required as to whether the person has lawful authority to discharge a firearm.[7]

Subparagraph (a)(2)(A) provides that a person may discharge a firearm if the Metropolitan Police Department ("MPD") grants written permission to do so. MPD may permit the discharge of a firearm by a particular person, in a particular location, or at a specified time.

Subparagraph (a)(2)(B) provides that a person may discharge a firearm if they have any other permission to do so under District or federal law. If a discharge is permitted by law a person does not violate this section.

Subsection (b) states that the Attorney General for the District of Columbia is responsible for prosecuting violations of the statute.

Subsection (c) provides the penalty for the revised offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.]

Subsection (d) cross-references applicable definitions in the RCC.

---

[1] RCC § 22E-4120, endangerment with a firearm, punishes knowingly discharging a firearm outside a licensed firing range and either doing so in a location open to the general public or creating a substantial risk of death or bodily injury to another.

[2] The District of Columbia does not currently have any firing ranges or hunting grounds.

[3] See, e.g., Merriam-Webster Online Dictionary at https://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/discharge ("to relieve of a charge, load, or burden").

[4] RCC § 22E-701. Unless there is evidence that the firearm is antique, the government is not required to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the firearms are not antique as an element of the offense in its case-in-chief. Toler v. United States, 198 A.3d 767 (D.C. 2018).

[5] RCC § 22E-206.

[6] RCC § 22E-206.

[7] RCC § 22E-207.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised negligent discharge of a firearm statute clearly changes current District law in five main ways.

First, the revised statute requires that the accused act at least negligently with respect to discharge of a firearm outside a firing range. The current statute is silent as to the applicable culpable mental state requirement, and no case law exists on point. This change applies the standard culpable mental state definition of "negligently" used throughout the RCC,[8] even though it is highly unusual to provide criminal liability for merely negligent conduct.[9] This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised offense.

Second, the revised statute includes only one offense and one penalty gradation for negligent discharge of a firearm. A violation of current D.C. Code § 22-4503.01 is subject to a maximum penalty of specifies a maximum penalty of 1 year of incarceration and a $2,500 fine.[10] A violation of 24 DCMR §§ 2300.1 – 2300.3 is subject to a fine of $300 and is not punishable by jail time.[11] In contrast, the revised statute provides a single offense gradation. This change logically reorders and improves the consistency proportionality of the revised statutes.

Third, the revised offense does not punish discharge of an air gun, spring gun, or torpedo. Current 24 DCMR § 2300.1 prohibits the discharge of any "gun, air gun, rifle, air rifle, pistol, revolver, or other firearm, cannon, or torpedo" without the written permission of the Chief of Police. The term "gun" is not defined in the statute or in District case law and may broadly include spring guns, paintball guns, cap guns, water guns, and other toys. The revised code defines the term "firearm" to include a rifle, pistol, revolver, and cannon,[12] however, it does not include air rifles or torpedo. Discharging an air rifle outside a building is punished as carrying an air or spring gun.[13] Releasing a torpedo—or any other restricted explosive—is punished as possession of a prohibited weapon or

---

[8] RCC § 22E-206.

[9] See Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2011 (2015).

> Elonis's conviction, however, was premised solely on how his posts would be understood by a reasonable person. Such a "reasonable person" standard is a familiar feature of civil liability in tort law but is inconsistent with "the conventional requirement for criminal conduct—awareness of some wrongdoing." Staples, 511 U.S., at 606–607, 114 S.Ct. 1793 (quoting United States v. Dotterweich, 320 U.S. 277, 281, 64 S.Ct. 134, 88 L.Ed. 48 (1943); emphasis added). Having liability turn on whether a "reasonable person" regards the communication as a threat—regardless of what the defendant thinks—"reduces culpability on the all-important element of the crime to negligence," Jeffries, 692 F.3d, at 484 (Sutton, J., dubitante), and we "have long been reluctant to infer that a negligence standard was intended in criminal statutes," Rogers v. United States, 422 U.S. 35, 47, 95 S.Ct. 2091, 45 L.Ed.2d 1 (1975) (Marshall, J., concurring) (citing Morissette, 342 U.S. 246, 72 S.Ct. 240, 96 L.Ed. 288).

[10] D.C. Code §§ 22-4515; 22-3571.01.

[11] 24 DCMR § 100.6.

[12] RCC § 22E-701.

[13] RCC § 7-2502.17.

accessory.[14] This change improves the logical organization and proportionality of the revised offenses.

Fourth, the revised offense does not allow firearms to be discharged in theaters. Current 24 DCMR § 2300.3 states, "This section shall not apply to the discharge of firearms or explosives in a performance conducted in or at a regular licenses [sic.] theater or show." The statute does not specify the type of license required and District case law has not addressed the issued. Under the revised code, a person must obtain written permission to discharge a firearm in a theater or during a show. An air or spring gun may be used as part of a lawful theatrical performance or athletic contest.[15] Other common stage props such as block-barreled guns designed for movie or theatrical use, block-barreled starter guns, and percussion (cap) guns do not constitute firearms in the RCC or under current D.C. Code definitions in Title 7 or Title 22, and could be used in theaters and shows. This change eliminates an unnecessary gap in the revised offenses.

Fifth, the revised offense clarifies that a person may discharge a firearm if lawful authority to do so exists under District or federal law. Current 24 DCMR § 2300.1 requires "special" written permission from the Chief of Police to discharge a weapon. The revised offense notes that either written permission or other lawful authority is sufficient.

Beyond these five changes, two other aspects of the statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised statute holds an actor strictly liable as to whether they have permission to discharge a firearm. The current statutes do not specify any culpable mental states and District case law has addressed their meaning. The revised statute nevertheless holds a person strictly liable as to whether there is permission under District or federal law to fire a gun. Although applying strict liability to statutory elements that distinguish innocent from criminal behavior is strongly disfavored by courts[16] and legal experts[17] for any non-regulatory crimes, the negligent discharge of a firearm offense is largely

[14] RCC § 22E-4101.

[15] E.g., an actor in a play may use an air or spring gun to simulate a firearm in a shooting scene, a referee may use an air or spring gun to signal the start of a race. See RCC § 7-2502.17(b)(1)(A) and corresponding commentary.

[16] Elonis v. United States," 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2010, 192 L.Ed.2d 1 (2015) ("When interpreting federal criminal statutes that are silent on the required mental state, we read into the statute 'only that mens rea which is necessary to separate wrongful conduct from 'otherwise innocent conduct.'" Carter v. United States, 530 U.S. 255, 269, 120 S.Ct. 2159, 147 L.Ed.2d 203 (2000) (quoting X–Citement Video, 513 U.S., at 72, 115 S.Ct. 464).").

[17] See § 5.5(c)Pros and cons of strict-liability crimes, 1 Subst. Crim. L. § 5.5(c) (3d ed.) ("For the most part, the commentators have been critical of strict-liability crimes. 'The consensus can be summarily stated: to punish conduct without reference to the actor's state of mind is both inefficacious and unjust. It is inefficacious because conduct unaccompanied by an awareness of the factors making it criminal does not mark the actor as one who needs to be subjected to punishment in order to deter him or others from behaving similarly in the future, nor does it single him out as a socially dangerous individual who needs to be incapacitated or reformed. It is unjust because the actor is subjected to the stigma of a criminal conviction without being morally blameworthy. Consequently, on either a preventive or retributive theory of criminal punishment, the criminal sanction is inappropriate in the absence of mens rea.'") (quoting Packer, Mens Rea and the Supreme Court, 1962 Sup.Ct.Rev. 107, 109).

regulatory in nature. This change clarifies the revised statute and may eliminate an unnecessary gap in law.

Second, the revised offense uses the phrase "firing range" instead of "shooting gallery." Current 24 DCMR § 2300.2 provides, "This section shall not apply to licensed shooting galleries between 6:00 a.m. and 12:00 midnight on Monday through Saturday, or between the hours of 2:00 p.m. and 11:00 p.m. on Sundays." This term "licensed shooting gallery" is not defined in the DCMR or in District case law. The firearms regulations in the D.C. Code do not refer to "shooting galleries," but do refer to "firing ranges."[18] The time restriction does not correspond with any District regulations for firing ranges and are incongruent with District regulations of loud noise.[19] The revised offense uses the Title 7 terminology and deletes the time restriction.[20] This change improves the clarity of the revised statutes.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

The revised offense does not include a self-defense provision. Current D.C. Code § 22-4503.01 provides that a person may discharge a firearm "as otherwise permitted by law, including legitimate self-defense." In contrast, under the RCC, where a person acts in defense of one's self, a third person, or property, a general defense may apply.[21] This change improves the consistency of the revised offenses.

[18] D.C. Code § 7-2507.03.
[19] Loud noise that recklessly or negligently disturbs others may be punished under 20 DCMR § 2701, depending upon the volume and location.
[20] Additionally, Merriam Webster defines "shooting gallery" to include "a building (usually abandoned) where drug addicts buy and use heroin." See Merriam-Webster Online Dictionary at https://www.webster-dictionary.org/definition/shooting%20gallery.
[21] RCC § 22E-403.

RCC § 22E-4107. Alteration of a Firearm Identification Mark.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the alteration of a firearm identification mark offense for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The offense proscribes knowingly altering or obscuring identifying marks on a firearm. The revised offense replaces D.C. Code §§ 22-4512 (Alteration of identifying marks of weapons prohibited) and 7-2505.03(d) (Microstamping).

Paragraph (a)(1) requires that the accused knowingly alters or removes an identification mark. "Alters" is an undefined term, intended to be broadly construed. The term "firearm" is defined in RCC § 22E-701. Paragraph (a)(1) specifies that a "knowingly" culpable mental state applies, a term defined in RCC § 22E-206, which, applied here, requires that the accused must be practically certain that their conduct will alter or remove an identification mark.

Paragraph (a)(2) further specifies that the accused must alter a mark "with intent to" conceal or misrepresent the identity of the firearm. "Intent" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-206 which, applied here, means the accused must be practically certain that the alteration would conceal or misrepresent[1] the identity of the firearm. Per RCC § 22E-205, the object of the phrase "with intent to" is not an objective element that requires separate proof—only the actor's culpable mental state must be proven regarding the object of this phrase. It is not necessary to prove that the accused actually concealed or misrepresented the identity of the firearm, only that the accused was practically certain that he or she would do so.

Subsection (b) provides the penalty for the revised offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.]

Subsection (e) cross-references applicable definitions in the RCC and the D.C. Code.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised alteration of a firearm identification mark statute clearly changes current District law in three main ways.

First, the revised alteration of a firearm identification mark statute applies to any firearm. The current D.C. Code statutes apply only to a pistol, machine gun, or sawed-off shotgun.[2] In contrast, the revised offense applies to any firearm, as defined in RCC § 22E-701, which includes other long guns, such as shotguns and rifles. There is no apparent reason to exclude liability for long guns which may be legally purchased and possessed by law enforcement officers. This change eliminates an unnecessary gap in liability.

Second, the revised statute requires that the accused have intent to conceal or misrepresent the identity of the firearm. The current D.C. Code statutes do not specify a culpable mental state,[3] and it appears that a person commits an offense by any alteration or removal of a mark, including by accident, unless the purpose is experimental work by a government officer or agent,[4] safety, or sporting.[5] No case law exists as to whether a person would be guilty under the current statutes for altering an identification mark for some other purpose. In contrast, the revised statute eliminates liability for a person who alters a mark by accident or for purposes other than concealing or misrepresenting the identity of the weapon. The RCC contains similar language for the revised alteration of bicycle identification number[6] and alteration of a motor vehicle identification number[7] offenses. This change clarifies and improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised offenses.

[1] The government is not required to prove that the accused intended to mislead a specific person, only that the markings are removed or altered.
[2] D.C. Code §§ 22-4512 and 7-2505.03(d).
[3] But see D.C. Code § 7-2505.03 which provides an exception for "normal wear."

Third, the revised alteration of a firearm identification mark statute is prosecutable only by the Office of the United States Attorney for the District of Columbia ("USAO"). Current D.C. Code § 22-4512 (Alteration of identifying marks of weapons prohibited) is prosecutable by USAO. However, current D.C. Code § 7-2505.03(d) (Microstamping) is prosecutable by the Office of the Attorney General for the District of Columbia. In contrast, the revised statute includes only a single gradation of a single offense prosecutable by USAO. This change reduces unnecessary overlap between the revised statutes.

Beyond these three changes, two other aspects of the revised statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised statute requires that the accused act knowingly with respect to removal or alteration of the identification mark. The current statute is silent as to the applicable culpable mental state requirement, and no case law exists on point. To resolve this ambiguity, the revised offense requires at least knowledge as to the conduct of removing or altering the mark. Applying a knowledge culpable mental state requirement to statutory elements that distinguish innocent from criminal behavior is a well-established practice in American jurisprudence.[8] A knowledge culpable mental state is also consistent with similar offenses in the D.C. Code[9] and RCC. This change clarifies the revised statute.

[4] D.C. Code § 22-4512.
[5] D.C. Code § 7-2505.03(d)(2).
[6] RCC § 22E-2404.
[7] RCC § 22E-2403.
[8] There is a presumption that the legislature intends to require a defendant to possess a degree of knowledge sufficient to "mak[e] a person legally responsible for the consequences of his or her act or omission" regarding "each of the statutory elements that criminalize otherwise innocent conduct," even when the legislature does not specify any scienter in the statutory text. Rehaif v. United States, 17-9560, 2019 WL 2552487, at *3 (U.S. June 21, 2019) (citing United States v. X-Citement Video, Inc., 513 U. S. 64, 72 (1994); Morissette v. United States, 342 U. S. 246, 256–258 (1952); Staples v. United States, 511 U. S. 600, 606 (1994); Black's Law Dictionary 1547 (10th ed. 2014)); see also Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2009 (2015) ("[O]ur cases have explained that a defendant generally must 'know the facts that make his conduct fit the definition of the offense,' even if he does not know that those facts give rise to a crime." (Internal citation omitted)).
[9] See, e.g., § 22–3233, Altering or removing motor vehicle identification numbers ("It is unlawful for a person to knowingly remove, obliterate, tamper with, or alter any identification number on a motor vehicle or a motor vehicle part.").

Second, the revised offense does not specify exceptions for normal wear,[10] experimental work by a government officer or agent,[11] safety, or sporting.[12] These exceptions are not required because the revised offense requires knowledge and intent, as defined in RCC § 22E-206. The RCC also includes standardized general defenses, including a defense for execution of public duty.[13]

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

First, the current statutes make it a crime to "alter, remove, or obliterate" an identifying mark.[14] The revised statute only uses the words "alter" and "remove," which are intended to be broadly construed to cover removing or obliterating a mark. The change is not intended to narrow the scope of the offense.

Second, the revised offense does not include a permissive inference. Current D.C. Code § 22-4512 states, "Possession of any pistol, machine gun, or sawed-off shotgun upon which any such mark shall have been changed, altered, removed, or obliterated shall be prima facie evidence that the possessor has changed, altered, removed, or obliterated the same within the District of Columbia." The D.C. Court of Appeals held that this inference is "irrational" or "arbitrary," and hence unconstitutional, because it cannot be said with substantial assurance that the presumed fact is more likely than not to flow from the proved fact on which it is made to depend.[15]

[10] D.C. Code § 72505.03(d)(1).
[11] D.C. Code § 22-4512.
[12] D.C. Code § 7-2505.03(d)(2).
[13] RCC § 22E-403.
[14] D.C. Code §§ 22-4512 and 7-2505.03(d).
[15] Reid v. United States, 466 A.2d 433, 435 (D.C. 1983) (citing Leary v. United States, 395 U.S. 6, (1969); Turner v. United States, 396 U.S. 398 (1970)); see also United States v. Marzzarella, 614 F.3d 85, 97 (3d Cir. 2010) (noting it would be constitutional to instead criminalize possession of a firearm with an obliterated serial number).

RCC § 22E-4108. Civil Provisions for Prohibitions of Firearms on Public or Private Property.

Explanatory Note and Relation to Current District Law. This section establishes the civil provisions for prohibits of firearms on public or private property for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The revised statute replaces D.C. Code § 22-4503.02, (Prohibition of firearms from public or private property). The revised civil provisions for prohibition of firearms on public or private property statute does not clearly change current District law, however two aspects of the revised statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised provision clarifies that the statute operates as a civil provision and does not create a misdemeanor offense. Current D.C. Code § 22-4503.02 does not explicitly prohibit or affirmatively require any particular conduct.[1] However, § 22-4515 provides a criminal penalty for "any violation of any provision of this chapter." The revised statute establishes the statute as civil provisions instead of an offense. This change clarifies the revised statute.

Second, the revised code defines "law enforcement officer" and "property" in its general part.[2] D.C. Code § 22-4503.02 does not define the terms "law enforcement personnel" or "property" and District case law has not addressed their meaning. It is unclear which employees of which agencies and private businesses qualify as "law enforcement personnel." In contrast, the revised statute applies standardized definitions for "firearm," "law enforcement officer," and "property," used throughout the revised code.

[1] The statute does not explicitly require a person carrying a firearm to stay off of premises where firearms are disallowed, it merely describes when persons may disallow firearms. If the statute does create a misdemeanor offense, it largely overlaps with D.C. Code § 7-2509.07, which prohibits carrying a pistol with a license in 15 different locations. It is unclear what, if any, impact the signage requirements in 24 DCMR § 2346 have on a person's liability under either statute.
[2] RCC § 22E-202.

RCC § 22E-4109. Civil Provisions for Lawful Transportation of a Firearm or Ammunition.

Explanatory Note and Relation to Current District Law. This section establishes the civil provisions for lawful transportation of a firearm or ammunition for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). These provisions establish a right to possess and transport a firearm in a specified manner.[1] The revised statute replaces D.C. Code § 22-4504.02 (Lawful transportation of firearms).

The revised civil provisions for lawful transportation of a firearm or ammunition statute does not clearly change current District law, however two aspects of the revised statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised provision clarifies that the statute operates as a civil provision and does not, of itself, create criminal liability for non-compliance. Current D.C. Code § 22-4504.02(a) does not explicitly prohibit or affirmatively require any particular conduct. However, § 22-4504.02(b)(1) states (in the passive voice), "neither the firearm nor any ammunition being transported shall be readily accessible or directly accessible…" and § 22-4504.02(b)(2) states (in the active voice), "the firearm or ammunition shall be contained…" and "the firearm shall be unloaded." D.C. Code § 22-4515 provides a criminal penalty for "any violation of any provision of this chapter." The District of Columbia Court of Appeals has not published any opinion interpreting this statute. Legislative history for the current provision in D.C. Code § 22-4504.02 does not clearly indicate whether or not the provision was intended to create criminal liability by itself. However, predecessor statutes suggest that D.C. Code § 22-4504.02 may have been intended to create an exclusion from liability for carrying a concealed weapon in violation of D.C. Code § 22-4504(a) and (a-1) rather than a misdemeanor offense.[2] The revised

[1] See also 18 U.S.C. § 926A.

[2] In 1932, much like current D.C. Code § 22-4504, the District's carrying a concealed weapon statute stated, "No person shall within the District of Columbia carry concealed on or about his person, except in his dwelling house or place of business or on other land possessed by him, a pistol, without a license therefor issued as hereinafter provided, or any deadly or dangerous weapon." In addition to the exceptions that appear in current D.C. Code § 22-4505(a)(1), (3), and (5), the 1932 legislation specified that the prohibition did not apply to "any person while carrying a pistol unloaded and in a secure wrapper" to and from the locations specified in the contemporary § 22-4505(a)(6). The 1932 "unloaded and in a secure wrapper" exception language was most recently changed to a cross-reference to § 22-4504.02, which largely mirrors 18 U.S.C. § 926A (Firearm Owners Protection Act), establishing a right and not a criminal offense. Consequently, it appears that D.C. Code § 22-4504.02 may have been intended merely as an exception to the District's carrying statute.

On the contrary, if current D.C. Code § 22-4504(a) were construed to create a misdemeanor offense, it may run afoul of D.C. Code § 23–101(a) and case law on Home Rule limitations on assignment of prosecutorial authority. Prior to home rule, the only stand-alone offense regarding transportation of firearms appears to have been a police regulation delegated to the Office of the Office of the Attorney General for the District of Columbia. See Police Traffic and Motor Vehicle Regulations of the District of Columbia, Art. 52, Sec. 8(b), August 12, 1968 (establishing an offense prosecutable by Corporation Counsel that states, "Any pistol carried by any person not having a licensed issued under these Regulations shall be carried In a closed container or securely wrapped and while being carried shall be kept unloaded. Containers of such pistols or such securely wrapped pistols shall be carried in open view."). The District is statute establishes the transportation requirements as a right instead of an offense. This change clarifies the revised statute.

Second, the revised statute clarifies that there is a lawful means of transportation whether or not the ammunition is transported at the same time. Current D.C. Code § 22-4504.01(b)(1) appears to assume that the firearm will be accompanied by ammunition, stating "neither the firearm nor any ammunition being transported shall be readily accessible." This change clarifies the revised statute.

barred from reassigning prosecutorial authority over a crime that is a police regulation to the United States Attorney by D.C. Code § 23-101(a). See In re Hall, 31 A.3d 453, 458 (D.C. 2011).

RCC § 22E-4110. Civil Provisions for Issuance of a License to Carry a Pistol.

Explanatory Note and Relation to Current District Law. This section establishes the issuance of a license to carry a pistol civil provision for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The provision specifies the requirements for obtaining a carry license in the District. The revised provision replaces D.C. Code § 22-4506 (Issue of a license to carry a pistol). The current statute has been copied verbatim, with the exception of applying standardized RCC definitions and striking a phrase that was held to be unconstitutional in 2016.[1]

[1] The District's requirement that applicants for a license to carry a concealed firearm demonstrate a "good reason to fear injury to his or her person or property" or "any other proper reason for carrying a pistol," as further defined by District law and regulations (collectively "the 'good reason' requirement"), is inconsistent with the individual right to bear arms under the Second Amendment and therefore unconstitutional. Grace v. Dist. of Columbia, 187 F. Supp. 3d 124 (D.D.C. 2016).

RCC § 22E-4111. Unlawful Sale of a Pistol.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the unlawful sale of a pistol offense for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The revised statute replaces D.C. Code § 22-4507 (Certain sales of pistols prohibited).

Paragraph (a)(1) requires that the accused knowingly sells a pistol. "Sells" is an undefined term, intended to include any exchanging of pistol for monetary remuneration. The term "pistol" has the meaning specified in D.C. Code § 7-2501.01. Paragraph (a)(1) specifies that a "knowingly" culpable mental state applies, a term defined in RCC § 22E-206, which, applied here, requires that the accused must be practically certain that they are selling and practically certain that the item is a pistol.

Paragraph (a)(2) further specifies that the accused must sell a pistol reckless as to the fact that the purchaser is one of three types of people who are legally unfit to own a firearm. "Reckless" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-206 which, applied here, means the person must consciously disregard a substantial risk that the purchaser is not of sound mind, prohibited from possessing a firearm under RCC § 22E-4105, or under 21 years of age, , except when the purchaser is a child or ward of the actor. The risk must be of such a nature and degree that, considering the nature of and motivation for the person's conduct and the circumstances the person is aware of, the person's conscious disregard of that risk is a gross deviation from the ordinary standard of conduct.[1]

Subsection (b) provides the penalty for the revised offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.]

Subsection (c) cross-references applicable definitions in the RCC.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised unlawful sale of a firearm statute clearly changes current District law in one main way.

The revised statute includes a cross-reference to RCC § 22E-4105, Possession of a Firearm by an Unauthorized Person. Current D.C. Code § 22-4507 cross-references § 22-4503, Unlawful possession of firearm. In contrast, the revised code replaces the reference to current D.C. Code § 22-4503 with the RCC version of that offense. However, each change in District law effected by RCC § 22E-4105, Possession of a Firearm by an Unauthorized Person consequently affects the scope of the revised unlawful sale of a pistol offense. These changes improve the consistency and proportionality of the revised offenses.

Beyond this change to current District law, three aspects of the revised statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised provision clarifies that the statute establishes a criminal offense and is not merely a civil provision. Current D.C. Code § 22-4507 does not itself provide a criminal penalty, however, D.C. Code § 22-4515 provides a criminal penalty for "any violation of any provision of this chapter." The revised statute clearly establishes an offense instead of a civil provision. This change clarifies the revised statute.

[1] RCC § 22E-206.

Second, the revised statute requires that the accused act at least knowingly with respect to selling a pistol. The current statute is silent as to the applicable culpable mental state requirement, and no case law exists on point. Applying a knowledge culpable mental state requirement to statutory elements that distinguish innocent from criminal behavior is a well-established practice in American jurisprudence.[2] This change clarifies the revised statute.

Third, the revised statute requires that a person be at least reckless as to the status of the purchaser. Current D.C. Code § 22-4507 requires that a person have "reasonable cause to believe" that the purchaser is not of sound mind, prohibited from possessing a firearm under § 22-4503, or under 21 years of age, except when the purchaser is a child or ward of the person. There is no case law construing the meaning of this language. To resolve this ambiguity, the revised statute applies the RCC's standard mental state definition for recklessness[3] which requires that a person consciously disregard a substantial risk that the purchaser is legally barred from having a weapon. Requiring, at a minimum, a knowing culpable mental state for the elements of an offense that make otherwise legal conduct illegal is a generally accepted legal principle.[4] However, recklessness has been upheld in some cases as a minimal basis for punishing morally culpable crime.[5] This change improves the consistency of the revised offenses.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

The revised code defines "possession" in its general part.[6] The D.C. Code does not codify a definition of possession, although it is an element of several property, drug, and weapon offenses. Instead, parties rely on District case law concerning what evidence is or is not sufficient to establish that the accused actually or constructively or jointly possessed

---

[2] There is a presumption that the legislature intends to require a defendant to possess a degree of knowledge sufficient to "mak[e] a person legally responsible for the consequences of his or her act or omission" regarding "each of the statutory elements that criminalize otherwise innocent conduct," even when the legislature does not specify any scienter in the statutory text. Rehaif v. United States, 17-9560, 2019 WL 2552487, at *3 (U.S. June 21, 2019) (citing United States v. X-Citement Video, Inc., 513 U. S. 64, 72 (1994); Morissette v. United States, 342 U. S. 246, 256–258 (1952); Staples v. United States, 511 U. S. 600, 606 (1994); Black's Law Dictionary 1547 (10th ed. 2014)); see also Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2009 (2015) ("[O]ur cases have explained that a defendant generally must 'know the facts that make his conduct fit the definition of the offense,' even if he does not know that those facts give rise to a crime." (Internal citation omitted)).

[3] RCC § 22E-206.

[4] Elonis v. United States," 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2010, 192 L.Ed.2d 1 (2015) ("When interpreting federal criminal statutes that are silent on the required mental state, we read into the statute 'only that mens rea which is necessary to separate wrongful conduct from 'otherwise innocent conduct.'" Carter v. United States, 530 U.S. 255, 269, 120 S.Ct. 2159, 147 L.Ed.2d 203 (2000) (quoting X-citement Video, 513 U.S., at 72, 115 S.Ct. 464).").

[5] Elonis v. United States," 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2015, 192 L.Ed.2d 1 (2015) (J. Alito, concurring)("There can be no real dispute that recklessness regarding a risk of serious harm is wrongful conduct. In a wide variety of contexts, we have described reckless conduct as morally culpable.").

[6] RCC § 22E-202.

an unlawful item.[7] The RCC definition of "possession,"[8] with the requirement in the offense that the possession be "knowing,"[9] matches the meaning of possession in current DCCA case law.[10] The RCC definition of possession improves the consistency of possessory elements throughout revised statutes.

[7] See Criminal Jury Instructions for the District of Columbia Instruction 3.104 (2018).
[8] RCC § 22E-701.
[9] RCC § 22E-206.
[10] See United States v. Hubbard, 429 A.2d 1334, 1338 (D.C. 1981) ("Actual possession has been defined as the ability of a person to knowingly exercise direct physical custody or control over the property in question. See United States v. Spears, 145 U.S.App.D.C. 284, 293, 449 F.2d 946, 955 (1971); Spencer v. United States, 73 U.S.App.D.C. 98, 99, 116 F.2d 801, 802 (1940)."); see also Rivas v. U.S., 783 A.2d 125, 128 (D.C. 2001) (en banc) ("[I]n…constructive possession cases, there must be something more in the totality of the circumstances–a word or deed, a relationship or other probative factor–that, considered in conjunction with the evidence of proximity and knowledge, proves beyond a reasonable doubt that the passenger intended to exercise dominion or control over the drugs, and was not a mere bystander." (Emphasis in original.)); Guishard v. United States, 669 A.2d 1306, 1312 (D.C. 1995) ("To obtain a conviction based on a theory of constructive possession, the government must prove that the defendant knew of the location of the contraband, that he had the ability to exercise dominion and control over it, and that he 'intended to guide [its] destiny.' Speight v. United States, 599 A.2d 794, 796 (D.C.1991); In re T.M., 577 A.2d 1149, 1151–1152 n. 5 (D.C.1990); Bernard v. United States, 575 A.2d 1191, 1195–1196 (D.C.1990).").

RCC § 22E-4112. Unlawful Transfer of a Firearm.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the unlawful transfer of firearm offense for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The revised statute replaces D.C. Code § 22-4508 (Transfers of firearms regulated).

Paragraph (a)(1) requires that a person knowingly deliver a firearm to a purchaser. "Delivers" is an undefined term, intended to be broadly construed. The term "firearm" is defined in RCC § 22E-701. Paragraph (a)(1) specifies that a "knowingly" culpable mental state applies, a term defined in RCC § 22E-206 which, applied here, requires that the accused must be practically certain that they are delivering an item and practically certain that the item they are delivering is a firearm.

Subparagraph (a)(1)(A) specifies that a transfer that occurs in fewer than 10 days of purchase is an unlawful transfer, unless the purchaser is a law enforcement officer. The term "law enforcement officer" is defined in RCC § 22E-701. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the person must know—that is, be practically certain—that the transfer occurred within 10 days of the sale.

Subparagraph (a)(1)(B) specifies that a transfer that occurs in a manner other than the manner specified in RCC § 22E-4109 is an unlawful transfer. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the person must know—that is, be practically certain—that he or she is transporting it in the manner that fails to comply with RCC § 22E-4109.

Alternatively, paragraph (a)(2) requires that a person knowingly fail to deliver a written statement with certain information, when purchasing a firearm. The writing must be duplicated and include the purchaser's full name, address, occupation, date and place of birth. It must also include the date of purchase, the caliber, make, model, and manufacturer's number of the firearm. And, it must also include a statement that the purchaser is not prohibited from possessing a firearm by RCC § 22E-4105. Paragraph (a)(2) specifies that a "knowingly" culpable mental state applies, a term defined in RCC § 22E-206 which, applied here, requires that the accused be practically certain that they are failing to deliver the required writing when they are purchasing a firearm.

Alternatively, paragraph (a)(3) requires that a person knowingly fail to deliver a completed purchase statement to the Metropolitan Police Department, when selling a firearm. The writing must be duplicated, include the seller's signature and address, and be retrained for 6 years. Paragraph (a)(3) specifies that a "knowingly" culpable mental state applies, a term defined in RCC § 22E-206 which, applied here, requires that the accused be practically certain that they are failing to deliver the required writing when they are selling a firearm.

Alternatively, paragraph (a)(4) applies to a person who knowingly sells an assault weapon, machine gun, or sawed-off shotgun. A "knowingly" culpable mental state applies, a term defined in RCC § 22E-206 which, applied here, requires that the accused be practically certain that the item they are selling is an assault weapon, machine gun, or sawed-off shotgun.

Subparagraph (a)(4)(A) prohibits selling an assault weapon, machine gun, or sawed-off shotgun to any person other than the persons designated in RCC § 22E-4118(b) as entitled to possess the same. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the person must know—that is, be practically certain—that they are selling an assault weapon to someone who qualifies as an unauthorized person.

Subparagraph (a)(4)(B) prohibits selling an assault weapon, machine gun, or sawed-off shotgun without prior permission to make such sale obtained from the Chief of the Metropolitan Police Department ("MPD"). Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the person must know—that is, be practically certain—that they are not authorized to sell the assault weapon, machine gun, or sawed-off shotgun.

Subsection (b) excludes liability for wholesalers. Subsection (b) specifies "in fact," a defined term in RCC § 22E-207 that indicates there is no culpable mental state requirement for a given element, here that the actor is a wholesale dealer selling a firearm to a dealer licensed under RCC § 22E-4114.

Subsection (c) provides the penalty for the revised offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.]

Subsection (d) cross-references applicable definitions in the RCC.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised unlawful transfer of a firearm offense clearly changes current District law in four main ways.

First, paragraph (a)(4) of the revised offense restricts the sale of an assault weapon, machine gun, or sawed-off shotgun. Current D.C. Code § 22-4508 provides that "No machine gun, sawed-off shotgun, or blackjack shall be sold to any person other than the persons designated in § 22-4514…" The revised statute does not address transfers of blackjacks, but does address transfers of assault weapons,[1] the possession of which—like machine guns and sawed-off shotguns—is prohibited as contraband under RCC § 22E-4101. It is unclear why blackjacks, as compared to other non-firearm dangerous weapons, are regulated in this manner. The statute's failure to cover sales of assault weapons may be an oversight during recent legislative changes regarding the definition of a machine gun.[2] This change improves the consistency of the revised statutes and eliminates and unnecessary gap in liability.

Second, the revised statute includes a cross-reference to RCC § 22E-4105, Possession of a Firearm by an Unauthorized Person. Current D.C. Code § 22-4507 cross-references § 22-4503, Unlawful possession of firearm. In contrast, the revised code replaces the reference to current D.C. Code § 22-4503 with the RCC version of that offense. However, each change in District law effected by RCC § 22E-4105, Possession of a

[1] The term "assault weapon" has the meaning specified in D.C. Code § 7-2501.01.

[2] Before 2009, the term "machine gun" was defined in D.C. Code § 7-2501.01 to include "any firearm which shoots, is designed to shoot, or can be readily converted or restored to shoot…[s]emiautomatically, more than 12 shots without manual reloading." The District of Columbia Court of Appeals interpreted this language to include a handgun fitted with a magazine that holds more than twelve rounds of ammunition (even if the magazine is defective). See Moore v. United States, 927 A.2d 1040, 1054 (D.C. 2007); United States v. Woodfolk, 656 A.2d 1145, 1147–48 (D.C. 1995). In 2009, the D.C. Council redefined "machine gun" to include only fully automatic weapons and simultaneously criminalized possession of a large capacity ammunition feeding device under D.C. Code § 7-2506.01(b). D.C. Law 17-372, Firearms Control Amendment Act of 2008.

Firearm by an Unauthorized Person consequently affects the scope of the revised unlawful sale of a pistol offense. These changes improve the consistency and proportionality of the revised offenses.

Third, the revised statute includes a cross-reference to the persons described in RCC § 22E-4118(b), Exclusions from Liability for Weapon Offenses. Current D.C. Code § 22-4508 cross-references "the persons designated in § 22-4514." The revised code replaces the exceptions in Chapter 45 of current D.C. Code Title 22 with a single, comprehensive list of exclusions from liability in RCC § 22E-4118 and changes current District law as described in the commentary. Each change affects the scope of the revised unlawful transfer of a firearm offense. These changes improve the consistency and proportionality of the revised offenses.

Fourth, the revised statute applies a standardized definition of "law enforcement officer." Current D.C. Code § 22-4508 except sales to "sales to marshals, sheriffs, prison or jail wardens or their deputies, policemen, or other duly appointed law enforcement officers." The word "policemen" is not defined in the statute and District case law has not addressed its meaning. In contrast, the RCC defines the term "law enforcement officer" with specificity[3] and applies this definition to all revised offenses. This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised offense.

Beyond these four changes to current District law, two other aspects of the revised statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised provision clarifies that the statute establishes a criminal offense and is not merely a civil provision. Current D.C. Code § 22-4508 does not itself provide a criminal penalty, however, D.C. Code § 22-4515 provides a criminal penalty for "any violation of any provision of this chapter." The revised statute more clearly frames the statute as establishing an offense instead of a civil provision. This change clarifies the revised statute.

Second, the revised statute requires that the accused act at least knowingly with respect to each element of the revised offense. The current statute is silent as to the applicable culpable mental state requirement, and no case law exists on point. Applying a knowledge culpable mental state requirement to statutory elements that distinguish innocent from criminal behavior is a well-established practice in American jurisprudence.[4] This change clarifies the revised statute.

---

[3] RCC § 22E-701.

[4] There is a presumption that the legislature intends to require a defendant to possess a degree of knowledge sufficient to "mak[e] a person legally responsible for the consequences of his or her act or omission" regarding "each of the statutory elements that criminalize otherwise innocent conduct," even when the legislature does not specify any scienter in the statutory text. Rehaif v. United States, 17-9560, 2019 WL 2552487, at *3 (U.S. June 21, 2019) (citing United States v. X-Citement Video, Inc., 513 U. S. 64, 72 (1994); Morissette v. United States, 342 U. S. 246, 256–258 (1952); Staples v. United States, 511 U. S. 600, 606 (1994); Black's Law Dictionary 1547 (10th ed. 2014)); see also Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2009 (2015) ("[O]ur cases have explained that a defendant generally must 'know the facts that make his conduct fit the definition of the offense,' even if he does not know that those facts give rise to a crime." (Internal citation omitted)).

RCC § 22E-4113. Sale of Firearm Without a License.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the sale of a firearm without a license offense for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The revised statute replaces D.C. Code § 22-4509 (Dealers of weapons to be licensed).

Paragraph (a)(1) applies to retail dealers. Subparagraph (a)(1)(A) requires that a retail dealer knowingly sell, expose for sale, or possess with intent to sell a firearm. "Sells" is an undefined term, intended to include any exchanging of pistol for monetary remuneration. The terms "possess" and "firearm" are defined in RCC § 22E-701. Subsection (a) specifies that a "knowingly" culpable mental state applies, a term defined in RCC § 22E-206 which, applied here, requires that the accused must be practically certain that they are selling, exposing for sale, or possessing with intent to sell a firearm. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, subparagraph (a)(1)(B) requires that a retail dealer also know—that is, be practically certain—that they are not licensed to sell, expose for sale, or possess with intent to sell a firearm.

Paragraph (a)(2) applies to wholesalers. Paragraph (a)(2) requires that a wholesale dealer not sell, expose for sale, or possess with intent to sell a firearm to someone other than a licensed dealer licensed under RCC § 22E-4114. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, subparagraph (a)(1)(B) requires that a retail dealer also know—that is, be practically certain—that they are selling, exposing for sale, or possessing with intent to sell. The person must also be practically certain that the item is a firearm. The person must also be practically certain that the purchaser is not a dealer licensed under RCC § 22E-4114.

Subsection (b) provides the penalty for the revised offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.]

Subsection (c) cross-references applicable definitions in the RCC.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised sale of a firearm without a license offense clearly changes current District law in one main way.

The revised statute applies to all firearms. Current D.C. Code § 22-4509 restricts the sale of any "pistol, machine gun, sawed-off shotgun, or blackjack." In contrast, the revised statute does not include address sales of blackjacks but does address sales of all firearms. There is no clear rationale for not including long guns such as rifles and shotguns. There is also no clear rationale for including blackjacks, which bear a closer relationship to blunt force weapons, such as billy clubs, slungshots, sand clubs, sandbags, than to firearms. This change improves the consistency of the revised statutes and eliminates and unnecessary gap in liability.

Beyond this change to current District law, two other aspects of the revised statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised provision clarifies that the statute establishes a criminal offense and is not merely a civil provision. Current D.C. Code § 22-4509 does not itself provide a criminal penalty, however, D.C. Code § 22-4510 cross-references § 22-4509 and states that a breach "shall be subject to forfeiture and the licensee subject to punishment as provided in this chapter." D.C. Code § 22-4515 provides a criminal penalty for "any violation of any provision of this chapter." The revised statute more establishes an offense instead of a civil provision. This change clarifies the revised statute.

Second, the revised statute requires that the accused act at least knowingly with respect to each element of the revised offense. The current statute is silent as to the applicable culpable mental state requirement, and no case law exists on point. Applying a knowledge culpable mental state requirement to statutory elements that distinguish innocent from criminal behavior is a well-established practice in American jurisprudence.[1] This change clarifies the revised statutes.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

First, the revised code defines "firearm," "assault weapon," "machine gun," "sawed-off shotgun," and "possession" in its general part.[2] The D.C. Code does not codify a definition of possession, although it is an element of several property, drug, and weapon offenses. Instead, parties rely on District case law concerning what evidence is or is not sufficient to establish that the accused actually or constructively or jointly possessed an unlawful item.[3] The RCC definition of "possession,"[4] with the requirement in the offense that the possession be "knowing,"[5] matches the meaning of possession in current DCCA case law.[6] The RCC definition of possession improves the consistency of possessory elements throughout revised statutes.

---

[1] There is a presumption that the legislature intends to require a defendant to possess a degree of knowledge sufficient to "mak[e] a person legally responsible for the consequences of his or her act or omission" regarding "each of the statutory elements that criminalize otherwise innocent conduct," even when the legislature does not specify any scienter in the statutory text. Rehaif v. United States, 17-9560, 2019 WL 2552487, at *3 (U.S. June 21, 2019) (citing United States v. X-Citement Video, Inc., 513 U. S. 64, 72 (1994); Morissette v. United States, 342 U. S. 246, 256–258 (1952); Staples v. United States, 511 U. S. 600, 606 (1994); Black's Law Dictionary 1547 (10th ed. 2014)); see also Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2009 (2015) ("[O]ur cases have explained that a defendant generally must 'know the facts that make his conduct fit the definition of the offense,' even if he does not know that those facts give rise to a crime." (Internal citation omitted)).

[2] RCC § 22E-202.

[3] See Criminal Jury Instructions for the District of Columbia Instruction 3.104 (2018).

[4] RCC § 22E-701.

[5] RCC § 22E-206.

[6] See United States v. Hubbard, 429 A.2d 1334, 1338 (D.C. 1981) ("Actual possession has been defined as the ability of a person to knowingly exercise direct physical custody or control over the property in question. See United States v. Spears, 145 U.S.App.D.C. 284, 293, 449 F.2d 946, 955 (1971); Spencer v. United States, 73 U.S.App.D.C. 98, 99, 116 F.2d 801, 802 (1940)."); see also Rivas v. U.S., 783 A.2d 125, 128 (D.C. 2001) (en banc) ("[I]n…constructive possession cases, there must be something more in the totality of the circumstances–a word or deed, a relationship or other probative factor–that, considered in conjunction with the evidence of proximity and knowledge, proves beyond a reasonable doubt that the passenger intended to exercise dominion or control over the drugs, and was not a mere bystander." (Emphasis in original.)); Guishard v. United States, 669 A.2d 1306, 1312 (D.C. 1995) ("To obtain a conviction based on a theory of constructive possession, the government must prove that the defendant knew of the location of the contraband, that he had the ability to exercise dominion and control over it, and that he 'intended to guide [its] destiny.' Speight v. United States, 599 A.2d 794, 796 (D.C.1991); In re

Second, the revised offense does not include a statement of jurisdiction. Current D.C. Code § 22-4509 restricts the sale of firearms "within the District of Columbia." This statement is superfluous and may cause confusion as to whether other offenses must also occur within the District's boundaries. The revised offense removed this phrase to improve the clarity of the revised offense.

T.M., 577 A.2d 1149, 1151–1152 n. 5 (D.C.1990); Bernard v. United States, 575 A.2d 1191, 1195–1196 (D.C.1990).").

RCC § 22E-4114. Civil Provisions for Licenses of Firearms Dealers.

Explanatory Note and Relation to Current District Law. This section establishes the civil provisions for licenses of firearms dealers for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). Together with RCC § 22E-4115, the revised statute replaces D.C. Code § 22-4510 (Licenses of weapons dealers).

The revised civil provisions for licenses of firearms dealers clearly changes current District law in five main ways.

First, the revised statute regulates all firearms. Current D.C. Code § 22-4510 restricts the sale of any "pistol, machine gun, sawed-off shotgun, or blackjack." In contrast, the revised statute does not include address sales of blackjacks, but does address transfers of all firearms. There is no clear rationale for not including long guns such as rifles and shotguns. There is also no clear rationale for including blackjacks, which bear a closer relationship to blunt force weapons, such as billy clubs, slungshots, sand clubs, sandbags, than to firearms. This change improves the consistency of the revised statutes and eliminates and unnecessary gap in liability.

Second, paragraph (b)(4) of the revised offense restricts the sale of an assault weapon, machine gun, or sawed-off shotgun. Current D.C. Code § 22-4510(a)(3) provides that "No machine gun, sawed-off shotgun, or blackjack shall be sold to any person other than the persons designated in § 22-4514…" The revised statute does not include address sales of blackjacks, but does address sales of assault weapons,[1] which—like machine guns and sawed-off shotguns—are prohibited as contraband under RCC § 22E-4101, Possession of a Prohibited Weapon or Accessory. This change improves the consistency of the revised statutes and eliminates and unnecessary gap in liability.

Third, the revised statute includes a cross-reference to RCC § 22E-4105, Possession of a Firearm by an Unauthorized Person. Current D.C. Code § 22-4507 cross-references § 22-4503, Unlawful possession of firearm. In contrast, the revised code replaces the reference to current D.C. Code § 22-4503 with the RCC version of that offense. However, each change in District law effected by RCC § 22E-4105, Possession of a Firearm by an Unauthorized Person, consequently affects the scope of the revised unlawful sale of a pistol offense. These changes improve the consistency and proportionality of the revised offenses.

Fourth, the revised statute replaces the word "business" with the phrase "firearm sales." Current D.C. Code § 22-4510(a)(1) states, "The business shall be carried on only in the building designated in the license." The word "business" is not defined in the statute and District case law has not addressed its meaning. Read literally, "business" may be understood to include work unrelated to firearm transactions, such as accounting, marketing, and banking. In contrast, the revised statute limits only the sales to the physical confines of the building designated in the license. This change clarifies and may improve the proportionality of the revised statute.

[1] The term "assault weapon" has the meaning specified in D.C. Code § 7-2501.01.

Fifth, the revised statute does not require a firearms dealer to record a purchaser's color. Current D.C. Code § 22-4510(a)(5) requires a firearms dealer to record this information. In contrast, the revised statute does not include "color," which is a protected trait under the District's Human Rights Act.[2] This change improves the consistency of the revised statutes.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

First, the revised statute defines the terms "assault weapon," "building," "firearm," "imitation firearm," "machine gun," "manufacturer," "possess," and "sawed-off shotgun," using standardized definitions in current law and the RCC. The revised statute also updates the phrase "Chief of Police for the District of Columbia" with "Chief of the Metropolitan Police Department," consistent with more recent provisions in current law and in the RCC.

Second, the revised statute uses the phrase "clearly and conspicuously displayed" instead of "displayed on the premises where it can be read," consistent with more recent provisions in current law and in the RCC.[3] These changes clarify the revised statute and improve the consistency of the revised code.

Third, the revised statute replaces the word "book" with the phrase "in a form proscribed by the Mayor," to make clear that electronic records may be used. This change clarifies the revised statute.

[2] D.C. Code § 2-1401.01 et. seq.
[3] See RCC §§ 7-2502.15(a)(1)(C); 22E-4102(a)(2)(C)(ii).

RCC § 22E-4115. Unlawful Sale of a Firearm by a Licensed Dealer.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the unlawful sale of a firearm by a licensed dealer offense for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). Together with RCC § 22E-4114, the revised statute replaces D.C. Code § 22-4510 (Licenses of weapons dealers).

Paragraph (a)(1) specifies that the revised statute applies to anyone who is a dealer licensed under RCC § 22E-4114. Paragraph (a)(1) uses the term "in fact" to specify that there is no culpable mental state required as to whether the person has a dealer's license.[1]

Paragraph (a)(2) requires that a dealer recklessly violate one or more of the licensure requirements in RCC § 22E-4114(b). "Reckless" is a defined term,[2] which, applied here, means the person must consciously disregard a substantial risk that their conduct violates a licensure requirement. The risk must be of such a nature and degree that, considering the nature of and motivation for the person's conduct and the circumstances the person is aware of, the person's conscious disregard of that risk is a gross deviation from the ordinary standard of conduct.[3]

Subsection (b) provides the penalty for the revised offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.]

Subsection (c) cross-references applicable definitions in the RCC.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised unlawful sale of a firearm by a licensed dealer statute does not clearly change current District law, however two aspects of the revised statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised statute requires that the accused act at least recklessly with respect to violating a licensure requirement. Current D.C. Code § 22-4510(a)(3) requires that a person have "reasonable cause to believe" that the purchaser is not of sound mind, prohibited from possessing a firearm under § 22-4503, or under 21 years of age. Other provisions in the current statute do not specify a requisite mental state and District case law has not addressed the issue. To resolve this ambiguity, the revised statute applies the RCC's standard mental state definition of recklessness[4] which, applied here, requires that a person consciously disregard a substantial risk that they are engaging in the prohibited conduct and that the conduct violates the District's licensing rules. The revised civil provisions for licenses of firearms dealers no longer include the phrase "reasonable cause to believe."[5] This change improves the consistency of the revised offenses.

Second, the revised statute holds an actor strictly liable as to the existence of a dealer's license. Current D.C. Code § 22-4510 does not specify any culpable mental states. District case law has not interpreted the statute's meaning. The revised statute nevertheless holds a person strictly liable as to this offense element. Although applying strict liability to statutory elements that distinguish innocent from criminal behavior is strongly

[1] RCC § 22E-207.
[2] RCC § 22E-206.
[3] RCC § 22E-206.
[4] RCC § 22E-206.
[5] RCC § 22E-4114.

disfavored by courts[6] and legal experts[7] for any non-regulatory crimes, the unlawful sale of a firearm by a licensed dealer offense is largely regulatory in nature and requires recklessness as to the violation of a licensure requirement. This change clarifies the revised statutes and may eliminate an unnecessary gap in law.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

First, the revised provision clarifies that the statute establishes a criminal offense and is not merely a civil provision. Current D.C. Code § 22-4510 does not itself provide a criminal penalty, however, it states that a licensee shall be "subject to punishment as provided in this chapter." D.C. Code § 22-4515 provides a criminal penalty for "any violation of any provision of this chapter." The revised statute establishes an offense instead of a civil provision. This change clarifies the revised statute.

Second, the revised statute does not provide liability for violations of D.C. Code § 22-4509. Current D.C. Code § 22-4510 cross-references § 22-4509 and states that a breach "shall be subject to forfeiture and the licensee subject to punishment as provided in this chapter." The revised code replaces § 22-4509 with RCC § 22-4112. This change logically reorders and clarifies the revised statutes.

Second, the revised offense does not include a statement of jurisdiction. Current D.C. Code § 22-4510 restricts the sale of firearms "within the District of Columbia." This statement is superfluous and may cause confusion as to whether other offenses must also occur within the District's boundaries. The revised offense removed this phrase to improve the clarity of the revised offense.

---

[6] Elonis v. United States," 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2010, 192 L.Ed.2d 1 (2015) ("When interpreting federal criminal statutes that are silent on the required mental state, we read into the statute 'only that mens rea which is necessary to separate wrongful conduct from 'otherwise innocent conduct.'" Carter v. United States, 530 U.S. 255, 269, 120 S.Ct. 2159, 147 L.Ed.2d 203 (2000) (quoting X–Citement Video, 513 U.S., at 72, 115 S.Ct. 464).").

[7] See § 5.5(c) Pros and cons of strict-liability crimes, 1 Subst. Crim. L. § 5.5(c) (3d ed.) ("For the most part, the commentators have been critical of strict-liability crimes. 'The consensus can be summarily stated: to punish conduct without reference to the actor's state of mind is both inefficacious and unjust. It is inefficacious because conduct unaccompanied by an awareness of the factors making it criminal does not mark the actor as one who needs to be subjected to punishment in order to deter him or others from behaving similarly in the future, nor does it single him out as a socially dangerous individual who needs to be incapacitated or reformed. It is unjust because the actor is subjected to the stigma of a criminal conviction without being morally blameworthy. Consequently, on either a preventive or retributive theory of criminal punishment, the criminal sanction is inappropriate in the absence of mens rea.'") (quoting Packer, Mens Rea and the Supreme Court, 1962 Sup.Ct.Rev. 107, 109).

RCC § 22E-4116. Use of False Information for Purchase or Licensure of a Firearm.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the use of false information for purchase or licensure of a firearm offense for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The revised statute replaces D.C. Code § 22-4511 (False information in purchase of weapons).

Subsection (a) specifies that a "knowingly" culpable mental state applies, a term defined in RCC § 22E-206 which, applied here, requires that the accused must be practically certain that they are giving false information or false evidence. Paragraph (a)(1) requires the false information or evidence be given to purchase a firearm. "Purchase" is an undefined term, intended to include any exchanging of firearm for monetary remuneration. The term "firearm" is defined in RCC § 22E-701. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, paragraph (a)(1) requires that the person also know—that is, be practically certain—that they are giving the information in order to purchase a firearm.

Alternatively, paragraph (a)(2) requires the false information or evidence be given to apply for a license to carry a pistol. Paragraph (a)(2) requires that a person know—that is, be practically certain—that they are giving the information in order to apply for a license to carry a pistol under RCC § 22E-4110. The term "pistol" has the meaning specified in D.C. Code § 7-2501.01.

Subsection (b) provides the penalty for the revised offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.]

Subsection (c) cross-references applicable definitions in the RCC.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised use of false information for purchase or licensure of a firearm offense clearly changes current District law in one main way.

The revised statute applies to all firearms. Current D.C. Code § 22-4511 prohibits using false information to purchase "a machine gun, sawed-off shotgun, or blackjack." In contrast, the revised statute does not include address purchases of blackjacks, but does address purchases of all firearms. There is no clear rationale for not including other firearms, such as pistols, rifles, and shotguns. There is also no clear rationale for including blackjacks, which bear a closer relationship to blunt force weapons, such as billy clubs, slungshots, sand clubs, sandbags, than to firearms. This change improves the consistency of the revised statutes and eliminates and unnecessary gap in liability.

Beyond this change to current District law, two other aspects of the revised statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised provision clarifies that the statute establishes a criminal offense and is not merely a civil provision. Current D.C. Code § 22-4509 does not itself provide a criminal penalty, however, D.C. Code § 22-4515 provides a criminal penalty for "any violation of any provision of this chapter." The revised statute establishes the statute as an offense instead of a civil provision. This change clarifies the revised statute.

Second, the revised statute requires that the accused act at least knowingly with respect to each element of the revised offense. The current statute is silent as to the applicable culpable mental state requirement, and no case law exists on point. Applying a knowledge culpable mental state requirement to statutory elements that distinguish innocent from criminal behavior is a well-established practice in American jurisprudence.[1] This change clarifies the revised statutes.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

The revised statute defines the terms "firearm" and "pistol" using standardized definitions in current law and the RCC. These changes clarify the revised statute and improve the consistency of the revised code.

Second, the revised offense does not include a statement of jurisdiction. Current D.C. Code § 22-4511 restricts the sale of firearms "within the District of Columbia." This statement is superfluous and may cause confusion as to whether other offenses must also occur within the District's boundaries. The revised offense removed this phrase to improve the clarity of the revised offense.

[1] There is a presumption that the legislature intends to require a defendant to possess a degree of knowledge sufficient to "mak[e] a person legally responsible for the consequences of his or her act or omission" regarding "each of the statutory elements that criminalize otherwise innocent conduct," even when the legislature does not specify any scienter in the statutory text. Rehaif v. United States, 17-9560, 2019 WL 2552487, at *3 (U.S. June 21, 2019) (citing United States v. X-Citement Video, Inc., 513 U. S. 64, 72 (1994); Morissette v. United States, 342 U. S. 246, 256–258 (1952); Staples v. United States, 511 U. S. 600, 606 (1994); Black's Law Dictionary 1547 (10th ed. 2014)); see also Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2009 (2015) ("[O]ur cases have explained that a defendant generally must 'know the facts that make his conduct fit the definition of the offense,' even if he does not know that those facts give rise to a crime." (Internal citation omitted)).

RCC § 22E-4117. Civil Provisions for Taking and Destruction of Dangerous Articles.

Explanatory Note and Relation to Current District Law. This section establishes the civil provisions for taking and destruction of dangerous articles for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The revised statute replaces D.C. Code § 22-4517 (Dangerous articles; definition; taking and destruction; procedure).

The revised civil provisions for taking and destruction of dangerous articles statute does not clearly change current District law, however four aspects of the revised statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised provision clarifies that the statute operates as a civil provision and does not create a misdemeanor offense. Current D.C. Code § 22-4517 does not explicitly prohibit or affirmatively require any particular conduct. However, § 22-4515 provides a criminal penalty for "any violation of any provision of this chapter." The revised statute establishes the statute as civil provisions instead of an offense. This change clarifies the revised statute.

Second, the revised statute updates the definition of "dangerous article" to align with the definitions in the revised criminal code. Current D.C. Code § 22-4517 defines the term "dangerous article" to mean "(1) Any weapon such as a pistol, machine gun, sawed-off shotgun, blackjack, slingshot, sandbag, or metal knuckles; or (2) Any instrument, attachment, or appliance for causing the firing of any firearms to be silent or intended to lessen or muffle the noise of the firing of any firearms." The term "weapon" is not defined in the statute and District case law has not addressed its meaning. In contrast, the revised statute defines the term "dangerous article" to include a firearm,[1] a restricted explosive,[2] firearm silencer, a bump stock,[3] or a large-capacity ammunition feeding device.[4] Although bump stocks and large-capacity ammunition feeding devices do not necessarily constitute weapons, like silencers they are designed to make firearms more lethal. The phrase "any weapon such as" in current District law may be broader or narrower than the revised definition. This change clarifies and improves the consistency of the revised statutes.

Third, the revised statute authorizes both prosecutors' offices to decide when evidence is destroyed. The current statute refers only to the United States Attorney for the District of Columbia. However, the Attorney General for the District of Columbia serves a similar function in other cases. This change improves the completeness of the revised statute.

Fourth, the revised statute uses the RCC's defined term "law enforcement agency" instead of the phrase "law enforcing agency," which is undefined. This change clarifies the revised statute.

[1] Defined in RCC § 22E-701.
[2] Defined in RCC § 22E-701.
[3] Defined in RCC § 22E-701.
[4] Defined in RCC § 22E-701.

RCC § 22E-4118. Exclusions from Liability for Weapon Offenses.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes exclusions from liability for specified weapons offenses in the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The provision excludes liability for legal duties and activities that necessarily require possessing or carrying dangerous weapons. The revised statute replaces D.C. Code §§ 22-4504.01 (Authority to carry firearm in certain places and for certain purposes) and 22-4505 (Exceptions to § 22-4504). The revised statute also effectively replaces the exclusion clauses within D.C. Code §§ 7-2502.15(c) (Possession of stun guns);[1] 7-2506.01(a)(1), (2), and (5) (Persons permitted to possess ammunition); 22-4514(a) (Possession of certain dangerous weapons prohibited; exceptions);[2] and 22-4502.01(c) (Gun Free Zones).[3]

Subsection (a) specifies that the exclusions from liability apply only to certain offenses in Chapter 41 of Title 22E. The exclusions apply to possession of an unregistered firearm, destructive device, or ammunition;[4] possession of a stun gun;[5] carrying an air or spring gun;[6] carrying a pistol in an unlawful manner;[7] possession of a prohibited weapon or accessory,[8] and carrying a dangerous weapon.[9] The exclusions do not apply to unlawful storage of a firearm;[10] possession of a dangerous weapon with intent to commit crime;[11] possession of a dangerous weapon during a crime;[12] possession of a firearm by an unauthorized person;[13] negligent discharge of firearm;[14] alteration of a firearm

[1] "…[E]xcept a law enforcement officer as defined in § 7-2509.01."
[2] "…[M]achine guns, or sawed-off shotgun, knuckles, and blackjacks may be possessed by the members of the Army, Navy, Air Force, or Marine Corps of the United States, the National Guard, or Organized Reserves when on duty, the Post Office Department or its employees when on duty, marshals, sheriffs, prison or jail wardens, or their deputies, policemen, or other duly-appointed law enforcement officers, including any designated civilian employee of the Metropolitan Police Department, or officers or employees of the United States duly authorized to carry such weapons, banking institutions, public carriers who are engaged in the business of transporting mail, money, securities, or other valuables, wholesale dealers and retail dealers licensed under § 22-4510."
[3] "The provisions of this section shall not apply to…members of the Army, Navy, Air Force, or Marine Corps of the United States; the National Guard or Organized Reserves when on duty; the Post Office Department or its employees when on duty; marshals, sheriffs, prison, or jail wardens, or their deputies; policemen or other duly-appointed law enforcement officers; officers or employees of the United States duly authorized to carry such weapons; banking institutions; public carriers who are engaged in the business of transporting mail, money, securities, or other valuables; and licensed wholesale or retail dealers."
[4] RCC § 7-2502.01A.
[5] RCC § 7-2502.15.
[6] RCC § 7-2502.17.
[7] RCC § 7-2509.06A.
[8] RCC § 22E-4101.
[9] RCC § 22E-4102.
[10] RCC § 7-2507.02A.
[11] RCC § 22E-4103.
[12] RCC § 22E-4104.
[13] RCC § 22E-4105.
[14] RCC § 22E-4106.

identification mark,[15] or any other weapons offense. However, other exclusions under federal law may apply to these latter offenses.[16]

Subsection (b) excepts from liability 10 classes of professionals who handle dangerous weapons as a part of their work. Subsection (b) specifies "in fact," a defined term in RCC § 22E-207 that indicates there is no culpable mental state requirement as to a given element. Per the rules of construction in RCC § 22E-207, the term "in fact" specified in subsection (b) applies to all requirements of the exclusion in paragraphs (b)(1) through (b)(10), and there is no culpable mental state requirement for these requirements.

Paragraph (b)(1) excludes liability for a member of the Army, Navy, Air Force, or Marine Corps of the United States.[17] Paragraph (b)(2) excludes liability for a member of the National Guard or Organized Reserves when on duty.[18] Paragraph (b)(3) excludes liability for a qualified law enforcement officer as defined in 18 U.S.C. § 926B.[19] Paragraph (b)(4) excludes liability for a qualified retired law enforcement officer as defined in 18 U.S.C. § 926C, who carries a concealed pistol that is registered under D.C. Code § 7-2502.07 in a location that is conveniently accessible and within reach.[20] Paragraph (b)(5) excludes liability for an on-duty licensed special police officer or campus police officer, who possesses or carries a firearm registered under D.C. Code § 7-2502.07 in accordance with D.C. Code § 5-129.02 and all rules promulgated under that section.[21] Paragraph (b)(6) excludes liability for an on-duty director, deputy director, officer, or employee of the District of Columbia Department of Corrections who possesses or carries a firearm registered under D.C. Code § 7-2502.07.[22] Paragraph (b)(7) excludes liability for an employee of the District or federal government, who is on duty and acting within the scope of those duties.[23] Paragraph (b)(8) excludes liability for a person who is lawfully engaging in the business of manufacturing, repairing, or dealing the weapon involved in the offense.[24] The word "lawfully" should be construed to require that the person is authorized

---

[15] RCC § 22E-4107.
[16] See, e.g., 18 U.S.C. §§ 926A, B, and C.
[17] D.C. Code §§ 22-4514(a); 22-4502.01(c); 22-4505(a)(3).
[18] D.C. Code §§ 22-4514(a); 22-4502.01(c); 22-4505(a)(3).
[19] See D.C. Code §§ 7-2502.15(c); 22-4514(a); 22-4502.01(c); 22-4505(a)(1) and (3) (IRS and OIG agents appear to meet the definition of a "qualified law enforcement officer" in 18 U.S.C. 926B(c)).
[20] D.C. Code § 22-4505(b).
[21] D.C. Code §§ 7-2502.15(c); 22-4514(a) ("other duly-appointed law enforcement officers"); 22-4505(a)(2).
[22] D.C. Code §§ 22-4514(a) ("prison or jail wardens, or their deputies"); 22-4502.01(c) ("prison or jail wardens, or their deputies"); 22-4505(a)(1) ("prison or jail wardens, or their deputies").
[23] See D.C. Code §§ 7-2506.01(a)(2) ("an officer, agent, or employee of the District of Columbia or the United States of America, on duty and acting within the scope of his duties"); 22-4514(a) ("any designated civilian employee of the Metropolitan Police Department, or officers or employees of the United States duly authorized to carry such weapons"); 22-4502.01(c) ("officers or employees of the United States duly authorized to carry such weapons"); 22-4505(a)(4) ("Officers or employees of the United States duly authorized to carry a concealed pistol"). For example, an Assistant United States Attorney may inspect or transport a weapon to court as evidence in a criminal trial.
[24] D.C. Code §§ 7-2506.01(a)(1) ("a licensed dealer pursuant to subchapter IV of this unit"); 22-4505(a)(5) ("Any person engaged in the business of manufacturing, repairing, or dealing in firearms, or the agent or representative of any such person having in his or her possession, using, or carrying a pistol in the usual or ordinary course of such business").

by law to manufacture, repair, or sell weapons. Paragraph (b)(9) excludes liability for a person who is lawfully acting as a public carrier.[25] The word "lawfully" should be construed to require that the person is authorized by law to ship or deliver weapons.[26] Paragraph (b)(10) excludes liability for a person who is acting within the scope of authority granted by the Metropolitan Police Department[27] or a competent court.[28]

Subsection (c) applies to registered firearm owners. Subsection (c) specifies "in fact," a defined term in RCC § 22E-207 that indicates there is no culpable mental state requirement as to a given element. Per the rules of construction in RCC § 22E-207, the term "in fact" specified in subsection (c) applies to all requirements of the exclusion in paragraphs (c)(1), (c)(2), and its subparagraphs and subparagraphs, and there is no culpable mental state requirement for these requirements.

Subparagraph (c)(2)(A) provides that a registered owner may carry their firearm or ammunition where the firearm is registered.[29] Subparagraph (c)(2)(B) provides that a registered owner may carry their firearm or ammunition in accordance with RCC § 22E-4109 to or from their home or business,[30] a place of sale,[31] a place of repair,[32] a training class,[33] or a recreational activity.[34] Subparagraph (c)(2)(C) provides that a registered owner may carry their firearm while transporting it for any other lawful purpose expressly authorized by a District or federal statute, provided that it is transported in accordance with the requirements of that statute.[35]

Subsection (d) applies to any person who is participating in a class taught by a firearm instructor.[36] Subsection (d) specifies "in fact," a defined term in RCC § 22E-207 that indicates there is no culpable mental state requirement as to a given element, here the requirements in subsection (d). The term "firearm instructor" has the meaning specified in D.C. Code § 7-2501.01.

Subsection (e) cross-references applicable definitions in the RCC and the D.C. Code.

---

[25] D.C. Code §§ 22-4514(a); 22-4502.01(c) ("the Post Office Department or its employees when on duty… [or] public carriers who are engaged in the business of transporting mail, money, securities, or other valuables").

[26] For example, if a particular FedEx store is out of compliance with the noise regulations in 20 DCMR § 2701, the exclusion from liability nevertheless extends to each carrier in the store.

[27] For example, MPD may authorize a defense investigator to view a weapon or authorize a fingerprint expert to inspect a weapon at its evidence control office.

[28] See, e.g., Model Penal Code § 3.03(1)(c).

[29] D.C. Code § 22-4504.01(1). In Heller I, the United States Supreme Court explained that it violates the Second Amendment to forbid carrying a lawful firearm in the home for the purpose of immediate self-defense. 554 U.S. 570 (2008).

[30] D.C. Code §§ 22-4504.01(1) and (3); 22-4505(a)(6).

[31] See D.C. Code § 22-4505(a)(6) ("place of purchase"). The phrase "place of sale" includes the place where the registrant bought the firearm and the place where the registrant sells the firearm to a licensed dealer, pursuant to D.C. Code § 7-2505.02.

[32] D.C. Code § 22-4505(a)(6).

[33] D.C. Code § 22-4505(c).

[34] D.C. Code §§ 22-4504.01(2); 22-4505(a)(6).

[35] D.C. Code §§ 22-4504.01(4); 22-4504.02(a).

[36] D.C. Code § 7-2506.01(a)(5).

Relation to Current District Law. The revised exclusions from liability for weapons offenses provision clearly changes current District law in six main ways.

First, the revised statute applies standardized exclusions from liability to all possessory weapons offenses. Under current law, there is considerable inconsistency between the exclusionary provisions. The following three examples provide an illustrative, though inexhaustive, list. First, a person who participates in a firearms training and safety class is not liable for transporting a registered firearm to or from the class[37] and is not liable for possessing ammunition during the class,[38] however, there is no exception in current law for possessing a firearm during a firearm training and safety class. Second, a member of the military avoids prosecution for possession of an assault weapon, machine gun, or sawed-off shotgun,[39] however, there is no military exception for possession of a large-capacity ammunition feeding device.[40] Third, consistent with 18 U.S.C. 926C, D.C. Code § 22-4505(b) provides that a retired Metropolitan Police Officer who carries a registered firearm is not liable for carrying a dangerous weapon, however, D.C. Code § 22-4514(a) does not include a similar exception for possession of a prohibited weapon. In contrast, the revised statute applies identical exclusions to all weapons offenses that do not involve some other criminal intent or harm. This change logically reorders the revised statutes and improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised code.

Second, the revised statute excludes liability for a public carrier only if that person is acting within the scope of their professional duties. Current D.C. Code §§ 22-4515(a) (Possession of certain dangerous weapons prohibited; exceptions) and 22-4502.01(c) (Gun Free Zones) exclude from liability "the Post Office Department or its employees when on duty" as well as "public carriers who are engaged in the business of transporting mail, money, securities, or other valuables." The Post Office Department was subsequently abolished and all its functions, powers, and duties were transferred to the United States Postal Service.[41] Although a carrier should not be liable for possession of an object it has been hired to ship and deliver, there is no clear rationale for a blanket exception that allows a postal worker to carry their own assault weapon or machine gun while on duty. The revised statute specifies that the exclusion applies only if the person is lawfully engaging in the business of shipping or delivering the weapon involved in the offense. This change eliminates an unnecessary gap in liability.

Third, the revised statute narrows the exclusion from liability for the subclass of law enforcement officers who do not have arrest authority. Current D.C. Code §§ 22-4514(a); 22-4502.01(c); and 22-4505(a)(1) exclude from liability "prison or jail wardens, or their deputies." District case law has held that a Department of Corrections employee may carry a firearm whether on or off duty.[42] Current D.C. Code §§ 7-2502.15(c)

[37] See, e.g., D.C. Code § 22-4504.02(a); 22-4505(c).
[38] D.C. Code § 7-2506.01(a)(5).
[39] D.C. Code § 22-4514(a).
[40] D.C. Code § 7-2506.01(b).
[41] § 4(a) of the Act of August 12, 1970, 84 Stat. 773, Pub.
[42] See United States v. Pritchett, 470 F.2d 455 (D.C. Cir. 1972).

(concerning possession of stun guns);[43] 22-4514(a) (concerning possession of a prohibited weapon);[44] and 22-4505(a)(2) (concerning carrying a dangerous weapon)[45] each include an exclusion for special police officers and campus police officers. D.C. Code § 22-4505(a)(2) specifies that its exclusion applies only to special police officers and campus police officers who are carrying a firearm and only if they are acting within the scope of their deputization.[46] Although an officer should not be liable for possession of a service weapon while on duty, there is no clear rationale for a blanket exception that allows a special police officer or Department of Corrections ("DOC") employee to carry their own firearm, prohibited weapon, or dangerous weapon under other circumstances. The revised statute effectively limits special police officers, campus police officer, and DOC employees to the firearms they are authorized to use in the course of their duties. This change reduces an unnecessary gap in liability.

Fourth, the revised statute excludes from liability any person who is acting within the scope of authority granted by the Metropolitan Police Department ("MPD") or a competent court. Current D.C. Code §§ 22-4514(a) and 22-4502.01 exclude liability for "any designated civilian employee of the Metropolitan Police Department." Although an unsworn administrative staff member may be tasked with ordering weapons or organizing inventory, there is no clear rationale for fully exempting—while on duty and off duty—approximately 600 employees who serve a variety of functions including software development, policy writing, and community outreach. On the other hand, this provision appears to be underinclusive, failing to reach non-employees (e.g., firearms instructors, forensic experts, defense investigators) who are temporarily authorized to handle weapons at a firing range or through the evidence control branch. The revised provision specifies that any person who is authorized by the police chief or a court to possess or carry a weapon may not be prosecuted for any offense listed in subsection (a). This change eliminates an unnecessary gap in liability and improves the proportionality of the revised offenses.

Fifth, the exclusion for manufacturing, repairing, or dealing applies to all weapons, not only firearms. D.C. Code § 22-4505(a)(5) provides that §§ 22-4504(a) and 22-4504(a-1) do not apply to "[a]ny person engaged in the business of manufacturing, repairing, or dealing in firearms, or the agent or representative of any such person having in his or her possession, using, or carrying a pistol in the usual or ordinary course of such business." There is no similar exclusion under current law for the producers and retailers of other weapons, such as stun guns or ammunition. In contrast, the revised statute provides a safe harbor for anyone who is "lawfully engaging in the business of manufacturing, repairing, [43] D.C. Code § 7-2502.15(c) excludes liability for "a law enforcement officer as defined in § 7-2509.01." The definition that appears in § 7-2509.01 includes "a special police officer appointed pursuant to § 5-129.02, and a campus and a university special police officer appointed pursuant to the College and University Campus Security Amendment Act of 1995, effective October 18, 1995 (D.C. Law 11-63; 6A DCMR § 1200 et seq.)." However, 6A DCMR § 1200 was repealed on September 6, 2016.

[44] D.C. Code § 22-4514(a) excludes "other duly-appointed law enforcement officers."
[45] D.C. Code § 22-4505(a)(2) excludes "Special police officers and campus police officers who carry a firearm in accordance with D.C. Official Code § 5-129.02, and rules promulgated pursuant to that section."
[46] Timus v. United States, 406 A.2d 1269, 1272 (D.C. 1979) (explaining a special police officer will be considered a policeman or law enforcement officer only to the extent that he acts in conformance with the regulations governing special officers).

or dealing the weapon involved in the offense." This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised offenses.

Sixth, the revised statute does not provide an exclusion for bankers. Current D.C. Code §§ 22-4514(a) and 22-4502.01 explicitly exclude "banking institutions." There is no clear rationale for the categorical exception for banks. Where a bank or other public storage provider permits a customer to keep a weapon a safe deposit box, the institution does not meet the revised definition of "possession," which requires the ability and desire to exercise control over the object and to guide its destiny.[47] The revised statute eliminates the exception for banking institutions and thereby eliminates an unnecessary gap in liability.

Beyond these six changes, six other aspects of the revised statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised statute uses standardized definitions of "qualified law enforcement officer" and "qualified retired law enforcement officer" in Title 18 of the United States Code. Current D.C. Code § 7-2502.15(c), by cross reference to § 7-2509.01, provides an exception for members of a law enforcement agency operating in the District of Columbia. D.C. Code §§ 22-4514(a); 22-4502.01(c); and 22-4505(a)(1) provide an exception for "policemen," an undefined term. D.C. Code § 7-2506.01(a)2) provides an exception for "an officer, agent, or employee of the District of Columbia or the United States of America, on duty and acting within the scope of his duties." D.C. Code § 22-4505(b) provides an exception for retired MPD officers. The definitions of "qualified law enforcement officer" in 18 U.S.C. § 926B and "qualified retired law enforcement officer" in 17 U.S.C. § 926C appear to be broader than District-operating officers but narrower than "policemen." The revised statute aligns the revised statutes with federal law. This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised offenses.

Second, the revised statute includes an exception for DOC employees. D.C. Code §§ 22-4514(a); 22-4502.01(c); and 22-4505(a)(1) provide an exception for "prison or jail wardens, or their deputies." The term "deputy" is not defined in the statute, however, District case law explains that it includes, not only the warden's direct supervisees, but also corrections officers.[48] Case law has not addressed whether other DOC employees, such as administrative staff, are also included. Consistent with the definition of "law enforcement officer" in RCC § 22E-701, the revised statute applies to a "Director, deputy director, officer, or employee of the District of Columbia Department of Corrections." This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised statute.

Third, the revised statute clarifies and possibly narrows the exclusion for transporting a firearm. D.C. Code § 22-4505(a)(6) provides an exception for someone who is transporting a pistol "from the place of purchase to his or her home or place of business or to a place of repair or back to his or her home or place of business or in moving goods from one place of abode or business to another, or to or from any lawful recreational firearm-related activity." The current statutory language does not specify that the pistol must be lawfully purchased or registered. There is no clear rationale for excluding people who purchase firearms illegally from the reach of the carrying a dangerous weapon statute.[49] The current statutory language includes transportation from "place of purchase" but does not mention transportation to a licensed firearms dealer for the purpose of reselling the firearm pursuant to D.C. Code § 7-2505.02.[50] The current statutory language does not define the phrase "moving goods from one place of abode to or business to another." The statute could be read narrowly to mean changing one's residence or business address. Or, the statute could be read broadly to include traveling from one's own residence or business to another person's residence or business. In contrast, the revised exclusion in RCC § 22E-4118(c)(2) applies only to registered owners and only to transportation to or from a place of sale, the person's home or business, a place of repair, a training and safety class, or a lawful recreational firearm-related activity. These changes improve the clarity and consistency of the revised statutes and may eliminate an unnecessary gap in liability.

[47] RCC § 22E-701; see also In re M.I.W., 667 A.2d 573 (D.C. 1995); Guishard v. United States, 669 A.2d 1306, 1312 (D.C. 1995).
[48] United States v. Pritchett, 470 F.2d 455, 456 (D.C. Cir. 1972).

Fourth, the revised statute clarifies that the exclusion only applies to a person who is manufacturing, repairing, or dealing in weapons if that person is doing so lawfully. D.C. Code § 22-4505(a)(5) provides that §§ 22-4504(a) and 22-4504(a-1) do not apply to "[a]ny person engaged in the business of manufacturing, repairing, or dealing in firearms, or the agent or representative of any such person having in his or her possession, using, or carrying a pistol in the usual or ordinary course of such business." District case law has clarified, however, that this exception does not categorically apply to all persons engaged in manufacturing, repairing, or dealing. For this exception to apply the person's activity must be more than a hobby[51] and the conduct in question must coincide with the actual performance of a business duty.[52] To capture the limitations in District case law and ensure only legitimate business activities are excluded, the revised statute requires that the dealer—or the dealer's designee—be "lawfully engaging in the business of manufacturing, repairing, or dealing the weapon involved in the offense." There is no clear rationale for excepting illegal arms dealers from the carrying a dangerous weapon offense. This change clarifies the revised statute and may reduce an unnecessary gap in liability.

Fifth, the revised statute clarifies that a person who may carry or transport a firearm may also carry or transport ammunition for that firearm. D.C. Code § 22-4504.01 begins, "Notwithstanding any other law, a person holding a valid registration for a firearm may carry the firearm…" D.C. Code § 22-4504.02(a) begins, "Any person who is not otherwise

---

[49] In contrast, current D.C. Code § 22-4504.01(4) permits a registrant to carry their firearm "While it is being transported for a lawful purpose as expressly authorized by District or federal statute and in accordance with the requirements of that statute." And, D.C. Code § 22-4504.02(a) more broadly permits any person to "transport a firearm for any lawful purpose from any place where he may lawfully possess and carry the firearm to any other place where he may lawfully possess and carry the firearm." Current D.C. Code § 7-2502.01(b)(3) requires that "possession or control of such firearm is lawful in the jurisdiction in which [the defendant] resides."

[50] But see D.C. Code § 22-4504.02(a), which more broadly permits any person to "transport a firearm for any lawful purpose from any place where he may lawfully possess and carry the firearm to any other place where he may lawfully possess and carry the firearm."

[51] Cormier v. United States, 137 A.2d 212, 215 (D.C. 1957).

[52] Bsharah v. United States, 646 A.2d 993, 998 (D.C. 1994).

prohibited by the law from transporting, shipping, or receiving a firearm shall be permitted to transport a firearm…" There is no clear rationale for failing to include ammunition within the scope of each exclusion. In fact, § 22-4504.01(b)(1) appears to assume that the firearm will be accompanied by ammunition, stating "neither the firearm nor any ammunition being transported shall be readily accessible." However, there is no case law construing this provision. This change clarifies the revised statute and may improve the proportionality of the revised offenses.

Sixth, the revised statute does not contain a specific exclusion for members of an organization duly authorized to purchase or receive weapons from the United States. Current D.C. Code § 22-4505(a)(3) excludes "the regularly enrolled members of any organization duly authorized to purchase or receive such weapons from the United States; provided, that such members are at or are going to or from their places of assembly or target practice." It is not clear who would meet this classification other than members of the military,[53] qualified law enforcement officers as defined in 18 U.S.C. 926B,[54] and persons acting within the acting within the authority of the Chief of Police or a competent court,[55] each of which is excluded under the revised statute. Accordingly, this exception is removed as superfluous. This change improves the logical ordering and clarity of the revised statute and may eliminate an unnecessary gap in liability.

[53] Excepted under RCC § 22E-4118(b)(1).
[54] Excepted under RCC § 22E-4118(b)(3).
[55] Excepted under RCC § 22E-4118(b)(10).

RCC § 22E-4119. Merger of Related Weapons Offenses.

Explanatory Note and Relation to Current District Law. This section establishes a merger provision specifically for weapons offenses in the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The provision limits the number of convictions that can be entered for a single instance of possessing, carrying, and using a weapon.[1] There is no corresponding provision in current District law.

The revised statute tracks the language in the general merger provision of RCC § 22E-214, and specifically requires the sentencing court to follow the procedures in subsections (b) and (c) of RCC § 22E-214. The offenses enumerated in subsection (a) involve similar social harms. Namely, each offense requires that a person possess or carry one or more weapons without permission to do so. The offenses enumerated in subsection (b) are also related by the social harm involved, namely, the possession or carrying of a weapon in order to perpetrate another crime.[2]

The revised statute, by omission, allows for multiple convictions and possible consecutive sentences: unlawful storage of a firearm;[3] carrying a pistol in an unlawful manner;[4] possession of a prohibited weapon or accessory;[5] possession of a firearm by an unauthorized person;[6] negligent discharge of firearm;[7] alteration of a firearm identification mark;[8] and any other offense.

The revised merger of related weapons offenses statute clearly changes current District law in two main ways.

First, under the RCC, a conviction for possession of an unregistered firearm, destructive device, or ammunition will merge with a conviction for other possessory weapons offenses arising out of the same course of conduct. The current D.C. Code does not address merger of these offenses. Under current District law, there are different units of prosecution for possessing than for carrying multiple weapons without permission.[9]

---

[1] The limitation applies to convictions for the enumerated offenses without regard to the theory of liability under which the conviction was obtained. For example, the limitation prevents the court from entering judgments of conviction for possession of a dangerous weapon during a crime and for attempted first degree robbery.

[2] See Hawkins v. United States, 119 A.3d 687, 703 (D.C. 2015) (explaining that carrying a pistol without a license does not merge with possession of a firearm during a crime of violence because the latter does not require proof that the person was unlicensed to carry the weapon).

[3] RCC § 7-2507.02A.

[4] RCC § 7-2509.06A.

[5] RCC § 22E-4101.

[6] RCC § 22E-4105.

[7] RCC § 22E-4106.

[8] RCC § 22E-4107.

[9] Hammond v. United States, 77 A.3d 964, 968 (D.C. 2013) (the unit of prosecution for possessing an unregistered firearm is each weapon); Cormier v. United States, 137 A.2d 212, 217 (D.C.1957) (simultaneously carrying two pistols, each of which was unlicensed, is a single offense); Little v. United States, 709 A.2d 708, 715 (D.C. 1998); see also Headspeth v. Dist. of Columbia, 53 A.3d 304, 307 (D.C. 2012); Chapman v. United States, 493 A.2d 1026 (1985) (permitting the government to charge one count of possession of an unregistered firearm for one gun and one count of carrying pistol without license for another gun possessed at the same time).

However, possession of an unregistered firearm[10] does not merge with carrying a pistol without a license.[11] In contrast, the revised statute merges possession of an unregistered firearm with carrying without a license as both statutes are directed at similar social harms. This change improves the proportionality of the revised statutes.

Second, under the RCC, a conviction for possession of a dangerous weapon with intent to commit crime[12] and a conviction for possession of a dangerous weapon during a crime[13] merge with any offense against persons that accounts for the display or use of a dangerous weapon in its gradation structure. Under current law, a conviction for possession of a prohibited weapon with intent to commit crime ("PPW-b")[14] and a conviction for possession of a firearm during a crime of violence or dangerous crime ("PFCV")[15] do not merge.[16] Further, under current law, a crime of violence that includes as an element possession of a firearm—e.g., armed kidnapping, armed burglary, armed robbery, assault with a dangerous weapon—does not merge with PFCV, even though a person who commits the predicate offense necessarily commits PFCV also.[17] In contrast, the RCC prevents stacking weapons-based penalty enhancements in the Subtitle II with penalties for weapons possession in Chapter 41, as these statutes are directed at similar social harms.[18] This change improves the proportionality of the revised offenses.

[10] D.C. Code § 7-2507.06.
[11] D.C. Code § 22-4504(a); Tyree v. United States, 629 A.2d 20 (D.C. 1993).
[12] RCC § 22E-4103.
[13] RCC § 22E-4104.
[14] D.C. Code § 22-4514(b).
[15] D.C. Code § 22-4504(b).
[16] Bell v. United States, 950 A.2d 56, 73 (D.C. 2008) (finding each offense requires an element that the other does not).
[17] See, Thomas v. United States, 602 A.2d 647 (D.C. 1992); see also Stevenson v. United States, 760 A.2d 1034, 1035 (D.C. 2000) (affirming convictions for armed robbery, armed burglary, and one count of PFCV for each); Sanders v. United States, 809 A.2d 584, 603 (same); Hanna v. United States, 666 A.2d 845, 855 (D.C. 1995).
[18] Consider, for example, a person who carries a concealed, licensed firearm when the person assaults and breaks a person's finger—the firearm never being used or displayed. Under current law, such a person faces a mandatory minimum of 5 years and a maximum penalty of 48 years imprisonment: 3 years for felony assault (D.C. Code § 22-404(a)(2)) based on the harm of breaking the finger, plus an additional 5-15 years for possessing a firearm during the assault (D.C. Code § 22-4504(b)), plus an additional 5-30 years for having a firearm readily available during the robbery (D.C. Code § 22-4502). The liability for committing the offense while armed but not using the firearm is 16 times the maximum penalty a person would otherwise face for the harm done to the victim under D.C. Code § 22-404(a)(2).

RCC § 22E-4120. Endangerment with a Firearm.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the endangerment with a firearm offense for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The offense prohibits knowingly discharging a projectile from a firearm without special permission to do so. The offense does not exist under current District law but is similar to conduct already punished in D.C. Code §§ 22-4503.01 (Unlawful discharge of a firearm)[1] and 22-1321 (Disorderly Conduct),[2] as well as the conduct constituting penalty enhancements for "drive-by" or "random" shootings in D.C. Code §§ 22-2104.01(b)(5) and 24-403.01 (b-1)(2)(E).

Paragraph (a)(1) specifies that the person must discharge a projectile from a firearm outside of a licensed firing range.[3] Per its ordinary meaning,[4] a "discharge" does not require aiming a weapon. "Firearm" is a defined term that refers to a weapon "which will, or is designed or redesigned, made or remade, readily converted, restored, or repaired, or is intended to, expel a projectile or projectiles by the action of an explosive" and excludes antiques.[5] Paragraph (a)(1) specifies that to be criminally liable for discharging a firearm, a person must act at least knowingly. The term "knowingly" is defined in RCC § 22E-206 and here means that the person must be practically certain that that they discharge a projectile from a firearm and that the discharge occurs in a location other than a licensed firing range.

Paragraph (a)(2) enumerates two circumstances in which knowingly discharging a projectile from a firearm is prohibited under this section.[6]

Subparagraph (a)(2)(A) punishes shooting (in any location, private or public) in a manner that creates a substantial risk of death or bodily injury to another person.[7] Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, a person must know—that is be practically certain—that they are endangering someone else.

Subparagraph (a)(2)(B) punishes shooting in a referenced public place (irrespective of whether any person or property is endangered) without lawful authority to do so.[8] Subparagraph (a)(2)(B) uses the term "in fact" to specify that a person is strictly liable as to being in a prohibited location and as to lacking lawful authority.[9]

---

[1] RCC § 22E-4106, Negligent Discharge of a Firearm.
[2] RCC § 22E-4201.
[3] The District of Columbia does not currently have any firing ranges or hunting grounds.
[4] See, e.g., Merriam-Webster Online Dictionary at https://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/discharge ("to relieve of a charge, load, or burden").
[5] RCC § 22E-701. Unless there is evidence that the firearm is antique, the government is not required to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the firearms are not antique as an element of the offense in its case-in-chief. Toler v. United States, 198 A.3d 767 (D.C. 2018).
[6] See also RCC § 22E-4106, Negligent Discharge of a Firearm.
[7] Consider, for example, a person who is shooting targets in their backyard, in a manner that creates a substantial risk that a neighbor in an adjacent yard will be struck by a bullet.
[8] Consider, for example, a person who is shooting in the air outside of an embassy to make a political statement. See, e.g., Peter Hermann and Spencer S. Hsu, Man ordered detained after police say he fired 32 rounds at Cuban Embassy, WASHINGTON POST (May 4, 2020). Consider also a person who is hunting animals.
[9] RCC § 22E-207.

Sub-subparagraph (a)(2)(B)(i) specifies that the prohibited locations are: places that are open to the general public at the time of the offense, a communal area of multi-unit housing, a public conveyance, and a rail transit station. The terms "open to the general public,"[10] and "public conveyance"[11] are defined in RCC § 22E-701 and "rail transit station" has the meaning specified in D.C. Code § 35-251. Either the person or the discharged ammunition may be in a public place.[12] This includes any part of the bullet's flight path.[13]

Sub-subparagraph (a)(2)(B)(ii) provides that a person may discharge a projectile from a firearm if the Metropolitan Police Department ("MPD") grants written permission to do so. MPD may permit the discharge of a firearm by a particular person, in a particular location, or at a specified time. Sub-subparagraph (a)(2)(B)(ii) also provides that a person may discharge a projectile from a firearm if they have any other permission to do so under District or federal law.

Subsection (b) specifies the penalties for the revised offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.]

Subsection (c) provides that a conviction for endangerment with a firearm will merge with a conviction for a crime that already accounts the use or display of a firearm in the offense definition or penalty enhancement.[14] Subsection (c) does not apply, however, to crimes involving only the possession or attempted possession of a firearm, imitation firearm, or dangerous weapon.

Subsection (d) specifically requires the sentencing court engaged in merger under subsection (c) of this section to follow the procedures in subsections (b) and (c) of RCC § 22E-214.

Subsection (e) cross-references applicable definitions in the RCC.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised endangerment with a firearm statute is a new offense and, in that sense, all aspects of the revised statute are substantive changes to District law. Compared to current District crimes, the revised endangerment with a firearm statute clearly changes current District law in two main ways.

First, the revised statute accounts for the distinctly terrifying nature of public shootings that are not otherwise part of a crime against property or persons. The current D.C. Code provides significant liability for possessing or carrying a weapon illegally, irresponsibly, or during a crime but very little additional liability for firing a gun. Except [10] "Open to the general public" is defined to mean no payment, membership, affiliation, appointment, or special permission is required to enter.

[11] "Public conveyance" means any government-operated air, land, or water vehicle used for the transportation of persons, including any airplane, train, bus, or boat.
[12] For example, a person commits an offense by shooting out of a private moving motor vehicle into a public way. A person also commits an offense by shooting from a public sidewalk into a private building.
[13] For example, a person commits an offense by shooting from one private building across an alleyway into another private building.
[14] See also RCC § 22E-214. The fact that subsection (c) requires merger in specified circumstances is not intended to preclude the court from merging endangerment with a firearm with another conviction in other circumstances under RCC § 22E-214.

for murders,[15] under the current D.C. Code there is just one way to prosecute a shooting that does not amount to an assault or cause property damage and goes beyond a possession or carrying charge.[16] Namely, the D.C. Code punishes "unlawful discharge of a firearm" as a misdemeanor offense.[17] However, this statute is regulatory in nature and punishes negligently mishandling a firearm. Consequently, the current D.C. Code has no crime that distinctly addresses intentional discharge of a firearm where only emotional harm to individuals or the community results. In contrast, the RCC punishes knowingly discharging a firearm as a distinct crime, even where there is no intent to harm a person or property. This change eliminates a gap in liability and improves the logical organization of the revised statutes.

Second, the RCC logically reorganizes gun offenses, drawing meaningful grading and penalty distinctions based on how a firearm is possessed, carried, or used. Under the current D.C. Code, severe penalties are available for possession or carrying a firearm, without differentiation as to whether that firearm was used or displayed in any manner. A person who is charged with a crime of unlawfully possessing a firearm (actually or constructively) under the current D.C. Code may be subject to longer incarceration than a person who is charged with a crime of unlawfully carrying, brandishing, shooting, assaulting another with, or injuring another with a firearm.[18] In contrast, the RCC generally organizes and penalizes firearm crimes progressively more seriously, from mere possessory crimes, to carrying offenses that may endanger others, to actual use or display of a firearm during a crime that harms persons or property. This graduated approach is consistent with the CCRC's public opinion research,[19] which indicates that mere possession of a firearm during an offense is less relevant to the seriousness of the offense

[15] This statute deters gun owners from maintaining a weapon irresponsibly, in a manner that could prove dangerous at some later time. See also RCC §§ 7-2507.02 (Unlawful Storage of a Firearm); 7-2509.06 (Carrying a Pistol in an Unlawful Manner); D.C. Code 7-2509.06 (Carrying a pistol while impaired).

[16] Consider, for example, a drug turf war in which one seller drives through the contested block, shooting in the air, to send a message that no other seller may do business there. Consider also a person who is shooting in the air outside of an embassy to make a political statement. See, e.g., Peter Hermann and Spencer S. Hsu, Man ordered detained after police say he fired 32 rounds at Cuban Embassy, WASHINGTON POST (May 4, 2020).

[17] D.C. Code § 22-4503.01; RCC § 22E-4106.

[18] Compare D.C. Code § 7-2502.01 (1 year or 5 years for possession of an unregistered firearm) with D.C. Code § 22-4503.01 (1 year for unlawful discharge). Compare D.C. Code § 22-4503(b)(1) (10 years or 15 years for unlawful possession) with D.C. Code §§ 22-4504(a)(2) (10 years for carrying), 22-402 (10 years for assault with a dangerous weapon), and 22-404.01 (10 years for assault causing serious bodily injury).

[19] Respondents agreed that causing even a minor injury by using a firearm should be punished more severely than causing a more serious injury without one. See Advisory Group Memo #27 Appendix A - Survey Responses at 23 (showing the presence of a gun significantly increased the perceived severity, but whether the gun is used or displayed is critical in impressions of severity). For instance, shooting someone with a gun and causing an injury requiring immediate medical treatment was perceived as being two severity levels higher (8.2) than the Level 6 milestone offense of causing the same type of injury without a gun. Similarly, threatening to kill someone face-to-face while displaying a gun was ranked as nearly two severity levels higher (7.6) than making the same threat while unarmed (5.6). In contrast, secretly carrying, but not displaying or shooting a gun, in the process of an attempted robbery was ranked as only somewhat more serious than gun-free attempted robbery (5.0 versus 4.3).

than use or display of the firearm and the resulting harm to complainants. This change improves the logical organization and proportionality of the revised statutes.

RCC § 22E-4201. Disorderly Conduct.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the disorderly conduct offense for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The offense proscribes a broad range of conduct that disrupts or potentially disrupts a public place and is not protected by the First Amendment or District law. The RCC disorderly conduct statute addresses conduct that: causes a person reasonably to believe a specified criminal harm is likely to occur to them; directs someone present to engage in a specified criminal harm where the harm is likely to occur; directs abusive speech to a person that is likely to provoke a specified retaliatory criminal harm; or involves continued fighting after receiving a law enforcement officer's order to cease. The disorderly conduct statute uniquely addresses inchoate conduct that may not constitute an attempted criminal threat, menace, assault, destruction of property, or theft. The revised offense replaces subsection (a) and, in concert with other provisions of the RCC,[1] subsection (g) of D.C. Code § 22-1321, the District's disorderly conduct statute.[2] The revised offense also replaces the District's affrays statute in D.C. Code § 22-1301[3] and the prosecution provision in D.C. Code § 22-1809.

Paragraph (a)(1) provides that the accused's conduct must occur in a place that is either open to the general public, a public conveyance or a rail transit station, or the communal area of multi-unit housing. The terms "open to the general public," "public conveyance," and "rail transit station" Are defined terms that generally refer to locations where no payment or special permission is needed to enter, government-run transportation vehicles, Metro station passenger areas, and common areas of multi-unit housing.[4] "In fact," a defined term,[5] is used to indicate that there is no culpable mental state requirement as to whether the location is open to the general public, a public conveyance, a rail transit station, or a communal area of multi-unit housing.

Paragraph (a)(2) specifies four basic types of disorderly conduct: causing fear of crime, inciting crime, provoking crime, and public fighting.

Subparagraph (a)(2)(A) punishes reckless conduct other than speech that causes another person to fear that they will sustain a criminal[6] bodily injury, taking of property, or damage to property. The accused's conduct must actually cause another person to [1] See commentary regarding theft from a person RCC § 22E-2101(c)(4) and RCC § 22E-1205 offensive physical contact.

[2] Other subsections of D.C. Code § 22-1321, concerning nuisance and stealthily looking into a dwelling where there is an expectation of privacy, are addressed in different sections of the RCC. See RCC §§ 22E-4202 (Public Nuisance) and 22E-4205 (Breach of Home Privacy).
[3] D.C. Code § 22-1301 ("Whoever is convicted of an affray in the District shall be fined not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01 or imprisoned not more than 180 days, or both.").
[4] RCC § 22E-701. Note that, for example, a restaurant and bar may be open to the general public during the day but impose an age limit and require identification late at night. Locations for which the general public always needs special permission to enter, such as public schools while in session or the Central Detention Facility (D.C. Jail), are not "open to the general public" for the purposes of this statute.
[5] RCC § 22E-207.
[6] The word "criminal" modifies the words that follow.

reasonably believe[7] that one of those dangers is likely to occur immediately and that he or she will be the victim.[8] "Speech" is a defined term and means oral or written language, symbols, or gestures.[9] "Bodily injury" is a defined term and means physical pain, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[10] "Property" is a defined term and means anything of value. The affected person must be placed in fear of a criminal harm.[11] The affected person must fear that the criminal harm will occur immediately, not in the future. And, the affected person's fear must be objectively reasonable.[12]

Subparagraph (a)(2)(A) also specifies the culpable mental state required is recklessness, a term defined in RCC § 22E-206. As applied here, the accused must be aware that there was a substantial risk that the conduct will cause another person to be afraid of suffering a criminal harm.[13] The risk must be of such a nature and degree that, considering the nature and motivation for the person's conduct and the circumstances the person is aware of, the person's conscious disregard of that risk is a gross deviation from the ordinary standard of conduct. A person does not commit disorderly conduct when he or she exercises reasonable caution or where he or she deviates only slightly from the ordinary standard of care.[14]

Subparagraph (a)(2)(B) punishes publicly inciting others to violence consisting of a criminal harm involving bodily injury, taking of property, or damage to property. It also must be proven that the harm is likely[15] to occur. This provision requires two culpable mental states. First, the person must act purposely, a defined term,[16] which here means the person must consciously desire to cause another person to immediately engage in criminal harm. The person's statement must be a specific directive to act now, not merely general encouragement of violence against a particular group or in the name of a particular cause. Second, the person must be reckless as to the fact that the solicited harm is likely to occur.

---

[7] Any circumstance element or result element that is the object of the phrase "reasonably believes" need not be proven to actually exist.

[8] "We hold that § 22-1321 (a)(1) requires proof that the defendant's charged conduct placed another person in fear of harm to his or her person." Solon v. United States, 196 A.3d 1283, 1288 (D.C. 2018).

[9] RCC § 22E-701.

[10] RCC § 22E-701.

[11] Consider, for example, a person who becomes afraid that a repossession officer will tow away their car, due to delinquent payments. That harm (alone) is not a criminal taking of property and, without more, the officer's conduct is not disorderly.

[12] For example, a fear of theft or violence based on prejudicial beliefs about race or sex is not objectively reasonable.

[13] For example, a person who enters an area of a park that, on inspection, appears to be vacant. She then swings a stick wildly while screaming obscenities, scaring someone who walks into the area, thinking they are being attacked. She has not committed disorderly conduct because she was not aware of a substantial risk that any person could see her or hear her.

[14] For example, a person playing kickball in a public park who chases the ball near a group of uninvolved bystanders, alarming them. However agile or clumsy the athlete might be, it is unlikely that her movements will rise to the level of disorderly conduct because a person of ordinary caution would likely chase after the ball in the same manner, under the same circumstances.

[15] Whether a harm is likely to occur is a fact-sensitive inquiry. For example, where a person commands one unarmed person to "attack" a group of four well-armed police officers, it may not be likely that the listener will heed the command. Consider also, a person who tries to persuade a group of pacifist protestors to burn down the city.

[16] RCC § 22E-206.

"Recklessness" is defined in the revised code,[17] and here means that the person must be aware of a substantial risk that the listener will follow the command and the person's conduct must be a gross deviation from the ordinary standard of conduct.

Subparagraph (a)(2)(C) punishes directing abusive speech[18] to someone in a public place, which are likely[19] to provoke immediate, violent retaliation. To commit disorderly conduct by abusive speech, a person must act with the purpose of directing the speech to another person.[20] "Purposely" is a defined term[21] and here means that the speaker must consciously desire that the manner of the speech be seriously upsetting the listener.[22] The term "speech" is defined in RCC § 22E-701 to mean oral or written language, symbols,[23] or gestures.[24] The person must also be reckless as to the fact that the speech is likely to provoke a violent response. "Recklessness" is also defined in the revised code,[25] and here means that the person must be aware of a substantial risk that the listener will retaliate[26] and the person's conduct must be a gross deviation from the ordinary standard of conduct.

Subparagraph (a)(2)(D) prohibits public fighting after receiving a law enforcement officer order to stop. The term "fighting" is not statutorily defined, and is not restricted to the infliction of bodily injury required for assault offenses[27] or offensive touching as is required for offensive physical contact.[28] Unlike certain degrees of assault and offensive physical contact, effective consent is not an available defense to public fighting that violates subparagraph (a)(2)(D).[29] The government must prove that the accused received a law enforcement order to stop fighting and that the accused continued or resumed fighting

---

[17] RCC § 22E-206.

[18] "Abusive speech" has the same meaning as "fighting words:" "which by their very utterance inflict injury or tend to incite an immediate breach of the peace." Chaplinsky v. New Hampshire, 315 U.S. 568, 572, (1942).

[19] Whether a harm is likely to occur is a fact-sensitive inquiry. For example, where a person commands one unarmed person to "attack" a group of four well-armed police officers, it may not be likely that the listener will heed the command. Consider also, a person who tries to persuade a group of pacifist protestors to burn down the city.

[20] The intended recipient of the speech may be a particular individual or a large and amorphous group of people near enough to see or hear the speaker.

[21] RCC § 22E-206.

[22] No particular word or image categorically qualifies as abusive speech. A word's connotation and denotation may change over time. The offensiveness of a word may depend on the identity of speaker, the audience, or the sensitivity of the moment.

[23] For example, a sign with a swastika, a car decal bearing a Redskins logo, a red hat with the initials "MAGA," or a noose as a prop, could be considered an abusive symbol, depending on the time, place, and manner of their use.

[24] Some gestures (e.g., a raised middle finger) are widely understood to carry a particular verbal meaning. Whether a gesture is abusive and whether provocation is likely depends on the time, place, and manner in which the gesture is used, not the content of the verbal translation alone.

[25] RCC § 22E-206.

[26] Whether a listener is likely to be provoked to immediate, retaliatory criminal harm is a fact-sensitive inquiry.

[27] RCC § 22E-1202.

[28] RCC § 22E-1205.

[29] See Woods v. United States, 65 A.3d 667, 669-671 (D.C. 2013) (explaining consent is no defense to an assault that occurs in a public place because a public assault is a crime against the public generally); see also D.C. Code § 22-1301 (criminalizing affrays).

in disregard of that directive. "Knowingly" is a defined term[30] and here means the person must be practically certain that he or she received an order from someone he or she is practically certain is a law enforcement officer.[31] "Law enforcement officer" is a defined term.[32] The order may be personalized to the individual or directed to an entire group, and may be articulated in various ways so long as the meaning is clear. There is no requirement that the police order indicate the reasons for the order to cease. A person must be afforded fair notice and a reasonable opportunity to comply with the law enforcement order to stop fighting.[33] Where a person is uncertain as to whether they can safely comply with the order, a justification defense also may apply.

Subsection (b) establishes two exclusions from liability for the revised disorderly conduct offense. Paragraphs (b)(1) and (b)(2) categorically exclude as a basis for disorderly conduct liability behaviors that frighten, offend, or provoke a law enforcement officer in the course of his or her official duties. Both paragraphs (b)(1) and (b)(2) specify "in fact," a defined term in RCC § 22E-207 that indicates there is no culpable mental state requirement as to a given element, here the requirements in paragraphs (b)(1) and (b)(2), respectively.

Subsection (c) states that the Attorney General for the District of Columbia is responsible for prosecuting violations of the statute.

Subsection (d) provides the penalty for the offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.]

Subsection (e) cross-references applicable definitions in the RCC.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised disorderly conduct statute clearly changes current District law[34] in three main ways.

First, the revised statute specifies that conduct that frightens, offends, or provokes a law enforcement officer can never be the basis for disorderly conduct.[35] Subsection (a) of the current disorderly conduct statute punishes three basic types of misconduct in public: causing fear of crime,[36] inciting crime,[37] and provoking crime.[38] Only the third type of conduct, criminalized by paragraph (a)(3) of the statute, explicitly excludes from liability

[30] RCC § 22E-206.
[31] A person who does not know the speaker is a law enforcement officer or who does not know the order is directed to them does not commit disorderly conduct by public fighting.
[32] RCC § 22E-701.
[33] See RCC § 22E-203 (requiring physical capacity to perform a required legal duty); Conley v. United States, 79 A.3d 270, 292-293 (D.C. 2013) (explaining voluntariness requires a reasonable opportunity to comply with a legal duty); Lambert v. People of the State of California, 355 U.S. 225, 229 (1957) (reversing a conviction where, on first becoming aware of her duty, the appellant had no opportunity to comply with the law and avoid its penalty.) see also Barham v. Ramsey, 434 F.3d 565, 576 (D.C. Cir. 2006) (requiring an opportunity to comply with a dispersal order); Dellums v. Powell, 566 F.2d 167, 181 n.31 (D.C. Cir. 1977); Wash. Mobilization Comm. v. Cullinane, 566 F.2d 107, 126 n.5 (D.C. Cir. 1977).
[34] The current disorderly conduct statute, D.C. Code § 22-1321, was revised in 2011 to significantly change the scope and language.
[35] RCC §§ 22E-4201(b)(2) and (b)(3).
[36] D.C. Code §22-1321(a)(1).
[37] D.C. Code §22-1321(a)(2).
[38] D.C. Code §22-1321(a)(3).

language or gestures directed at a law enforcement officer while acting in his or her official capacity. Conduct criminalized under subsections (a)(1) and (a)(2) of the current statute does not provide an exception for conduct directed at law enforcement officers.[39] In contrast, the RCC codifies an exception to liability for engaging in conduct other than speech that causes a law enforcement officer to reasonably believe that he or she is likely to suffer an immediate criminal harm involving bodily injury, taking of property, or damage to property. Unlike other citizens, law enforcement officers regularly confront alarming behavior, are specially trained to resist provocation and determine what behavior is criminal or an attempted crime, and have the power to arrest where they reasonably believe a crime or attempted crime is occurring. Consequently, it is not necessary to criminalize conduct that falls short of such an attempted crime, and that is merely alarming to the law enforcement officer. On the other hand, when a person's conduct indicates that they are about to assault a law enforcement officer or harm the officer's property, a more serious punishment than disorderly conduct is warranted. This revision may better reflect recent Council determinations about the proper scope of the assault on a police officer statute,[40] and the Council's rationale for the current disorderly statute's exception[41] for fighting words directed at a law enforcement officer. This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the offense.

Second, the revised disorderly conduct statute limits liability for consensual public fighting to continuing or resuming such conduct after a law enforcement order to cease. The current D.C. Code codifies a penalty for committing an "affray,"[42] however, no elements of the offense are codified.[43] There are no published cases where an individual has been convicted under the codified 'affray' statute in the District, however, a District court opinion from the mid-1800s references the fact that a common law affray occurs [39] To the extent that the current subsections (a)(1) and (a)(2) of the disorderly conduct statute, which do not explicitly exclude behavior directed at a law enforcement officer, include conduct also addressed by subsection (a)(3), the three provisions are in apparent conflict. For example, consider an actor, with a group of like-minded companions nearby, shouts racial slurs and gestures with his middle finger at an on-duty law enforcement officer. Depending on the facts, such conduct may satisfy the objective elements of subsection (a)(1) (causing the officer to be in reasonable fear he is about to be assaulted), subsection (a)(2) (provoking others to attack the officer), and (a)(3) (provoking immediate physical retaliation, although only subsection (a)(3) says that it cannot be applied to an on-duty officer).

[40] See generally Report on Bill 21-360, "Neighborhood Engagement Achieves Results Act of 2015," Council of the District of Columbia Committee on Public Safety and the Judiciary (January 28, 2016).

[41] See Report on Bill 18-425, "Disorderly Conduct Amendment Act of 2009," Council of the District of Columbia Committee on Public Safety and the Judiciary (November 19, 2010) at Page 8 ("[T]he crime of using abusive or offensive language must focus on the likelihood of provoking a violent reaction by persons other than a police officer to whom the words were directed, because a police officer is expected to have a greater tolerance for verbal assaults and is especially trained to resist provocation by verbal abuse that might provoke or offend the ordinary citizen." And, "it seems unlikely at best that the use of bad language toward a police officer will provoke immediate retaliation or violence, not by him, but by someone else.").

[42] D.C. Code § 22-1301 provides, "Whoever is convicted of an affray in the District shall be fined not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01 or imprisoned not more than 180 days, or both."

[43] The offense is an example of a "common law" offense whose elements are defined wholly by courts in past case opinions rather than in legislative acts.

when two persons fight in public.[44] Dicta in District assault case law has stated that a public assault is punishable to the extent that it breaches public peace and order,[45] perhaps indirectly referring to the crime of affrays. In contrast, the revised disorderly conduct statute specifically punishes participating in public fighting only after a law enforcement officer has ordered the fight to end. This change eliminates liability for mutually-consensual horseplay or low-level fighting that does not involve significant bodily injury. The RCC disorderly conduct statute, under subparagraph (a)(2)(A), also provides liability for public fighting whenever a person recklessly causes another to reasonably believe that there is likely to be immediate and unlawful bodily injury—covering public fighting that involves infliction of significant bodily injury and non-consensual public fighting.[46] This change clarifies and improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of District laws, and reduces unnecessary overlap.

Third, the revised statute repeals D.C. Code § 22-1809, which provides that a person who fails to pay a fine for a disorderly conduct offense shall be committed to a workhouse for up to six months. This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised statutes and eliminates an archaic provision in the D.C. Code.

Beyond these three changes to current District law, three other aspects of the revised statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised statute specifies a culpable mental state for all offense elements other than the location, which is specified to be a matter of strict liability. The current disorderly conduct statute[47] begins with a prefatory clause "In any place open to the general public, and in the communal areas of multi-unit housing," but does not specify a culpable mental state for that circumstance. District case law does not address the matter. In paragraph (a)(1), the current statute specifies a mental state of "intentionally or recklessly." However, the current statute does not define "recklessly" and does not make clear whether a person must be reckless as to every result and circumstance in paragraph in (a)(1), or the following paragraphs (a)(2) and (3), which do not state any culpable mental states of their own. Again, District case law to date does not address culpable mental states for these provisions. The RCC resolves these ambiguities by clearly specifying the culpable mental states for all elements of the revised offense as being either strict liability (through use of the phrase "in fact") as to the location, or recklessly, purposely, or knowingly as to all other offense elements. These culpable mental state terms are defined in RCC § 22E-206.[48]

---

[44] Hedgpeth v. Rahim, 213 F. Supp. 3d 211, 223 (D.D.C. 2016) (citing United States v. Herbert, 26 F. Cas. 287, 289, F. Cas. No. 15354a, 2 Hay. & Haz. 210 (D.C. Crim. Ct. 1856) ("In the case of sudden affray, where parties fought on equal terms, that is, at the commencement or onset of the conflict, it matters not who gave the first blow.")

[45] See Woods v. United States, 65 A.3d 667, 669-671 (D.C. 2013) (explaining consent is no defense to an assault that occurs in a public place because a public assault is a crime against the public generally).

[46] Some instances of mutual combat are lawful and others are not. RCC § 22E-1202 explains that a person may not consent to significant bodily injury or serious bodily injury or to use of a firearm. "Significant bodily injury" and "serious bodily injury" are defined in RCC § 22E-701. "Firearm" is defined in D.C. Code § 22-4501(2A).

[47] D.C. Code § 22-1321.

[48] The revised disorderly conduct statute makes clear that the actor must consciously disregard a substantial risk that her conduct will lead an onlooker to reasonably believe one of three harms is likely to immediately

Applying a knowledge culpable mental state requirement to statutory elements that distinguish innocent from criminal behavior is a well-established practice in American jurisprudence.[49] However, recklessness is required for assault liability in RCC § 22E-1202, which criminalizes conduct closely related to paragraph (a)(2)(A) in the revise disorderly conduct offense. The heightened culpable mental state of purposely in paragraphs (a)(2)(B)-(a)(2)(C) distinguishes the use of speech which the actor does not know, or knows but does not wish, to be construed as provoking violence. This change improves the clarity, completeness, and the consistency of the revised offense, and, to the extent it may require a new culpable mental state as to some of the principal elements of the offense, improves its proportionality.[50]

Second, the revised code uses the defined terms "open to the general public," "public conveyance," and "rail transit station."[51] The current disorderly conduct statute uses the phrase "open to the general public" and refers to a "public conveyance," but does not define thee terms, and there are no District of Columbia Court of Appeals ("DCCA") published opinions construing the terms. The legislative intent behind the phrase is particularly unclear as to "open to the general public,"[52] and case law does not directly address its meaning.[53] To resolve any ambiguity, the RCC uses defined terms that delineate the scope of the offense. The defined term "open to the general public" generally means that no payment or permission is required to enter. The revised definition of "open to the general public" effectively excludes public conveyances, private event arenas, schools, and detention facilities from the purview of the disorderly conduct statute; however, the revised statute specifically includes public conveyances and passenger areas of Metro stations (through the term "rail transit station"). What amounts to disorderly conduct in any of these locations may result in other criminal liability under current law and the RCC,[54] occur. The RCC also makes clear that the risk must be of such a nature and degree that, considering the nature of and motivation for the person's conduct and the circumstances the person is aware of, the person's conscious disregard of that risk is a gross deviation from the ordinary standard of conduct. Finally, the RCC makes clear that a person is strictly liable with respect to whether she is located in a place that is open to the general public or is the communal area of multi-unit housing.

---

[49] See Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2009 (2015) ("[O]ur cases have explained that a defendant generally must 'know the facts that make his conduct fit the definition of the offense,' even if he does not know that those facts give rise to a crime." (Internal citation omitted.)).

[50] Were a person strictly liable for conduct that causes a breach of peace per D.C. Code § 22-1321(a)(2) and (a)(3), even mistakes or accidents by a defendant could be the basis of criminal liability for disorderly conduct. For example, a person who reasonably believes themselves to be alone in a park and recites provocative song lyrics containing "fighting words" may be guilty of disorderly conduct.

[51] RCC § 22E-701.

[52] In an earlier draft of the disorderly conduct legislation, before the Council formed the Disorderly Conduct Arrest Project Subcommittee of the Council for Court Excellence, Bill 18-151 defined "public" as "affecting or likely to affect persons in a place to which the public has access; including but not limited to highways, streets, sidewalks, transportation facilities, schools, places of business or amusement."

[53] The District of Columbia Court of Appeals has not addressed the meaning of the phrase "open to the general public," however, it has required that disorderly conduct occur in a location and under circumstances in which a breach of public peace and tranquility could occur. See Ramsey v. United States, 73 A.3d 138, 147 (D.C. 2013) (reversing a conviction for disorderly conduct where the defendant was alleged to have attempted to urinate in a secluded, dark alley, away from any businesses, residences, or people).

[54] Current law separately punishes minor conduct that is disruptive to riders on public conveyances and authorizes the Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority ("WMATA") to refuse service to any rider giving law enforcement officers authority to immediately intervene and arrest when necessary to restore public order.[55] This change clarifies and improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised statute and reduces unnecessary overlap.

Third, the revised statute, in concert with other RCC statutes, eliminates separate, distinct liability for jostling, crowding, and placing a hand near someone's purse or wallet. Subsection (g) of the current disorderly conduct statute provides, "It is unlawful, under circumstances whereby a breach of the peace may be occasioned, to interfere with any person in any public place by jostling against the person, unnecessarily crowding the person, or placing a hand in the proximity of the person's handbag, pocketbook, or wallet." DCCA case law interpreting a prior version of the disorderly conduct statute stated that "jostling against" "contemplates rough physical touching of one individual by another."[56] However, in the RCC, jostling, crowding, and reaching toward a wallet that actually places a person in fear of an immediate unlawful taking[57] is criminalized by the disorderly conduct statute subparagraph (a)(2)(A). Other RCC offenses such as offensive physical contact[58] and attempted theft from a person[59] also criminalize aspects of the current disorderly statute's jostling provision. It is unclear whether the current jostling provision in the D.C. Code covers any further conduct.[60] This change clarifies and reduces unnecessary overlap in the revised offenses.

---

who violates its rules of conduct. See D.C. Code §§ 22-1321(c) and 35-251 - 53. Additionally, any person who remains on a public conveyance without WMATA's effective consent is guilty of trespass and subject to arrest on that basis. See generally RCC § 22E-2601. Similarly, a private arena may eject any patron from their premises at any time and failure to leave as directed amounts to a trespass. The Central Detention Facility ("D.C. Jail") and the Central Treatment Facility ("CTF") are empowered to quell any threat of public alarm or breach of peace by immediately separating inmates, placing inmates in protective custody, and placing inmates in disciplinary detention. See D.C. Department of Corrections Inmate Handbook 2015-2016. Public and private schools also have authority to remove and suspend rulebreakers. See Tex. Penal Code § 42.01 (providing that its disorderly conduct statute categorically "do[es] not apply to a person who, at the time the person engaged in conduct prohibited under the applicable subdivision, was a student younger than 12 years of age, and the prohibited conduct occurred at a public school campus during regular school hours.").

[55] "Disorderly conduct is distinct from many other statutes in that most criminal prohibitions are intended to punish and deter crimes, whereas disorderly conduct is meant to give police the power to defuse a situation that disturbs the public. The goal of restoring public order comes from the concern that citizens who are being bothered or annoyed might choose violent self-help when someone is being loud on the street or otherwise causing a disturbance." Committee on Public Safety and the Judiciary Report on Bill 18-425 at Page 3.

[56] Matter of A. B., 395 A.2d 59, 62 (D.C. 1978).

[57] The revised statute may be narrower than the current jostling provision in D.C. Code § 22-1321(g). Although the statutory language requires "circumstances whereby a breach of peace may be occasioned," the DCCA recently explained that this provision also reaches instances in which the victim is unaware of the offensive behavior. See Solon v. United States, 196 A.3d 1283, 1288 (D.C. 2018) (citing Report on Bill 18-425, "Disorderly Conduct Amendment Act of 2009," Council of the District of Columbia Committee on Public Safety and the Judiciary (November 19, 2010) at Page 9).

[58] RCC § 22E-1205;

[59] RCC § 22E-2101; RCC § 22E-301.

[60] Although the statutory language requires "circumstances whereby a breach of peace may be occasioned," legislative history cited in dicta by the DCCA suggests that this provision also reaches instances in which the victim is unaware of the offensive behavior. See Solon v. United States, 196 A.3d 1283, 1288 (D.C. 2018) (citing Report on Bill 18-425, "Disorderly Conduct Amendment Act of 2009," Council of the District of Columbia Committee on Public Safety and the Judiciary (November 19, 2010) at Page 9).

Fourth, the revised statute more precisely defines committing disorderly conduct by means of incitement to violence. Paragraph (a)(2) of the current disorderly conduct statute explicitly provides that it is unlawful to, "Incite or provoke violence where there is a likelihood that such violence will ensue."[61] The term "incite" is not defined by in the statute, and case law has not interpreted the term. Legislative history provides no indication of the term's intended meaning.[62] "Incites," however, is also predicate conduct in the current D.C. Code rioting statute.[63] To resolve ambiguities about the scope and meaning of disorderly conduct by incitement, subparagraph (a)(2)(B) of the revised statute punishes a person who "[p]urposely commands, requests, or tries to persuade any person present to cause immediate criminal harm involving bodily injury, taking of property, or damage to property, reckless as to the fact that the harm is likely to occur." Similar language appears in the provision governing liability for criminal solicitation in the general part of the revised code.[64] The terms "bodily injury," "property," and "reckless" each have standardized definitions in RCC §§ 22E-701 and 22E-206. This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised statutes.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

First, the revised statute replaces the words "reasonable fear" with "reasonably believe" that that there will be immediate and unlawful harm. The current disorderly conduct statute states that it is unlawful for a person to "cause another person to be in reasonable fear" of specified harms that generally appear to entail immediate acts.[65] The statute does not define the term "fear." A recent DCCA opinion held that the statute "requires proof that the defendant's charged conduct placed another person in fear of harm to his or her person."[66] The revised disorderly conduct statute specifies that the observer must reasonably believe that they will suffer an immediate and unlawful[67] harm. This word choice clarifies that it is the observer's reasoned judgment, not their emotion that matters

[61] D.C. Code § 22-1321(a)(2).
[62] Legislative adoption of the "incite" language in subsection (a)(2) of the current disorderly statute occurred as part of the Council's 2011 amendments that were in significant part based on recommendations by the Council for Court Excellence (CCE) and included language identical to the current subsection (a)(2). See Revising the District of Columbia Disorderly Conduct Statutes: A Report and Proposed Legislation Prepared by The Disorderly Conduct Arrest Project Subcommittee of the Council for Court Excellence (October 14, 2010) ("CCE Report") at Page 16. The CCE recommendations did not provide an explanation for the meaning or significance of the "incite" language in their recommendation beyond a general statement that that and other language was a reformulation of the "catchall" provision in the disorderly conduct statute prior to 2011, which referred to "acts in such a manner as to annoy, disturb, interfere with, obstruct, or be offensive to others." CCE Report at 9.
[63] D.C. Code § 22-1322(c).
[64] RCC § 22E-302.
[65] D.C. Code § 22-1321(a)(1).
[66] Solon v. United States, 196 A.3d 1283, 1288 (D.C. 2018).
[67] The word "criminal" modifies the words that follow. The governing criminal statute must include as an element, the infliction of a bodily injury, taking of property, or damage to property. Courts should take a categorical, not a conduct-specific approach.

as to liability. It also clarifies, through the requirement of immediacy, that the harm must be imminent.

Second, the revised statute explicitly distinguishes between speech and non-speech conduct, consistent with standard definitions that apply throughout the RCC. Current D.C. Code § 22-1321(a) uses the verb "act" in paragraph (1), "[i]ncite or provoke" in paragraph (2), and "[d]irect abusive or offensive language" in paragraph (3). The D.C. Code does not define the word "act" in the disorderly conduct statute or provide a general definition. District case law has not addressed the issue. The RCC uses standardized definitions of "act"[68] and "speech,"[69] which provide that an act includes verbal speech, and that speech includes certain non-verbal conduct. Consistent with these definitions, and to clarify that the intended meaning of paragraph (a)(1) of the current disorderly statute is intended to not include verbal speech, the revised statute uses different terminology. The revised statute replaces the word "act" with the phrase "conduct other than speech"[70] in subparagraph (a)(2)(A) and uses the defined term "speech" in subparagraph (a)(2)(C).

Third, the revised statute clarifies that conduct that raises concerns about self-injury,[71] other than provoking an injury to oneself by abusive language, is not disorderly conduct. The current disorderly conduct statute states that it is unlawful for a person to "intentionally or recklessly act in such a manner as to cause another person to be in reasonable fear that a person or property in a person's immediate possession is likely to be harmed or taken" (emphasis added).[72] The DCCA recently interpreted this language as requiring that the conduct cause fear of harm to the observer's own person.[73] The RCC accordingly clarifies that conduct raising concerns solely about self-injury, other than provoking an injury to oneself by abusive language, is not a basis for disorderly conduct liability.[74]

Fourth, the revised statute replaces the phrase "abusive or offensive" with the term "abusive," which has the same general meaning.[75]

---

[68] RCC § 22E-202 ("'Act' means a bodily movement.").
[69] RCC § 22E-701 ("'Speech' means oral or written language, symbols, or gestures.").
[70] RCC § 22E-4201(a)(2)(A).
[71] Examples include a person angrily kicking the fender of their broken-down car which is parked on the street, and a skate-boarder doing jaw-dropping tricks at a public park.
[72] D.C. Code §22-1321(a)(1).
[73] Solon v. United States, 196 A.3d 1283, 1288 (D.C. 2018).
[74] There is separate authority for an officer to detain and transport for emergency medical care any person believed to be mentally ill and likely to injure herself. See D.C. Code § 21-521.
[75] See Merriam-Webster Online Dictionary at https://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/abusive (defining "abusive" as "harsh and insulting").

RCC § 22E-4202. Public Nuisance.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the public nuisance offense for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The offense proscribes a broad range of conduct that deliberately disturbs others and is not protected by the First Amendment or District law relating to freedom of assembly. The revised offense replaces subsections (b), (c), (c-1), (d), and (e) of D.C. Code § 22-1321 (Disorderly Conduct).[1]

Subsection (a) requires that there be a significant interruption to others' activities.[2] This interruption must be committed purposely, a term defined in RCC § 22E-206. The accused must consciously desire that his or her conduct cause a significant interruption of specified activity.[3] Determination of whether a particular interruption is "significant" is an objective, fact-sensitive inquiry that, in part, must take into account the time, place, and manner of the conduct, as well as account public norms about what kinds of behavior should reasonably be expected and tolerated.[4]

Paragraphs (a)(1)-(4) list four specific types of nuisance that are prohibited. Paragraph (a)(1) replaces D.C. Code § 22-1321(c-1) and prohibits interference with the orderly conduct of a District or federal public body's meeting. The culpable mental state of "purposely" applies to the fact that the event is a public body meeting, requiring that it be the actor's conscious object to interrupt such an event. The terms "public body" and "meeting" are defined in the District's Open Meeting Act,[5] which includes hearings of record and excludes chance or social meetings of councilmembers.[6]

Paragraph (a)(2) replaces D.C. Code § 22-1321(d) and prohibits causing a significant interruption of any person's objectively reasonable quiet enjoyment of their dwelling between 10:00 p.m. and 7:00 a.m., and continuing or resuming such conduct after receiving oral or written notice to stop. "Dwelling" is a defined term[7] and means a structure

---

[1] Subsections (a) and (g) of D.C. Code § 22-1321 are replaced wholly or in part by RCC § 22E-4201 (Disorderly Conduct). Subsection (f) of D.C. Code § 22-1321 is replaced by RCC § 22E-4205.

[2] As the Council observed during its recent rewrite of the disorderly conduct statute, "Freedom of speech permits loud and annoying language, which some people might find 'threatening' or 'abusive,' so more is required. The speech should have both the 'intent and effect' of impeding or disrupting a gathering. In this regard, 'disturbing' is too subjective." See Report on Bill 18-425, "Disorderly Conduct Amendment Act of 2009," Council of the District of Columbia Committee on Public Safety and the Judiciary (November 19, 2010) at Page 8.

[3] Persisting in disruptive conduct after receiving a law enforcement officer's warning may be evidence of that person's purposeful conduct.

[4] For example, loud church bells at 12:00 p.m. may be reasonable, whereas knocking on a private door at 1:00 a.m. may not be.

[5] D.C. Code § 2-574.

[6] Legislative adoption of the "public building" language in subsection (c-1) of the current disorderly statute occurred as part of the Council's 2011 amendments that were in significant part based on recommendations by the Council for Court Excellence (CCE). See Revising the District of Columbia Disorderly Conduct Statutes: A Report and Proposed Legislation Prepared by The Disorderly Conduct Arrest Project Subcommittee of the Council for Court Excellence (October 14, 2010) ("CCE Report"). While D.C. Code § 22-1321 does not define a "public building," the CCE recommendations encouraged the Council to enact a provision that forbids disruption of the D.C. Council or other public meetings, comparable to D.C. Code §10-503.15, which prohibits the disruption of Congress. CCE Report at Page 11.

[7] RCC § 22E-701.

that is either designed or actually used for lodging or residing overnight, including, in multi-unit buildings, communal areas secured from the general public. An interruption of reasonable quiet enjoyment means a significant interference with the in-home activities of a person of ordinary sensitivity.[8] The intrusion may be a noise, smell, light, disturbing image or otherwise.[9] The notice to stop may be given by any person and is not limited to notice from a law enforcement officer.[10] The culpable mental state of "purposely" applies to the fact that the effect of the conduct is a disturbance of a person's quiet enjoyment of their residence from 10:00 p.m. to 7:00 a.m.[11] The "purposely" culpable mental state requirement also applies to the fact that the accused continued or resumed the conduct after previously receiving notice, directly or indirectly, to cease the conduct. The person must be afforded a reasonable opportunity to comply with the notice to cease.[12] Where a person is uncertain as to whether they can safely comply with the notice, a justification defense may apply.

Paragraph (a)(3) replaces D.C. Code § 22-1321(c) and prohibits interruption of any person's lawful use of a public conveyance. RCC § 22E-701 defines a public conveyance as any government-operated air, land, or water vehicle used for the transportation of persons, including but not limited to any airplane, train, bus, or boat. Such interruption may consist of diverting a passenger's pathway or the pathway of the vehicle. The culpable mental state of "purposely" applies to the fact that the actor is interrupting another's lawful use of a public conveyance. Conduct intended to generally disrupt traffic in which a public conveyance operates is insufficient,[13] rather the conscious object of the actor must be to interrupt the use of the complainant's particular public conveyance.

Paragraph (a)(4) replaces D.C. Code § 22-1321(b) and prohibits the disruption of a lawful religious service, funeral.[14] The culpable mental state of "purposely" applies to the [8] What is reasonable, depends on the time, place, and manner of the activity. For example, at midnight on New Year's Day it may be reasonable to blare noisemakers for several seconds, but unreasonable to do so for several minutes.

---

[9] Intrusions into the enjoyment of one's home may be appropriately regulated without offending the First Amendment, under the captive audience doctrine. See Rowan v. Post Office Dept., 397 U.S. 728, 736-738 (1970); Frisby v. Schultz, 487 U.S. 474, 484 (1988).

[10] For example, a private citizen may give notice by calling a noisy neighbor and asking them to, "Keep it down."

[11] Loud noise that recklessly or negligently disturbs others, or occurs at different hours or in different locations, may be punished under 20 DCMR § 2701.

[12] See RCC § 22E-203 (requiring physical capacity to perform a required legal duty); Conley v. United States, 79 A.3d 270, 292-293 (D.C. 2013) (explaining voluntariness requires a reasonable opportunity to comply with a legal duty); Lambert v. People of the State of California, 355 U.S. 225, 229 (1957) (reversing a conviction where, on first becoming aware of her duty, the appellant had no opportunity to comply with the law and avoid its penalty.) see also Barham v. Ramsey, 434 F.3d 565, 576 (D.C. Cir. 2006) (requiring an opportunity to comply with a dispersal order); Dellums v. Powell, 566 F.2d 167, 181 n.31 (D.C. Cir. 1977); Wash. Mobilization Comm. v. Cullinane, 566 F.2d 107, 126 n.5 (D.C. Cir. 1977).

[13] Such conduct may be punished as Blocking a Public Way, under RCC § 22E-4203.

[14] In the current D.C. Code disorderly conduct statute, subsection (b) prohibits impeding "a lawful public gathering, or of a congregation of people engaged in any religious service or in worship, a funeral, or similar proceeding." Legislative history indicates this provision was intended to broaden an 1892 law titled "Disturbing Religious Congregation" beyond churches to include other worship services and funerals. See Report on Bill 18-425, "Disorderly Conduct Amendment Act of 2009," Council of the District of Columbia Committee on Public Safety and the Judiciary (November 19, 2010) at Page 8.

fact that the event is a lawful religious service, funeral, or wedding, requiring that it be the actor's conscious object to interrupt such an event. The event must occur in a location that is "open to the general public," a defined term that excludes locations that require payment or special permission to enter.[15] The word "lawful" requires that the gathering or event not violate another District or federal law.[16] The term "in fact" specifies that the accused is strictly liable[17] with respect to whether the event lawful and with respect to whether the event is in a public place. The accused's conduct must have the intent and effect of interrupting the event, not merely upsetting participants and onlookers.[18]

Subsection (b) states that the Attorney General for the District of Columbia is responsible for prosecuting violations of the statute.

Subsection (c) provides the penalty for the offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.]

Subsection (d) cross-references applicable definitions in the RCC.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised public nuisance statute clearly changes current District law in three main ways.

First, the revised public nuisance statute potentially includes any type of offensive conduct, not just noise, that disturbs a person in his or her residence at night. The D.C. Code disorderly conduct statute currently makes it unlawful for a person to make an unreasonably loud noise between 10:00 p.m. and 7:00 a.m. that is likely to annoy or disturb one or more other persons in their residences.[19] In contrast, the revised statute includes all nuisances that cause a significant interruption to any person's reasonable, quiet enjoyment of their dwelling at night, including noises, smells, and bright lights. This change clarifies the statute and eliminates an unnecessary gap in the law.

Second, the revised statute limits the residential intrusion provision to interactions that follow a notice to cease the interruption. The D.C. Code disorderly conduct statute currently does not limit liability for disturbing noises to situations where the accused has received notice to cease the disturbance, and it appears that a single loud noise "that is likely to annoy" may constitute a violation under the current statute. There is no case law on point. By contrast, the revised statute requires proof of prior notice to the actor to stop the conduct, followed by continuance or resumption of the conduct. Notice to cease makes future disturbances into an act of ignoring the victim's directive to be left alone and invading the victim's privacy. Having prior notice does not necessarily mean that continuance or resumption of the disruption is done with the purpose of disrupting the complainant, but it will typically show that the conduct is at least knowingly done with that effect. The revised statute more narrowly criminalizes behavior that is calculated to [16] Consider, for example, a wedding that is blasting music in violation of the District's noise control regulations under 20 DCMR § 2701. A neighbor who disrupts the event by shouting, "Hey, keep it down!" does not commit a public nuisance offense.

[15] RCC § 22E-701.
[17] RCC § 22E-207.
[18] See Snyder v. Phelps, 562 U.S. 443, 445 (2011) (upholding First Amendment protections where there was no indication that the picketing interfered with the funeral service itself.)
[19] D.C. Code § 22-1321(d).

torment the complainant without reaching other legitimate or protected conduct.[20] This change improves the proportionality and, perhaps, the constitutionality of the revised statute.

Third, the revised public nuisance statute eliminates urinating and defecating in a public place as a distinct basis of criminal liability. Current District statutory law explicitly punishes public urination or defecation as a form of disorderly conduct[21] and as defacing property.[22] Legislative history indicates that when the Council revised the disorderly conduct statute in 2011, it retained a provision separately criminalizing public urination at subsection (e) only because the executive did not appear to have an adequate process for civil infraction enforcement.[23] In contrast, the RCC does not specifically criminalize urination or defecation. In the RCC there may still be liability for such conduct insofar as it causes property damage,[24] causes another person to reasonably believe that the conduct will cause property damage,[25] or involves publicly exposing genitalia.[26] Persons experiencing homelessness and mental illness may be disproportionately affected by criminal sanctions for defecation and urination,[27] and other, non-criminal remedies may address the problem as, or more, effectively. This change improves the proportionality of the revised offense.

Beyond these three changes to current District law, three additional aspects of the revised statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised statute specifies "purposely" as the required culpable mental state as to causing a significant interruption of lawful activity. Three of the four relevant subsections of the current disorderly conduct statute, D.C. Code § 22-1321, that are replaced by the revised public nuisance statute require that the accused act "with the intent and effect of impeding or disrupting" lawful activity.[28] However, the meaning of acting [20] The "mere fact that expressive activity causes hurt feelings, offense, or resentment does not render the expression unprotected." R.A.V. v. City of St. Paul, Minn., 505 U.S. 377, 414 (1992) (White, Blackmun, O'Connor & Stevens, JJ., concurring). There are many instances when one may communicate with another with the intention of causing a slight annoyance in order to emphasize an idea or opinion, or to prompt a desired course of action that one is legitimately entitled to seek. See State v. Brobst, 151 N.H. 420, 423 (2004); People v. Klick, 66 Ill. 2d 269, 273 (1977).

---

[21] D.C. Code § 22-1321(e).

[22] D.C. Code § 22-3312.01 (making it unlawful to "place filth or excrement of any kind…upon…[a]ny structure of any kind or any movable property"); see Scott v. United States, 878 A.2d 486 (D.C. 2005).

[23] See Council of the District of Columbia Committee on Public Safety and the Judiciary Committee Report on Bill 18-425 at Page 9 (stating, "The committee agrees that public urination would be better handled as a civil infraction punishable by a ticket and a fine.")

[24] RCC § 22E-2503(c)(5) would punish public urination and defecation as fourth degree criminal damage to property to the extent it causes a permanent, observable or measurable diminution in value to public or private property—however urination and defecation are not specifically referenced in the statute.

[25] See RCC § 22E-4201, Disorderly Conduct.

[26] See RCC § 22E-4206, Indecent Exposure.

[27] In 2011, Metropolitan Police Department statistics indicated that a large number of the 300-400 persons arrested for public urination each year were not homeless, however, a concern remains that persons experiencing homelessness are impacted disproportionately. See CCE Report at 12.

[28] D.C. Code §§ 22-1321(b), concerning worshippers; subsection (c), concerning public conveyances; and subsection (c-1), concerning public buildings.

"with intent" is not defined by the statute. The fourth relevant subsection of the current disorderly conduct statute, D.C. Code § 22-1321, that is replaced by the revised public nuisance statute does not specify any culpable mental state.[29] There is no relevant case law on the culpable mental states for any of these provisions.[30] To resolve this ambiguity, the RCC public nuisance offense requires proof that the defendant acted purposely, a defined term in the RCC that requires that it be the conscious object of an actor to cause a significant interruption.[31] A purposeful culpable mental state distinguishes interruptions to lawful activities that are deliberate and in committed in bad faith, from other common interruptions of such activities. This change clarifies and improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised statute.

Second, the revised statute replaces the phrase "lawful public gathering, or of a congregation of people engaged in any religious service or in worship, a funeral, or similar proceeding"[32] with "lawful religious service, funeral, or wedding, that is in a location that, in fact, is open to the general public." The current disorderly conduct statute does not define the term "public gathering," and there is no case law on point. The legislative history of D.C. Code § 22-1321(b) states that the Council intended to broaden an 1892 law titled "Disturbing Religious Congregation" so that it is "applicable to any religious service or proceeding, or any similar gathering engaged in worship, including a funeral."[33] The legislative history does not provide any examples of gatherings other than worship services that it intended to include. To resolve ambiguity about the scope of a "lawful public gathering," the revised statute includes only religious services, and funerals and weddings—which may be religious or secular—provided that they occur in a location open to the public.[34] A broad construction of a "lawful public gathering" would potentially reach any gathering of people[35] and may be vulnerable to challenges for vagueness or overbreadth.[36] This change clarifies the revised statute and may ensure its constitutionality.

Third, the revised statute replaces the phrase "disrupting the orderly conduct of business in that public building"[37] with significant interruption of "[t]he orderly conduct of a meeting by a District or federal public body" and the inclusion in the statute of cross-references to specific definitions of "public body" and "meeting" in the D.C. Code. The terms "orderly conduct," "business," and "public building" are not defined in the current disorderly conduct statute or in District case law. However, legislative history indicates [29] D.C. Code § 22-1321(d), concerning disturbance of persons in their residences.

[30] Since the disorderly conduct statute was revised in 2011 to significantly change its scope and language, the D.C. Court of Appeals ("DCCA") has yet to publish an opinion interpreting the statute.
[31] RCC § 22E-206.
[32] D.C. Code § 22-1321(b).
[33] See Report on Bill 18-425, "Disorderly Conduct Amendment Act of 2009," Council of the District of Columbia Committee on Public Safety and the Judiciary (November 19, 2010) at Page 8.
[34] If a person disrupts a religious service, funeral, or wedding in a private place, that conduct may be punishable as a trespass. RCC § 22E-2601.
[35] For example, players in a game in a public park, a gathering of acquaintances at a street corner, or a couple on a sidewalk might all reasonably fall within the ambit of a broad construction of "a public gathering."
[36] Consider, for example, a counter-protest that aims to disrupt a lawful public demonstration.
[37] D.C. Code § 22-1321(c-1).

this provision was intended to forbid disruption of the D.C. Council or other public meetings, in a manner comparable to D.C. Code §10-503.15, which prohibits the disruption of Congress.[38] To resolve ambiguities about the scope of this provision, the revised statute clarifies that it is the nature of the meeting as one of a public decision-making body that is controlling, and not the ownership or operation of the building. The revised statute incorporates the definition of a public body meeting from the District's Open Meetings Act[39] to clarify what types of governmental decision-making bodies are included, be they federal or District. This change improves the clarity of the revised statutes.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

The RCC criminalizes public nuisances in a stand-alone offense. Under current District law, conduct constituting a public nuisance is criminalized in the disorderly conduct statute,[40] along with crimes such as stealthily looking into a dwelling where there is an expectation of privacy and engaging in conduct that puts someone in reasonable fear a crime is about to occur. The RCC separately groups and subjects to the same punishment public nuisance-type offenses.

[38] CCE Report at Page 11.
[39] D.C. Code § 2-574.
[40] D.C. Code § 22-1321.

RCC § 22E-4203. Blocking a Public Way.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the blocking a public way for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The offense proscribes knowingly engaging in conduct that renders impassable, without unreasonable hazard, public ways after receiving a law enforcement order to stop such conduct. The revised Blocking a Public Way offense and revised Unlawful Demonstration offense[1] together replace the current District offense of Crowding, obstructing, or incommoding.[2] The revised blocking a public way offense also replaces the crime of Obstructing a Bridge Connecting Virginia to the District of Columbia[3] and also replaces several older District offenses.[4]

Paragraph (a)(1) specifies that a person's conduct must block a street, sidewalk, bridge, path, entrance, exit, or passageway.[5] The location blocked may be a privately owned location, so long as the other requirements of the offense are met.[6] The term "blocks" is defined in RCC § 22E-701 to mean "render safe passage through a space difficult or impossible."[7] The revised offense does not include minor incommoding that poses no risk to passers-by.[8] However, a person is liable under the revised statute for conduct that, but for the intervention of a law enforcement officer, would render the public way impassable without unreasonable hazard.[9] Because the definition refers to "render impassable," no proof that a person actually attempted to make use of the public way and was unable to do so is required.[10] Paragraph (a)(1) also specifies the culpable mental state for subsection (a) to be knowledge, a term defined at RCC § 22E-206 and here requiring that the defendant must at least be aware to a practical certainty that his or her conduct "blocks" a street, sidewalk, bridge, etc.

---

[1] RCC § 22E-4204.
[2] D.C. Code § 22-1307.
[3] D.C. Code § 22-1323.
[4] D.C. Code §§ 22-1318; 22-3319; 22-3321; and 22-3322.
[5] The words "street" and "path" broadly encompass all roads, trails, tunnels, alleys, boulevards and avenues.
[6] For example, RCC § 22E-4203 is applicable when the actor is on a public sidewalk immediately abutting a private entrance on private land (or in a private building), effectively blocking the entrance to the private entrance (or building). The list of locations that may be blocked in paragraph (a)(1) is not limited to government property, however the actor must themselves be on government land or in a government building under paragraph (a)(2).
[7] For example, a person blocking a sidewalk such that pedestrians have to walk around onto a busy street in order to pass likely is an offense.
[8] For example, a person standing or sitting on part of a sidewalk that pedestrians have to step around likely is not committing an offense.
[9] For example, a person lying down and blocking two lanes of a highway, forcing police to redirect traffic around the person to avoid an unreasonable hazard, likely is an offense.
[10] For example, if a group of persons blocked off a street that was not currently in use by cars or pedestrians and refused to move after receiving a police order to do so, these persons would be guilty of completed blocking a public way.

Paragraph (a)(2) specifies that the area the person is on land or in a building that is owned by a government,[11] government agency,[12] or government-owned corporation.[13] This includes passageways through or within a park or reservation.[14] Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the "knowingly" mental state in paragraph (a)(1) also applies to paragraph (a)(2), requiring the defendant to be at least aware to a practical certainty that they are in a government-owned space.

Paragraph (a)(3) requires the government to prove that the accused received a lawful law enforcement order to stop blocking and that the accused disregarded that directive. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the "knowingly" mental state in paragraph (a)(1) also applies to most elements in paragraph (a)(3). "Knowingly" is a defined term[15] and here means the person must be practically certain that he or she received an order from someone he or she is practically certain is a law enforcement officer.[16] "Law enforcement officer" is a defined term.[17] The order may be personalized to the individual or directed to an entire group and may be articulated in various ways so long as the meaning is clear. The order may be temporary or enduring in scope.[18] There is no requirement that the police order indicate the reasons for the order. The person must be afforded fair notice and a reasonable opportunity to comply with the law enforcement order to stop blocking.[19] Where a person is uncertain as to whether they can safely comply with the order, a justification defense may apply.[20] The accused must also be practically certain that his or her action constitutes a continuance or resumption of the blocking conduct that was the [11] E.g., District of Columbia, federal government.

[12] E.g., Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority.
[13] E.g., Amtrak.
[14] D.C. Code § 22-1307(a)(1)(D).
[15] RCC § 22E-206.
[16] A person who does not know the speaker is a law enforcement officer or who does not know the order is directed to them does not commit blocking a public way.
[17] RCC § 22E-701.
[18] For examples of when having a prior warning for blocking is sufficiently related to current conduct to provide for liability, see: Committee on the Judiciary and Public Safety, Report on Bill 18-425, the Disorderly Conduct Amendment Act of 2010 (Nov. 18, 2010) at 7 ("It is the Committee's intent that a person can be arrested if he or she reappears in the same place after warning, even if some time later - e.g., if the officer gives the warning, remains present, the person stops incommoding, but then the person resumes incommoding in the officer's presence. If a homeless person, as another example, is asked by the same officer to move day after day from blocking a store entrance, and then the officer says something to the effect that 'I've told you to move every day, and if I come back here tomorrow and you are blocking this doorway again you will be arrested,' the Committee expects that the person could be arrested without another warning.").
[19] See RCC § 22E-203 (requiring physical capacity to perform a required legal duty); Conley v. United States, 79 A.3d 270, 292-293 (D.C. 2013) (explaining voluntariness requires a reasonable opportunity to comply with a legal duty); Lambert v. People of the State of California, 355 U.S. 225, 229 (1957) (reversing a conviction where, on first becoming aware of her duty, the appellant had no opportunity to comply with the law and avoid its penalty.) see also Barham v. Ramsey, 434 F.3d 565, 576 (D.C. Cir. 2006) (requiring an opportunity to comply with a dispersal order); Dellums v. Powell, 566 F.2d 167, 181 n.31 (D.C. Cir. 1977); Wash. Mobilization Comm. v. Cullinane, 566 F.2d 107, 126 n.5 (D.C. Cir. 1977).
[20] See RCC § 22E-401, Lesser Harm.

object of the law enforcement officer order. The order itself must be lawful.[21] "In fact," a defined term,[22] is used to indicate that there is no culpable mental state requirement as to whether the order is lawful.[23]

Subsection (b) states that the Attorney General for the District of Columbia is responsible for prosecuting violations of the statute.

Subsection (c) provides the penalty for the offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.]

Subsection (d) cross-references applicable definitions in the RCC.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised blocking a public way statute clearly changes current District law in three main ways.

First, the revised statute does not prohibit blocking use of or passage through a public conveyance. In addition to public land and buildings, the current D.C. Code § 22-1307(a)(1)(C) refers to "The use of or passage through any…public conveyance." The term "public conveyance" is not defined, and there is no case law on point. The District's disorderly conduct statute contains a similar provision relating to public conveyances.[24] In contrast, the RCC punishes purposely interrupting a person's lawful use of a public conveyance as a public nuisance crime.[25] This change clarifies and eliminates unnecessary overlap between revised offenses.

Second, the revised statute applies only to land or buildings owned by a government, government agency, or government-owned corporation. The current crowding, obstructing, or incommoding statute is unclear as to whether the streets, sidewalks, etc.,[26] or entrances to buildings[27] covered by the statute must be on publicly owned property. However, while noting that it would be possible to construe the statute as covering only public locations where an unlawful entry charge could not be brought and recognizing the absence of any legislative history,[28] the DCCA has upheld a conviction for blocking an area "inside a private inclosure on a private driveway leading to the door of a private building."[29] In contrast, the RCC blocking a public way statute excludes conduct on or in all privately owned land and buildings.[30] Unwanted entries onto private property

---

[21] Where a law enforcement officer infringes on a person's freedom of movement without requisite cause or authority, in violation of any federal or District law, the person has not committed a blocking offense.
[22] RCC § 22E-207.
[23] Consider, for example, a construction team or a group of organized protesters that (incorrectly) believes it has a valid permit to block a particular street. Such a group is subject to criminal liability for blocking. Such conduct also may subject to arrest pursuant to 18 DCMR § 2000.2 (Failure to Obey a Lawful Order of a Police Officer) or 24 DCMR § 2100 (Crowd and Traffic Control).
[24] D.C. Code § 22-1321(c) ("It is unlawful for a person to engage in loud, threatening, or abusive language, or disruptive conduct with the intent and effect of impeding or disrupting the lawful use of a public conveyance by one or more other persons.").
[25] RCC § 22E-4202.
[26] D.C. Code § 22-1307(a)(1)(A).
[27] D.C. Code § 22-1307(a)(1)(B).
[28] Morgan v. District of Columbia, 476 A.2d 1128, 1130 (D.C. 1984).
[29] Id.
[30] Note, however, that RCC § 22E-4203 is applicable when the actor is on a public sidewalk immediately abutting a private entrance on private land (or in a private building), effectively blocking the entrance to the remain separately criminalized as trespass.[31] The revised statute's phrase "owned by a government, government agency, or government-owned corporation" makes clear that land or buildings owned by the Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority, Amtrak, and similar locations are within the scope of the revised statute. This change clarifies and reduces unnecessary overlap between revised offenses.

Third, the revised statute repeals and replaces the archaic and unused offense of Driving or riding on footways in public grounds[32] and several other older District offenses.[33] Since this statute was codified in 1892, modes of transportation have drastically change and the District now regulates licensure, traffic, and safety through other mechanisms. Statistics indicate that the statute has not been charged in recent years and the penalty—$1-5—indicates that it has not been a practical deterrent in decades. In contrast, the revised statute provides a clear, consistent way to address misuse of public ways. This change clarifies the revised statute.

Beyond these three changes to current District law, two other aspects of the revised statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised statute specifies that knowledge is the mental state that applies to the elements in paragraphs (a)(1)-(a)(3). No mental state is specified in the current D.C. Code § 22-1307 statute with respect to any elements. Case law indicates some kind of intent is necessary, though the precise kind of intent is unclear.[34] In one case, the District of Columbia Court of Appeals ("DCCA") has recognized that a reasonable mistake defense may apply to crowding, obstructing, or incommoding.[35] The Obstructing bridges connecting D.C. and Virginia statute[36] specifies a culpable mental state of "knowingly and willfully" but does not require a prior law enforcement order to cease obstructing a bridge. To resolve this ambiguity, the revised statute clearly specifies a culpable mental state of "knowingly." Applying a knowledge culpable mental state requirement to statutory elements that distinguish innocent from criminal behavior is a well-established practice in private entrance (or building). The list of locations that may be blocked in paragraph (a)(1) is not limited to government property, however the actor must themselves be on government land or in a government building under paragraph (a)(2).

[31] RCC § 22E-2601.

[32] D.C. Code § 22-1318 ("If any person shall drive or lead any horse, mule, or other animal, or any cart, wagon, or other carriage whatever on any of the paved or graveled footways in and on any of the public grounds belonging to the United States within the District of Columbia, or shall ride thereon, except at the intersection of streets, alleys, and avenues, each and every such offender shall forfeit and pay for each offense a sum not less than $1 nor more than $5.").

[33] D.C. Code §§ 22-1318; 22-3319; 22-3321; and 22-3322.

[34] The DCCA has stated that the offense is one of "general intent" which it noted is frequently defined to require "the absence of an exculpatory state of mind." Morgan v. District of Columbia, 476 A.2d 1128, 1132 (D.C. 1984). Under the RCC all physical acts must be voluntary per RCC § 22E-203, but neither the Morgan court nor any other DCCA rulings specifically address in detail the culpable mental state required for particular elements in the current crowding, obstructing, or incommoding statute.

[35] Morgan v. District of Columbia, 476 A.2d 1128, 1133 (D.C. 1984).

[36] D.C. Code § 22-1323.

American jurisprudence.[37] Given that the current and revised statutes require a warning from a law enforcement officer to the defendant, the defendant will typically have actual knowledge that he or she is blocking a public way. This change improves the clarity, consistency, and completeness of the revised statute.

Second, through its use of the definition of "block," the revised blocking a public way offense specifies that the standard for determining prohibited conduct is whether it makes safe passage on the street, sidewalk, etc., difficult or impossible. The current statute is silent as to the meaning of the verbs "crowd, obstruct, or incommode"[38] used to indicate the prohibited behavior. No case law has defined these words either, although the fact patterns in cases are generally consistent with the revised definition of "blocks."[39] To resolve this ambiguity, the revised statute codifies a standard definition of what constitutes blocking. The requirement that the accused's conduct render safe passage difficult or impossible does not provide liability for mere loitering, where a person can still navigate around the accused without undue risk. This change improves the clarity of the revised statutes.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

First, the revised statute, in combination with unlawful demonstration, RCC § 22E-4204, divides and replaces the current District offense of crowding, obstructing, or incommoding.[40] The revised blocking a public way offense effectively replaces subsection (a) of the current law and the revised unlawful demonstration offense replaces subsection (b). This change logically reorganizes the statutes, given that each provision describes markedly different conduct.

Second, the revised statute prohibits blocking a street, sidewalk, bridge, path, entrance, exit, or passageway. Current D.C. § 22-1307(a) makes it unlawful to block (A) The use of any street, avenue, alley, road, highway, or sidewalk; (B) The entrance of any public or private building or enclosure; (C) The use of or passage through any public building or public conveyance; (D) The passage through or within any park or reservation. These terms are not defined by statute or in case law. The Obstructing bridges connecting D.C. and Virginia statute[41] refers only to "any bridge connecting the District of Columbia [37] See Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2009 (2015) ("[O]ur cases have explained that a defendant generally must 'know the facts that make his conduct fit the definition of the offense,' even if he does not know that those facts give rise to a crime. (Internal citation omitted.)"). See also Carrell v. United States, 165 A.3d 314, 323 n. 22 (D.C. 2017) (analogizing the difference between "general intent" and "specific intent" as recognized in Supreme Court case law to the difference between "knowledge" and "purpose," respectively.

[38] D.C. Code § 22-1307.

[39] For example, the DCCA affirmed a conviction where protestors blocked the front of the Rayburn congressional office building and "the trial judge found that, 'while not 100 percent blocked, [the building entrance] was significantly impeded or incommoded' because 'people had to pick their way around individuals lying on the ground in sheets,' some 'less than two or three feet…from the entryway.'" Tetaz v. District of Columbia, 976 A.2d 907, 911 (D.C. 2009). Such facts would likely constitute blocking under revised statute because the entryway was rendered impassable without unreasonable hazard.

[40] D.C. Code § 22-1307.

[41] D.C. Code § 22-1323.

and the Commonwealth of Virginia." The revised statute simplifies the list of covered locations to a street, sidewalk, bridge, path, entrance, exit, or passageway. The common meanings of these undefined terms are intended, and they should be construed broadly.

Third, the revised offense blocking a public way offense merges in the existing District offense for obstructing bridges connecting D.C. and Virginia statute.[42] A separate statute regarding bridges to Virginia is unnecessary. The revised statute specifically lists bridges as one of the covered locations, and the revised statute is intended to cover bridges to the same extent as the prior statute.[43]

[42] D.C. Code § 22-1323 ("Effective with respect to conduct occurring on or after August 5, 1997, whoever in the District of Columbia knowingly and willfully obstructs any bridge connecting the District of Columbia and the Commonwealth of Virginia: (1) Shall be fined not less than $1,000 and not more than $5,000, and in addition may be imprisoned not more than 30 days; or (2) If applicable, shall be subject to prosecution by the District of Columbia under the provisions of District law and regulation amended by the Safe Streets Anti-Prostitution Amendment Act of 1996.").

[43] Notably, unlike the revised Blocking a Public Way offense, current D.C. Code § 22-1323 does not require a lawful law enforcement order. Additionally, current law authorizes a fine of $5,000, making it a jury-demandable offense. D.C. Code § 16-705(b)(1)(A).

RCC § 22E-4204. Unlawful Demonstration.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the unlawful demonstration offense for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The offense proscribes knowingly engaging in conduct that constitutes a demonstration, in locations where demonstration is prohibited by law, after receiving a law enforcement order to stop such conduct. The revised Unlawful Demonstration offense and revised Blocking a Public Way offense[1] together replace the current District offense of Crowding, obstructing, or incommoding.[2] The revised unlawful demonstration offense also replaces D.C. Code § 10-503.17 (Parades, assemblages, and displays forbidden).

Paragraph (a)(1) describes the conduct required for the offense: engaging in a demonstration. The term "demonstrating" is defined in RCC § 22E-701 and means an act of marching, congregating, standing, sitting, lying down, parading, demonstrating, or patrolling by one or more persons, with or without signs, with the desire to persuade one or more individuals, or the public, or to protest some action, attitude, or belief. Paragraph (a)(1) also specifies that the person must act "knowingly," a term that is defined in RCC § 22E-206 and here requires that the defendant at least be aware to a practical certainty that his or her conduct constitutes a demonstration.

Paragraph (a)(2) requires that the defendant engage in a demonstration in a place where it is otherwise unlawful. Thus, if a civil or criminal statute specifically prohibits a demonstration inside the United States Capitol[3] or the Supreme Court,[4] a person may commit the revised unlawful demonstration offense by engaging in a demonstration in that location. However, there is no liability for unlawful demonstration unless some other law prohibits demonstration in that location.[5] Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the "knowingly" mental state in paragraph (a)(1) also applies to paragraph (a)(2), here requiring the defendant at least to be aware to a practical certainty that the location is one where demonstration is otherwise unlawful.

Paragraph (a)(3) requires the government to prove that the accused received a law enforcement order to stop demonstrating and that the accused disregarded that directive. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the "knowingly" mental state in paragraph (a)(1) also applies to paragraph (a)(3). "Knowingly" is a defined term[6] and here means the person must be practically certain that he or she received an order from someone he or she is practically certain is a law enforcement officer.[7] "Law enforcement officer" is

[1] RCC § 22E-4203.
[2] D.C. Code § 22-1307.
[3] D.C. Code § 10-503.16.
[4] 40 U.S.C. § 6135.
[5] For example, absent any law prohibiting demonstration on a particular sidewalk, an advocacy group does not commit unlawful demonstration by standing on that sidewalk and soliciting petition signatures or donations. Similarly a group of laborers who are picketing on a sidewalk does not commit unlawful demonstration absent a law prohibiting demonstration in that location. Notably, a person may be liable under RCC § 22E-4203, blocking a public way, for related conduct.
[6] RCC § 22E-206.
[7] A person who does not know the speaker is a law enforcement officer or who does not know the order is directed to them does not commit blocking a public way.

a defined term.[8] The order may be personalized to the individual or directed to an entire group, and may be articulated in various ways so long as the meaning is clear. There is no requirement that the police order indicate the reasons for the order. The person must be afforded fair notice and a reasonable opportunity to comply with the law enforcement order to stop demonstrating.[9] Where a person is uncertain as to whether they can safely comply with the order, a justification defense may apply. The accused must also be practically certain that his or her action constitutes a continuance or resumption of the demonstrating conduct that was the object of the law enforcement officer order.

Subsection (b) states that the Attorney General for the District of Columbia is responsible for prosecuting violations of the statute.

Subsection (c) provides the penalties for the offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.]

Subsection (d) cross-references applicable definitions in the RCC.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised unlawful demonstration statute does not clearly change current District law, however, two aspects of the revised statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised statute clarifies that a culpable mental state of "knowingly" applies to all elements of the offense, except strict liability is required as to the fact that demonstration in the location is otherwise unlawful under District of Columbia or federal law. The current statute is silent as to culpable mental state elements. There is no case law on the unlawful demonstration portion of the crowding, obstructing, or incommoding offense.[10] To resolve this ambiguity, the revised statute specifies a knowledge culpable mental state requirement to most elements, except it applies strict liability to the unlawfulness of demonstrating in the particular location. Applying a knowledge culpable mental state requirement to statutory elements that distinguish innocent from criminal behavior is a well-established practice in American jurisprudence.[11] Given that the current and revised statute require a warning from a law enforcement officer to the defendant, a defendant will typically have actual knowledge that he or she is demonstrating in an area where demonstration is not permitted. However, given that failure to obey a lawful law

[8] RCC § 22E-701.

[9] See RCC § 22E-203 (requiring physical capacity to perform a required legal duty); Conley v. United States, 79 A.3d 270, 292-293 (D.C. 2013) (explaining voluntariness requires a reasonable opportunity to comply with a legal duty); Lambert v. People of the State of California, 355 U.S. 225, 229 (1957) (reversing a conviction where, on first becoming aware of her duty, the appellant had no opportunity to comply with the law and avoid its penalty.) see also Barham v. Ramsey, 434 F.3d 565, 576 (D.C. Cir. 2006) (requiring an opportunity to comply with a dispersal order); Dellums v. Powell, 566 F.2d 167, 181 n.31 (D.C. Cir. 1977); Wash. Mobilization Comm. v. Cullinane, 566 F.2d 107, 126 n.5 (D.C. Cir. 1977).

[10] D.C. Code § 22-1307(b). Note that this portion of the statute is new, having been introduced as legislation in as part of the omnibus Criminal Code Amendments Act of 2012 at the suggestion of the United States Attorney. Report on Bill 19-645, the "Criminal Code Amendments Act of 2012," Council of the District of Columbia Committee on the Judiciary (December 1, 2012).

[11] See Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2009 (2015) ("[O]ur cases have explained that a defendant generally must 'know the facts that make his conduct fit the definition of the offense,' even if he does not know that those facts give rise to a crime. (Internal citation omitted.)").

enforcement order likely already involves prohibited conduct,[12] strict liability is imposed as to the additional fact of the location being barred from demonstration under another law. This change improves the clarity and completeness of the revised statute.

Second, the revised statute repeals D.C. Code § 10-503.17. Identical to language in a federal statute that has been held unconstitutional on First and Fifth Amendment grounds.[13] This change ensures the constitutionality of the revised statutes.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

The revised statute, in combination with blocking a public way, RCC § 22E-4203, divides and replaces the current District offense of crowding, obstructing, or incommoding.[14] The revised blocking a public way offense effectively replaces subsection (a) of the current law and the revised unlawful demonstration offense replaces subsection (b). This logically reorganizes the offense, given that each provision describes markedly different conduct.

[12] See 18 DCMR § 2000.2 and RCC § 22E-4203.
[13] Jeannette Rankin Brigade v. Chief of Capitol Police, 342 F. Supp. 575, 583 (D.D.C. 1972) (concerning 40 U.S.C. § 193g).
[14] D.C. Code § 22-1307.

RCC § 22E-4205. Breach of Home Privacy.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the invasion of home privacy offense and penalty for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The offense prohibits peering into a dwelling without permission. The offense replaces a subsection of the current disorderly conduct offense, D.C. Code § 22-1321(f).[1]

Paragraph (a)(1) specifies that a person must act knowingly and surreptitiously. "Knowingly" is a defined term[2] and, applied here, means that the person must be practically certain that they are observing inside a dwelling. The term "dwelling" is defined in RCC § 22E-701 to include any structure that is designed for lodging or residing overnight, including, in multi-unit buildings, communal areas secured from the general public.[3] The dwelling may be occupied or unoccupied at the time of the offense. The phrase "by any means" clarifies that, unlike a trespass,[4] the offense does not require a physical intrusion into the dwelling. Unlike a burglary,[5] the offense does not require other criminal intent such as an intent to commit theft or voyeurism.

Paragraph (a)(2) uses the term "in fact" to specify that there is no culpable mental state required as to whether a person in the occupant's circumstances would reasonably expect that such an observation would not occur. A person does not commit an offense where it is objectively reasonable to peer into the dwelling of another.[6]

Subsection (b) states that the Attorney General for the District of Columbia is responsible for prosecuting violations of the statute.

Subsection (c) provides the penalty for the revised offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.]

Subsection (d) cross-references applicable definitions in the RCC.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised breach of home privacy statute does not clearly change current District law, however, one aspect of the revised statute may constitute a substantive change to current District law.

The revised statute defines the term "dwelling" differently than in the current statute to address multi-unit buildings. Current D.C. Code § 22-1321(f) refers to the definition of "dwelling" in D.C. Code § 6-101.07(4). This provision, in turn, states: "The term 'dwelling' means any building or structure used or designed to be used in whole or in part as a living or a sleeping place by 1 or more human beings." In contrast, the definition of "dwelling" in RCC § 22E-701 more precisely states: "'Dwelling' means a structure that is either designed for lodging or residing overnight, including, in multi-unit buildings,

[1] Other subsections of the current disorderly conduct statute have been addressed elsewhere in the revised code.
[2] "Knowingly" is defined in RCC § 22E-206.
[3] This includes motor vehicles, watercraft, and tents that are designed or used as a residence.
[4] RCC § 22E-2601.
[5] RCC § 22E-2701.
[6] For example, it may be reasonable for a prospective buyer to peer into a window that is uncovered of a building that is for sale.

communal areas secured from the general public." This change improves the consistency of the revised statutes.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

First, the revised offense clarifies that the observation may occur "by any means." Current D.C. Code § 22-1321(f) makes it unlawful to "stealthily look into a window or other opening of a dwelling." It is unclear from the phrase "look into" whether the statute includes a person hacking into a camera inside a home.[7] District case law has not addressed this issue. The revised offense explicitly criminalizes observations "by any means." This change eliminates a possible gap in liability.

Second, the revised statute substitutes the word "surreptitiously" for "stealthily," for continuity with the revised burglary offense.[8] This change is not intended to substantively change the offense elements.

[7] See, e.g., Allyson Chiu, She installed a Ring camera in her children's room for 'peace of mind.' A hacker accessed it and harassed her 8-year-old daughter., Washington Post (December 12, 2019).
[8] RCC § 22E-2701.

RCC § 22E-4206. Indecent Exposure.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the indecent exposure offense and penalty gradations for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The offense prohibits public nudity and sex acts that are lewd. The offense replaces the current lewd, indecent, or obscene acts offense in the first sentence of D.C. Code § 22-1312.[1]

Subsection (a) specifies the elements of first degree indecent exposure. Paragraph (a)(1) requires that the accused knowingly engage in a sexual act, masturbation, or a sexual or sexualized display of the genitals, pubic area,[2] or anus, when there is less than a full opaque covering. "Knowingly" is a defined term[3] and applied here means that the person must be practically certain that they are engaging in the prohibited conduct.[4] The term "sexual act" is defined in RCC § 22E-701 and does not include a mere simulation.[5]

Subparagraph (a)(2)(A) specifies that the person's conduct must be visible to the complainant. The word "visible" means within the complainant's sightline and does not require proof that the complainant actually viewed the indecent display.[6] Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the person must know—that is, be practically certain—that they are visible to the complainant.

Subparagraph (a)(2)(B) requires that the person act without the complainant's effective consent. The terms "consent" and "effective consent" are defined in RCC § 22E-701. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the person must know—that is, be practically certain—that they do not have the complainant's effective consent to engage in the prohibited sexual activity in that place and at that time.[7]

Subparagraph (a)(2)(C) specifies that the accused must also act with the purpose of alarming or sexually abusing, humiliating, harassing, or degrading the complainant. As applied here, "purpose," a term defined in RCC § 22E-206, requires a conscious desire to

---

[1] The second sentence of the current statute (pertaining to sexual proposal to a minor) is addressed in RCC § 22E-1305 (Enticing a Minor Into Sexual Conduct).

[2] Reference to "pubic area" is intended to include liability for frontal nudity where the groin is visible but not the external genitalia.

[3] "Knowingly" is defined in RCC § 22E-206.

[4] Consider, for example, a person who is wearing a skirt that they believe is opaque but is actually sheer in natural sunlight. Such a person does not commit an indecent exposure offense. "The exposure must be intentional and not accidental…" Peyton v. Dist. of Columbia, 100 A.2d 36, 37 (D.C. 1953). "Ordinary acts involving exposure as a result of carelessness or thoughtlessness, particularly when such acts take place within the privacy of one's home, do not in themselves establish the offense of indecent exposure." Parnigoni v. Dist. of Columbia, 933 A.2d 823, 826-27 (D.C. 2007) (citing Selph v. District of Columbia, 188 A.2d 344, 345 (D.C.1963)).

[5] See Report on Bill 18-425, "Disorderly Conduct Amendment Act of 2009," Council of the District of Columbia Committee on Public Safety and the Judiciary (November 19, 2010) at Pages 7-8 (rejecting a proposal by USAO, OAG, and MPD to include simulations).

[6] For example, it is not a defense that the complainant closed her eyes or turned away before the defendant fully exposed himself.

[7] A person does not commit first degree indecent exposure if they subjectively believe—reasonably or unreasonably—that the recipient consents to viewing the conduct. The indecent exposure statute was not intended to apply to an act committed in private in the presence of a single and consenting person. Parnigoni v. Dist. of Columbia, 933 A.2d 823, 827 (D.C. 2007) (citing Rittenour v. District of Columbia, 163 A.2d 558, 559 (D.C.1960); District of Columbia v. Garcia, 335 A.2d 217, 224 (D.C. 1975)).

alarm or sexually abuse, humiliate, harass, or degrade the complainant. The phrase "with the purpose" indicates that it need not be proven that the complainant was actually alarmed, sexually abused, sexually humiliated, sexually harassed, or sexually degraded, so long as the actor consciously desired such a result.[8] The actor's behavior must be directed at the complainant to whom the actor's behavior is visible and who has not given effective consent, not a third party.

Subsection (b) specifies the elements of second degree indecent exposure. Paragraph (b)(1) is nearly identical to paragraph (a)(1), except that paragraph (b)(1)(C) does not require that a display of a person's genitals, pubic area, or anus be "sexual or sexualized." For example, a person may commit second degree indecent exposure by merely walking naked in a location open to the general public at the time of the offense. Although the other elements of second degree indecent exposure differ from first degree, these offenses are intended to merge when they arise from a single act or course of conduct.[9]

Paragraph (b)(2) requires that a person is either located in or visible from a location that is open to the general public; communal area of multi-unit housing; a public conveyance; or a rail transit station. The terms "open to the general public" and "public conveyance," and "rail transit station" are defined in RCC § 22E-701. A location is open to the general public only if no payment, membership, affiliation, appointment, or special permission is required to enter.[10] The word "visible" means within the complainant's sightline and does not require proof that the complainant actually viewed the indecent display.[11] Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the person must know—that is, be practically certain—that they are either in one of those locations or visible from one of those locations.

Paragraph (b)(3) specifies that the person must also be reckless as to three circumstances being present. The term "reckless" is defined in RCC § 22E-206 and here means the person must be aware of a substantial risk that they are visible to the complainant. The risk must be of such a nature and degree that, considering the nature of and motivation for the person's conduct and the circumstances the person is aware of, the person's conscious disregard of that risk is a gross deviation from the ordinary standard of conduct.

---

[8] The phrase "with the purpose," like the phrase "with intent," makes the language that follows inchoate. See RCC § 22E-205(b).

[9] See RCC § 22E-214. Absent a contrary legislative intent, the DCCA currently applies the Blockburger "elements test" to determine if two offenses that arise from a single act or course of conduct should merge. Byrd v. United States, 598 A.2d 386 (D.C. 1991). Under this test, if it possible to commit one offense without necessarily committing the other, the offenses do not merge.

[10] For example, a person who undresses inside a private theater or poses nude for a private art class does not commit indecent exposure. See also, Bolz v. D.C., 149 A.3d 1130, 1143 (D.C. 2016) ("Even as to expressive nudity, the provision's imposition on First Amendment rights is limited. It applies only "in public," a phrase that the legislative history defines as "in open view; before the people at large," D.C. Council, Report on Bill 18–425 at 7 (Nov. 19, 2010). Thus, the challenged provision does not encompass a number of the settings cited by Mr. Givens, for example, an in-studio display of nudity for a painting class or an indoor theatrical performance that requires the purchase of a ticket.").

[11] For example, it is not a defense that the complainant closed her eyes or turned away before the defendant fully exposed himself.

Subparagraph (b)(3)(A) specifies that the person's conduct must be visible to the complainant. The word "visible" means within the complainant's sightline and does not require proof that the complainant actually viewed the indecent display.[12] Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the person must be at least reckless as to the fact that their conduct is visible to the complainant.[13]

Subparagraph (b)(3)(B) requires that the person act without the complainant's effective consent. The terms "consent" and "effective consent" are defined in RCC § 22E-701. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the person must be reckless as to the fact that they do not have the complainant's effective consent to engage in the prohibited conduct.

Subparagraph (b)(3)(C) requires that the person actually alarm[14] or sexually abuse, humiliate, harass, or degrade the complainant. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the person must be at least reckless as to the fact that their conduct is alarming, sexually abusive, humiliating, harassing, or degrading to the complainant.

Subsection (c) establishes two exclusions from liability for the indecent exposure offense. Paragraph (c)(1) excludes liability for a person who is engaging in conduct that is visible only to people who are inside the actor's home. This provision provides a clear safe harbor for nudity within one's dwelling that is not visible to anyone outside the dwelling. Per the rules of construction in RCC § 22E-207, the "in fact" specified in paragraph (c)(1) applies to the requirements in subparagraphs (c)(1)(A) and (c)(1)(B). "In fact" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-207 that means there is no culpable mental state for a given element, here the requirements in subparagraphs (c)(1)(A) and (c)(1)(B).

Paragraph (c)(2) excludes liability for employees of licensed adult entertainment businesses (e.g., a strip club) who are acting within the reasonable scope of their professional duties.[15] This provision provides a clear safe harbor for nudity within a business licensed for such conduct and within the normal scope of that business. The term "sexually-oriented business establishment" is defined in paragraph (f)(2) to have the meaning specified in 11 DCMR § 199.1. Per the rules of construction in RCC § 22E-207, the "in fact" specified in paragraph (c)(2) applies to the requirements in subparagraphs (c)(2)(A) and (c)(2)(B). "In fact" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-207 that means there is no culpable mental state for a given element, here the requirements in subparagraphs (c)(2)(A) and (c)(2)(B).

Subsection (d) states that the Attorney General for the District of Columbia is responsible for prosecuting second degree indecent exposure.

---

[12] For example, it is not a defense that the complainant closed her eyes or turned away before the defendant fully exposed himself.

[13] See Peyton v. Dist. of Columbia, 100 A.2d 36, 37 (D.C. 1953).

[14] The word "alarm" is not defined and should be construed broadly per its ordinary meaning. Consider, for example, a crossing guard who is not personally offended but is nevertheless alarmed out of concern for children who might see the exposure.

[15] The exclusion does not apply to a rogue employee who is acting ultra vires.

Subsection (e) provides the penalty for each gradation of the revised offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.]

Paragraph (f) cross-references applicable definitions in the RCC and the D.C. Code.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised indecent exposure statute clearly changes current District law in two main ways.

First, the revised statute establishes two distinct penalties for indecent exposure. Current D.C. Code § 22-1312 provides only one sentencing gradation: 90 days in jail. In contrast, the revised statute punishes purposeful conduct directed at a complainant more severely than reckless conduct in a location open to the general public. For example, a person who confronts a complainant in an office building and masturbates in front of them, with a desire to alarm or sexually harass or sexually degrade the complainant, commits first degree indecent exposure. A couple having sex in a car in a public park, reckless as to the fact that passersby see them and are alarmed, commits second degree indecent exposure. This change improves the proportionality of the revised offense.

Second, the revised statute expands liability to conduct that occurs in a location that is not public. Current D.C. Code § 22-1312 requires that an indecent exposure offense occur "in public." The term "public" is not defined in the statute. District case law—relying on legislative history—has explained that "in public" means "in open view; before the people at large."[16] In contrast, the revised statute provides liability for conduct that is calculated to offend an individual complainant in any location (first degree) and conduct that more broadly offends order in specified locations "open to the general public" (second degree). Sexual conduct described in the statute that is without effective consent and targets a complainant may not be otherwise criminal,[17] but may be extremely alarming or sexually degrading whether or not the conduct occurs in a non-public setting. Unlike the current statute's undefined reference to a location that is "in public," for second degree liability under the revised statute a person must also be in a location that is "open to the general public" at the time of the offense, a communal area of multi-unit housing, a "public conveyance," or a "rail transit station," as these terms are defined in RCC § 22E-701. The revised statute also provides clear exceptions to liability for a person who disrobes inside their own home or inside an adult entertainment business, without exposing themselves to [16] Bolz v. Dist. of Columbia, 149 A.3d 1130, 1143-44 (D.C. 2016) ("Even as to expressive nudity, the provision's imposition on First Amendment rights is limited. It applies only "in public," a phrase that the legislative history defines as "in open view; before the people at large," D.C. Council, Report on Bill 18–425 at 7 (Nov. 19, 2010). Thus, the challenged provision does not encompass a number of the settings cited by Mr. Givens, for example, an in-studio display of nudity for a painting class or an indoor theatrical performance that requires the purchase of a ticket. Instead, the revised statute confines this provision's reach to settings wherein expressive nudity can be constitutionally regulated because minors might be present or nonconsenting adults are not easily shielded from displays of nudity. 31 Cf. Parnigoni v. District of Columbia, 933 A.2d 823 (D.C. 2007) (upholding, under an earlier form of § 22–1312 that lacked an express "in public" element, a conviction for conduct that occurred in a private home).").

[17] For example, masturbating in front of another person is not otherwise criminal under the current D.C. Code or RCC unless there is a minor complainant, or the conduct has additional characteristics that make it constitute a criminal threat, disorderly conduct, or attempted sexual crime.

others outside.[18] This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised offense and eliminates an unnecessary gap in law.

Beyond these two changes to current District law, four other aspects of the revised statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised statute applies standardized definitions for the culpable mental states required for indecent exposure liability. Current D.C. Code § 22-1312 does not specify a culpable mental state for any element of the offense. The sole appellate decision interpreting the current version of the statute does not address the issue.[19] In contrast, the revised statute uses the RCC's general provisions that define "purposefully," "knowingly," and "recklessly"[20] and specify that culpable mental states apply until the occurrence of a new culpable mental state in the offense.[21] Applying a knowledge culpable mental state requirement to statutory elements that distinguish innocent from criminal behavior is a well-established practice in American jurisprudence.[22] These changes clarify and improve the consistency of District statutes.

Second, the revised statute defines the type of nudity that is prohibited in public, consistent with other privacy offenses. Current D.C. Code § 22-1312 makes it unlawful for a person to publicly "make an obscene or indecent exposure of his or her genitalia or anus." The terms "obscene," "indecent," and "genitalia" are not defined in the statute. District case law has not addressed the meaning of "obscene" or "indecent" in the context of the indecent exposure statute.[23] However, the DCCA has held that the term "genitalia" in a prior version of D.C. Code § 22-1312 includes the "front vaginal area."[24] It is not clear whether frontal nudity that does not show female genitalia is covered by the current statute.

---

[18] RCC §§ 22E-4206(c)(3) and (4).

[19] Bolz v. Dist. of Columbia, 149 A.3d 1130, 1143 (D.C. 2016).

[20] RCC § 22E-206.

[21] RCC § 22E-207(a).

[22] There is a presumption that the legislature intends to require a defendant to possess a degree of knowledge sufficient to "mak[e] a person legally responsible for the consequences of his or her act or omission" regarding "each of the statutory elements that criminalize otherwise innocent conduct," even when the legislature does not specify any scienter in the statutory text. Rehaif v. United States, 17-9560, 2019 WL 2552487, at *3 (U.S. June 21, 2019) (citing United States v. X-Citement Video, Inc., 513 U. S. 64, 72 (1994); Morissette v. United States, 342 U. S. 246, 256–258 (1952); Staples v. United States, 511 U. S. 600, 606 (1994); Black's Law Dictionary 1547 (10th ed. 2014)); see also Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2009 (2015) ("[O]ur cases have explained that a defendant generally must 'know the facts that make his conduct fit the definition of the offense,' even if he does not know that those facts give rise to a crime." (Internal citation omitted)).

[23] The DCCA's sole ruling on the current indecent exposure statute indicates that the statute covers non-obscene nudity. Bolz v. D.C., 149 A.3d 1130, 1144 (D.C. 2016) ("Moreover, the challenged provision does not prohibit all nudity in public. It prohibits the exposure only of one's genitals or anus, thereby directing the prohibition at certain kinds of nudity that tend to be sexually evocative even if not "obscene." See Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15, 24, 27, 93 S.Ct. 2607, 37 L.Ed.2d 419 (1973) (defining obscene materials as "works which depict or describe [hard core] sexual conduct,…appeal to the prurient interest," and lack "serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value")."). But see Retzer v. United States, 363 A.2d 307, 309 (D.C. 1976) (narrowly construing "obscene" and "indecent" to ensure the constitutionality of the District's obscenity statute).

[24] Rolen-Love v. Dist. of Columbia, 980 A.2d 1063, 1066 (D.C. 2009) (The external organs "include the mons veneris…[and] the labia majora…").

Resolving these ambiguities, the revised statute includes liability for display of the pubic area and the statute's gradations provide liability for both sexual and non-sexual displays of the genitals, pubic area, and anus. Reference to "pubic area" is intended to include liability for frontal nudity where the groin is visible but not the external genitalia. This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised offense.

Third, the revised statute applies the standardized definition of "sexual act" in RCC § 22E-701. Current D.C. Code § 22-1312 makes it unlawful to publicly "engage in a sexual act as defined in § 22-3001(8)." The definition of "sexual act" in D.C. Code § 22-3001(8) requires in subsection (C) an "intent to abuse, humiliate, harass, degrade, or arouse or gratify the sexual desire." It is unclear whether penetration of the sort described in the current statute can be done with an intent that is not sexual in nature. There is no DCCA case law on point. Resolving this ambiguity, the revised statute applies the standardized RCC definition of "sexual act" which, in relevant part,[25] requires the intent to abuse, humiliate, etc. be sexual in nature. However, practically, it would be an exceedingly rare fact pattern where penetration-type conduct would occur that is with intent to abuse, humiliate, harass, degrade, or arouse or gratify that is not also done with intent to sexual abuse, humiliate, harass, degrade, or arouse or gratify.[26] This revision improves the clarity and consistency of the revised statute.

Fourth, the revised statute specifies that the Office of the Attorney General shall prosecute second degree indecent exposure. The prosecutorial authority of the OAG stems from D.C. Code § 23-101(b), which states in relevant part: "Prosecutions for violations of section 6 of the Act of July 29, 1892 (D.C. Official Code, sec. 22-1307), relating to disorderly conduct, and for violations of section 9 of that Act (D.C. Official Code, sec. 22-1312), relating to lewd, indecent, or obscene acts, shall be conducted in the name of the District of Columbia by the Corporation Counsel [Attorney General for the District of Columbia] or his assistants." (Emphasis added.) However, section 9 of the Act of July 29, 1892 does not include conduct by a person in a private location to a person who is in a private location (as is included in first degree indecent exposure).[27] Controlling DCCA

[25] Other differences between D.C. Code § 22-3001(8) and the revised definition of "sexual act" in RCC § 22E-701—e.g., the specific inclusion of bestiality and elimination of the "of another" requirement in subsection (A) of the current statute—do not appear to change the operation of the revised indecent exposure offense as compared to D.C. Code § 22-1312.

[26] While there can be virtually no penetration or oral contact that satisfies the definition of "sexual act" that is not sexual in nature, defining the term in this way aligns the revised definition of "sexual act" with the revised definition of "sexual contact" where requiring a sexual intent does have practical impact on distinguishing liability for an assault (e.g., hitting someone with a bicycle or car on their buttocks) and a sexual assault (e.g., hitting someone on their buttocks while commenting on their sexual attractiveness).

[27] See United States v. Strothers, 228 F.2d 34, 35 (D.C. Cir. 1955) ("On July 29, 1892, Congress passed 'An act for the preservation of the public peace and the protection of property within the District of Columbia', 27 Stat. 322. The first seventeen sections of this Act enumerated and made unlawful a number of certain actions, mostly minor in nature, some more serious, each section containing a separate provision for a penalty ranging from a maximum fine of five dollars in some instances to a maximum fine of two hundred and fifty dollars in some others. Section 18 of this Act provided that all prosecutions for the offenses were to be conducted in the name of and for the benefit of the District of Columbia. From the date of the passage of this Act until August 15, 1935, the Corporation Counsel for the District of Columbia, and his predecessors, prosecuted cases arising thereunder…"); An act for the preservation of the public peace and case law based on the Home Rule Act precludes Council assignment of prosecutorial authority to OAG unless the offenses falls into one of the categories in D.C. Code § 23-101(a) or is otherwise specifically provided by Congress.[28] To resolve ambiguity about prosecutorial authority, the revised statute does not purport to assign any prosecutorial authority to OAG for first degree indecent exposure because doing so may be inconsistent with District case law based on the Home Rule Act. However, based on the longstanding OAG prosecutorial jurisdiction over D.C. Code § 22-1312, the revised statute maintains OAG jurisdiction for locations open to the general public. This change improves the enforceability and consistency of the revised statutes.

the protection of property within the District of Columbia, 52nd Cong. § 9 (July 29, 1892) ("That it shall not be lawful for any person or persons to make any obscene or indecent exposure of his or her person or their persons in any street, avenue, or alley, road, or highway, open space, public square, or inclosure in the District of Columbia, or to make any such obscene or indecent exposure of person in any dwelling or other building or other place where from the same may be seen in any street, avenue, alley, road, or-highway, open space, public square, or inclosure, under a penalty not exceeding two hundred and fifty dollars for each and every such offense.").

[28] See, generally: In re Crawley, 978 A.2d 608 (D.C. 2009); In re Hall, 31 A.3d 453, 456 (D.C. 2011); and In re Settles, 218 A.3d 235 (D.C. 2019).

RCC § 22E-4301. Rioting.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the rioting offense for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The offense proscribes knowingly participating in a group of eight or more people who are each personally engaging in a criminal harm involving injury, property loss, or property damage. The revised offense replaces D.C. Code § 22-1322 (Rioting or inciting to riot).

Paragraph (a)(1) requires that the accused act "knowingly," a defined term,[1] which here means the person must be practically certain that he or she is personally attempting or committing a criminal harm involving bodily injury, taking of property, or damage to property.[2] A person who is engaging in conduct that is merely obnoxious, disruptive, or provocative is not liable for rioting.[3] "Bodily injury" is defined in RCC § 22E-701 and means physical pain, illness, or any impairment of physical condition. "Property" is defined in RCC § 22E-701 and means "anything of value." Conduct that constitutes only a criminal threat[4] and conduct not involving bodily injury, taking of property, or damage to property are not predicates for rioting liability.

Paragraph (a)(2) requires proof that seven[5] or more persons are also engaged in riotous conduct at the same time, in the same place. The riotous conduct of other persons need not be the precise type of conduct the actor is engaged in, but must also be criminal harm[6] involving bodily injury, taking of property, or damage to property.[7] The revised statute does not require that the eight people act in concert with one another[8] or organize together in advance.[9] However, the others' conduct must be in a location where the actor

---

[1] RCC § 22E-206.

[2] RCC offenses that involve bodily injury, loss of property, or damage to property include: Assault (RCC § 22E-1202), Robbery (RCC § 22E-1201), Murder (RCC § 22E-1101), Theft (RCC § 22E-2101), Arson (RCC § 22E-2501), Criminal Damage to Property (RCC § 22E-2503), and Criminal Graffiti (RCC § 22E-2504).

[3] The RCC does not outlaw "all 'offensive conduct' that disturbs 'any neighborhood or person.'" See Cohen v. California, 403 U.S. 15, 22 (1971); see also Tinker v. Des Moines Indep. Cmty. Sch. Dist., 393 U.S. 503, 508-09 (1969)("[I]n our system, undifferentiated fear or apprehension of disturbance is not enough to overcome the right to freedom of expression…[T]o justify prohibition of a particular expression of opinion, [the State] must be able to show that its action was caused by something more than a mere desire to avoid the discomfort and unpleasantness that always accompany an unpopular viewpoint.").

[4] For example, the RCC criminal threats statute is not included in the scope of the revised rioting statute.

[5] The RCC effectively defines a riot as a group of eight people engaging in lawless conduct in a group. Accordingly, the revised rioting offense, RCC § 22E-4301 requires the defendant behave in a riotous manner with seven other riotous people nearby. However, the revised failure to disperse offense, RCC § 22E-4302, does not require that the person participate in riotous conduct themselves and only requires proximity to the eight-person riot.

[6] The word "criminal" modifies the words that follow.

[7] For example, a person may engage in rioting by spray painting graffiti on a building while a dozen others are breaking windows and assaulting a security guard nearby.

[8] The revised code does not incorporate the common law requirement that persons act "with intent mutually to assist each other against any who shall oppose them." Riot, Black's Law Dictionary (2nd Ed.).

[9] United States v. Matthews, 419 F.2d 1177, 1185 (1969) ("It is not necessary for the members of the assemblage to have acted pursuant to an agreement or plan, either made in advance or made at the time, or for the members to concentrate their conduct on a single piece of property or one or more particular persons. The Defendant does not have to personally know or be acquainted with the other members of the can reasonably see or hear their activities.[10] Paragraph (a)(2) also requires a culpable mental state of recklessness, a term defined in RCC § 22E-206, which here means the accused must disregard a substantial risk that seven or more persons are engaged in riotous conduct nearby. A person who is merely present in or near a riot is not criminally liable under the revised rioting statute,[11] nor is a person only engaged in First Amendment activities or seeking to prevent criminal activities liable.[12]

Subsection (b) specifies that there is no attempt liability for the rioting offense as a whole. However, attempts to commit criminal bodily injury, taking of property, or damage to property are part of the element specified in paragraph (a)(1).

Subsection (c) provides the penalty for this offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.]

Subsection (d) cross-references applicable definitions in the RCC.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised rioting statute clearly changes current District law in four main ways.

First, the revised rioting statute has only one gradation that addresses attempted and completed criminal harms involving bodily injury, taking of property, or damage to property. The current rioting statute addresses a "public disturbance" that involves "tumultuous and violent conduct" and is divided into two sentencing gradations.[13] The lower grade consists of such conduct that "creates grave danger of damage or injury to property or persons" or incites persons to such risk-creating behavior.[14] Limited case law indicates that this lower grade does not include "minor breaches of the peace," but instead reaches "frightening group behavior" and "will usually be accompanied by the use of actual force or violence against property or persons."[15] The higher grade consists of inciting such assemblage. The other members of the assemblage need not be identified by name or their precise number established by the evidence.").

---

[10] Distances may vary widely, depending on facts including crowd density, noise, and height. See United States v. Matthews, 419 F.2d 1177, 1185 (1969) ("In determining whether there was an assemblage, you may take into account only what was taking place in the general vicinity where the Defendant is claimed to have engaged in the public disturbance. You may consider only the acts, shouts and noise of individuals engaged in tumultuous and violent conduct within the general awareness of the Defendant, that is, the activities which on the evidence you find he could reasonably have been expected to see or to hear at or about the time he engaged in the public disturbance if, in fact, you determine he did so engage.").

[11] S*ee United States v. Matthews*, 419 F.2d 1177, 1185 (1969) ("The mere accidental presence of the Defendant among persons engaged in such a public disturbance, however, without more, does not establish willful conduct or involvement.").

[12] For example, the following persons are not liable under the RCC rioting statute: a journalist who is present to observe and report on riotous activities; a demonstrator (or counter-demonstrator) who decides to peacefully remain at a particular location in protest; a community leader who acts as a "counterrioter" and attempts to calm the crowd; or a local resident using public ways to leave and return home through a group engaged in riotous activity.

[13] D.C. Code § 22-1322(a).

[14] D.C. Code §§ 22-1322(b) and (c).

[15] United States v. Matthews, 419 F.2d 1177, 1184-85 (1969) ("The conduct involved must be something more than mere loud noise-making or minor breaches of the peace. The offense requires a condition that has aroused or is apt to arouse public alarm or public apprehension where it is occurring. It involves frightening group behavior. Tumultuous and violent conduct will usually be accompanied by the use of actual force or violence against property or persons. At the very least it must be such conduct as has a clear conduct that actually causes "serious bodily harm or there is property damage in excess of $5,000."[16] The current statute's higher gradation has a maximum penalty twenty-times that of the lower gradation.[17] In contrast, the revised statute consists of one penalty gradation based on the attempt or commission of actual criminal harms involving bodily injury, taking of property, or damage to property. Revising the statute to require the attempt or commission of actual harms by the actor more clearly distinguishes rioting liability from minor breaches of the peace by a group, and, unlike the current statute, does not base the degree of punishment on the extent of others' misconduct.[18] Additional and alternative criminal punishments may also be available under other RCC offenses including, in the case of police-monitored crowds, the RCC failure to disperse offense.[19] This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statute.

Second, the revised statute requires eight people to form riot. The District's current rioting statute states that a riot is a "public disturbance involving an assemblage of 5 or more persons..."[20] Legislative history indicates that the threshold of five people was a subjective judgment based, in significant part, on administrative considerations that it is more convenient to prosecute five or more defendants together for the composite offense of rioting than to prosecute them separately for the underlying assault and property offenses.[21] In contrast, the revised statute raises the number of people that must be involved in riotous conduct to eight. This number excludes many common types of group misconduct from being categorized as a riot,[22] focusing the offense on large-scale events that may give rise to a mob mentality and overwhelm the ability of a few law enforcement officers to control the scene. This change improves the proportionality of the revised offense and reduces an unnecessary overlap between the composite offense of rioting and common occurrences of predicate offenses.

---

and apparent tendency to cause force or violence to erupt and thus create a grave danger of damage or injury to property or persons.").

[16] D.C. Code § 22-1322(d).

[17] The maximum imprisonment penalty for violations of subsection (b) and (c) is 180 days, compared to a 10-year maximum for a violation of subsection (d).

[18] The felony gradation in subsection (c) of the current rioting statute does not specify any culpable mental state as to the amount of overall injury resulting from the riot. Strict liability for the results of the riot would mean that a person would be liable even if a factfinder found that the defendant could not and should not have been expected to know that the bad results could occur—the defendant is liable even for unforeseeable accidents that may arise from the unanticipated actions of others in the disorderly group.

[19] RCC § 22E-4302.

[20] D.C. Code § 22-1322(a).

[21] See Hearing Before Subcommittee No. 4 of the Committee on the District of Columbia, on H.R. 12328, H.R. 12605, H.R. 12721, H.R. 12557, Oct. 4, 1967 (Fred M. Vinson, Jr., Assistant Attorney General, Criminal Division, Department of Justice: "There are statutes in the states going as high as ten people. There is one statute that may go as high as 20 people. The New York statute is four people. Several statutes are five people. It was our subjective judgment that five or more people might rise to the dignity of a riot. Certainly fewer people than that can cause great trouble. However, fewer people than that causing trouble are much easier to handle, prosecutively, with regard to substantive offenses."); see also United States v. Bridgeman, 523 F.2d 1099, 1113 (D.C. Cir. 1975) (finding that the District's rioting statute was a codification of common law rioting except for its requirement of 5 participants).

[22] Common examples include a three-versus-three, mutually-agreed upon street fight and a five-co-defendant robbery.

Third, the revised statute eliminates incitement as a distinct basis for rioting liability.[23] Subsection (c) of the current rioting statute separately criminalizes behavior that "incites or urges other persons to engage in a riot," and subsection (d) imposes heightened liability for conduct that "incited or urged others to engage in the riot" and serious bodily harm or property damage in excess of $5,000 resulted.[24] The terms "incite" and "urge" are not defined in the statute or in case law.[25] Legislative history suggests that Congress' targeting of incitement as a form of rioting may have been based on an assumption about the operation of race riots in the 1960s—subsequently deemed erroneous—that they were premeditated and orchestrated.[26] Regardless, legislative history suggests that both "incite" and "urge" were understood as terms "nearly synonymous with 'abet'" and refer to words or actions that "set in motion a riotous situation."[27] In contrast, under the revised statute, a person who "incites" or "encourages" rioting is only liable if his or her conduct suffices to meet requirements for liability as an accomplice[28] or is part of a criminal solicitation[29] or criminal conspiracy.[30] The revised statute relies on the general provisions regarding accomplice, solicitation, and conspiracy liability to more precisely establish the limits of what instances of "incitement" or "urging" are criminal, and to provide a more proportionate penalty for acting as an accomplice or co-conspirator. The revised statute's more specific requirements committing or attempting commit a specified harm (and reliance on widely-recognized requirements for accomplice, [23] Speech that incites violence is punished as disorderly conduct. RCC § 22E-4201(a)(2)(B). Abusive speech that is likely to provoke violence is punished as disorderly conduct. RCC § 22E-4201(a)(2)(C).

[24] D.C. Code § 22-1322(c).
[25] But see United States v. Jeffries, 45 F.R.D. 110, 117 (D.D.C. 1968) ("In the District of Columbia riot statute speech is only regulated under (b) where it is so closely brigaded with illegal action as to be an inseparable part of it.") (citing A Book Named 'John Cleland's Memoirs of a Woman of Pleasure' v. Attorney General of Com. of Massachusetts, 383 U.S. 413, 426 (1966) (J. Douglas concurring)).
[26] In support of the Anti-Riot Act, Rep. Joel Broyhill testified that recent District riots were premeditated, proclaiming, "These outbreaks of lawlessness that have become a scourge throughout this nation are not spontaneous in their origin. They are conceived in the twisted minds of the hate-mongers, a trained cadre of professional agitators who operate in open defiance of law, order, and decency…They plot the destruction…with zeal and devotion to stealth and secrecy." See Hearing Before Subcommittee No. 4 of the Committee on the District of Columbia, on H.R. 12328, H.R. 12605, H.R. 12721, H.R. 12557, Oct. 4, 1967, at Page 7. However, in 1968, President Johnson's "Kerner Commission" completed an in-depth study of riots in ten American cities. One of the commission's key findings was that "The urban disorders of the summer of 1967 were not caused by, nor were they the consequence of any organized plan or 'conspiracy.'" National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders Report, February 29, 1968, at Page 4.
[27] See Hearing Before Subcommittee No. 4 of the Committee on the District of Columbia, on H.R. 12328, H.R. 12605, H.R. 12721, H.R. 12557, Oct. 4, 1967, at Pages 23-25.
[28] See RCC § 22E-210.
[29] See RCC § 22E-302. A person has liability for criminal solicitation for purposely commanding, requesting, or trying to persuade another person to engage in or aid the planning or commission of a criminal bodily injury that satisfies the elements of an offense in RCC Subtitle II (Offenses against persons) or significant damage to property or taking of property that satisfies the elements of a felony offense in RCC Subtitle III (Property offenses). Solicitation liability attaches as soon as the actor gives a command, makes a request, or tries to persuade another. It does not require an agreement between the actor and person solicited (unlike conspiracy liability) and does not require the actor be dangerously close to committing the conduct (unlike attempt liability). The penalty for solicitation is half the penalty of the predicate offense.
[30] See RCC § 22E-303.

solicitation, and conspiracy liability to address efforts to start rioting) also limit potential conflicts with First Amendment protections.[31] This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statutes, and may help ensure the constitutionality of the revised rioting offense.

Fourth, the revised offense bars any general attempt liability. Under current law, rioting or inciting to riot is subject to the general attempt statute.[32] In contrast, under the revised offense, the elements of rioting include attempts and additional liability under the general attempt statute is unnecessary. This change improves the clarity and proportionality of the revised statute.

Beyond these four changes to current District law, one other aspect of the revised statute may constitute a substantive change to current District law.

The revised statute does not require that rioting occur in a public location. The current rioting statute defines rioting as a "public disturbance," but does not explain whether the term "public" refers to the character of the location of the riot or to the persons whose tranquility is disturbed. There is no case law on point.[33] Resolving this ambiguity, the revised statute provides that where eight or more people are simultaneously engaging in conduct that causes injury or damage, that group conduct amounts to a riot, irrespective of where it occurs. Such disturbances, whether in a sports arena or Congress,[34] run a similar risk of escalating into mob-like action. This change clarifies the revised statutes and eliminates an unnecessary gap in liability.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

---

[31] The District's rioting statute language is very similar to the federal Anti-rioting statute in 18 U.S.C. § 2101 which provides liability for conduct to "incite a riot" or "to organize, promote, encourage, participate in, or carry on a riot." After decades of no appellate case law on the statute, two recent cases addressing the federal statute have found these provisions of 18 U.S.C. § 2101 facially unconstitutional in whole or part. See United States v. Rundo, No. 18-cr-759 (C.D. Cal. June 3, 2019), appeal docketed, No. 19-50189 (9th Cir. June 12, 2019) (finding the incitement exception to the First Amendment inapplicable because the statute does not require the advocacy to be directed at producing imminent lawless action, contrary to Brandenburg v. Ohio, 395 U.S. 444, 447 (1969)); United States v. Miselis, 972 F.3d 518, 540 (4th Cir. 2020) (finding language of "promote," "encourage," and "urging" unconstitutionally overbroad).

[32] D.C. Code § 22-1803 ("Whoever shall attempt to commit any crime, which attempt is not otherwise made punishable by chapter 19 of An Act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1901 (31 Stat. 1321), shall be punished by a fine not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01 or by imprisonment for not more than 180 days, or both.").

[33] But see, e.g., Ramsey v. United States, 73 A.3d 138, 147 (D.C. 2013) (reversing a conviction for disorderly conduct, with an element that location of the offense be open to the general public, where the defendant was alleged to have attempted to urinate in a secluded, dark alley, away from any businesses, residences, or people).

[34] See, e.g., United States House of Representatives, The Most Infamous Floor Brawl in the History of the U.S. House of Representatives: February 06, 1858, History, Art, and Archives (available at https://history.house.gov/Historical-Highlights/1851-1900/The-most-infamous-floor-brawl-in-the-history-of-the-U-S--House-of-Representatives/).

First, the revised statute clarifies that an unlawful taking of property may be a predicate for rioting liability. The current rioting statute[35] criminalizes "tumultuous or violent conduct or the threat thereof [that] creates grave danger of damage or injury to property or persons." District case law has established that this reference to "injury to property" includes "either actual physical damage to property or the taking of another's property without the consent of the owner."[36] The revised rioting statute specifically refers to conduct that not only involves unlawful "damage" to property but also unlawful "taking" of property. This change clarifies the revised statute.

Second, the revised rioting statute replaces the archaic term "assemblage" with a reference to other persons being in a location where the actor can reasonably perceive them at the time of the target conduct, and requires a culpable mental state of recklessness as to their activities. The current law defines a riot as an "assemblage of 5 or more persons,"[37] but does not define "assemblage." District case law, however, has held that an "assemblage" refers to a group of people in close physical proximity to the defendant such that the person could "could reasonably have been expected to see or to hear" their action.[38] The revised statute codifies and clarifies this requirement as to others nearby activities by using the standard culpable mental state definition of "reckless." The actor need not be practically certain as to the scope and nature of others' activities, but must be aware of a substantial risk as to the others' numbers and conduct. No special connection or common purpose is required of the other persons engaged in unlawful conduct. This change clarifies and improves the consistency of the revised statute.

Third, the revised statute requires a culpable mental state of knowledge for an actor engaging in the riotous conduct. The current rioting statute specifies that a person must "willfully" engage in, incite, or urge a riot,[39] however, the current statute does not define "willfully." District case law states that "willfulness" is required of each of the other riot participants also.[40] The RCC clarifies this culpable mental state requirement as to riotous activities by using the standard definition of knowledge[41] as the culpable mental state for paragraph (a)(1).[42] Applying a knowledge culpable mental state requirement to interpret statutory elements that distinguish innocent from criminal behavior is a well-established

---

[35] DC Code § 22-1322.
[36] United States v. Matthews, 419 F.2d 1177, 1185 (1969).
[37] D.C. Code § 22-1322(a).
[38] See United States v. Matthews, 419 F.2d 1177, 1185 (1969) ("In determining whether there was an assemblage, you may take into account only what was taking place in the general vicinity where the Defendant is claimed to have engaged in the public disturbance. You may consider only the acts, shouts and noise of individuals engaged in tumultuous and violent conduct within the general awareness of the Defendant, that is, the activities which on the evidence you find he could reasonably have been expected to see or to hear at or about the time he engaged in the public disturbance if, in fact, you determine he did so engage.").
[39] D.C. Code § 22-1322.
[40] United States v. Matthews, 419 F.2d 1177, 1185 (1969) ("[Willfully] means the Defendant and at least four members of the assemblage participated in the public disturbance on purpose, that is, that each knowingly and intentionally engaged in tumultuous and violent conduct consciously, voluntarily and not inadvertently or accidentally.").
[41] RCC § 22E-206.
[42] Other participants in the riot must meet the culpable mental state for their own underlying offenses.

practice in American jurisprudence.[43] This change clarifies and improves the consistency of the revised statute.

[43] See Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2009 (2015) (a defendant generally must "know the facts that make his conduct fit the definition of the offense," even if he does not know that those facts give rise to a crime. (Internal citation omitted)).

RCC § 22E-4302. Failure to Disperse.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the new failure to disperse offense for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The offense does not exist under current District law but is closely related to conduct already punished in D.C. Code § 22-1322 (Rioting or inciting to riot) and 18 DCMR § 2000.2 (Failure to obey a lawful police order).[1]

Paragraph (a)(1) requires that the accused act "knowingly," a term defined in RCC § 22E-206, that here means a person must be practically certain that he or she received a dispersal order from someone he or she is practically certain is a law enforcement officer.[2] "Law enforcement officer" is a defined term.[3] The order may be personalized to the individual or directed to an entire group, and may be articulated in various ways so long as the meaning is clear. There is no requirement that the police order indicate the reasons for the dispersal order. The person must be afforded fair notice and a reasonable opportunity to comply with the law enforcement order to disperse from the scene.[4] Where a person is uncertain as to whether they can safely comply with the dispersal order, a justification defense may apply.[5]

Paragraph (a)(2) requires proof that eight[6] or more persons are engaged in riotous conduct at the same time, in the same place. The riotous conduct of other persons need not be identical, but each person's conduct must be causing criminal harm[7] involving bodily injury, taking of property, or damage to property.[8] The revised statute does not require that the eight people act in concert with one another[9] or organize together in advance.[10]

---

[1] The failure to disperse offense does not replace or subsume the existing regulation in 18 DCMR § 2000.2.
[2] A person who does not know the speaker is a law enforcement officer or who does not know the order is directed to them does not commit failure to disperse.
[3] RCC § 22E-701.
[4] See RCC § 22E-203 (requiring physical capacity to perform a required legal duty); Conley v. United States, 79 A.3d 270, 292-293 (D.C. 2013) (explaining voluntariness requires a reasonable opportunity to comply with a legal duty); Lambert v. People of the State of California, 355 U.S. 225, 229 (1957) (reversing a conviction where, on first becoming aware of her duty, the appellant had no opportunity to comply with the law and avoid its penalty.) see also Barham v. Ramsey, 434 F.3d 565, 576 (D.C. Cir. 2006) (requiring an opportunity to comply with a dispersal order); Dellums v. Powell, 566 F.2d 167, 181 n.31 (D.C. Cir. 1977); Wash. Mobilization Comm. v. Cullinane, 566 F.2d 107, 126 n.5 (D.C. Cir. 1977).
[5] See RCC § 22E-401, Lesser Harm.
[6] The RCC effectively defines a riot as a group of eight people engaging in lawless conduct in a group. Accordingly, the revised rioting offense, RCC § 22E-4301 requires the defendant behave in a riotous manner with seven other riotous people nearby. However, the revised failure to disperse offense, RCC § 22E-4302, does not require that the person participate in riotous conduct themselves and only requires proximity to the eight-person riot.
[7] The word "criminal" modifies the words that follow. The governing criminal statute must include as an element, the infliction of a bodily injury, taking of property, or damage to property. Courts should take a categorical, not a conduct-specific approach.
[8] For example, a person may engage in rioting by spray painting graffiti on a building while a dozen others are breaking windows and assaulting a security guard nearby.
[9] The revised code does not incorporate the common law requirement that persons act "with intent mutually to assist each other against any who shall oppose them." Riot, Black's Law Dictionary (2nd Ed.).
[10] United States v. Matthews, 419 F.2d 1177, 1185 (1969) ("It is not necessary for the members of the assemblage to have acted pursuant to an agreement or plan, either made in advance or made at the time, or for the members to concentrate their conduct on a single piece of property or one or more particular

However, the others' conduct must be in a location where the actor can reasonably see or hear their activities.[11] Paragraph (a)(2) also requires a culpable mental state of recklessness, a term defined in RCC § 22E-206, which here means the accused must disregard a substantial risk that eight or more persons are engaged in riotous conduct nearby.

Paragraph (a)(3) requires that the presence of the person substantially impairs the ability of a law enforcement officer to stop the riotous conduct. The impairment must be substantial, not trivial, and is a highly fact-specific assessment.[12] The term "in fact" here means that no culpable mental state is required as to the need for the order to disperse, but the objective fact still must be proven that the actor's presence substantially impairs the ability of a law enforcement officer to stop the conduct. False assertions that an actor must disperse because they are substantially impairing the law enforcement response would not satisfy this element of the failure to disperse offense.

Subsection (b) provides the penalties for the offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.]

Subsection (c) cross-references applicable definitions in the RCC.

Relation to Current District Law. Failure to disperse is a new offense and, in that sense, all aspects of the crime are substantive changes to District law. However, as compared to the District's current rioting[13] and failure to obey a lawful police order[14] laws, four aspects of the revised offense may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the RCC failure to disperse statute specifies that a culpable mental state of knowing is required for failing to disperse. The current D.C. Code does not include a failure to disperse offense but it does punish rioting[15] which requires "willful" conduct. A persons. The Defendant does not have to personally know or be acquainted with the other members of the assemblage. The other members of the assemblage need not be identified by name or their precise number established by the evidence.").

---

[11] Distances may vary widely, depending on facts including crowd density, noise, and height. See United States v. Matthews, 419 F.2d 1177, 1185 (1969) ("In determining whether there was an assemblage, you may take into account only what was taking place in the general vicinity where the Defendant is claimed to have engaged in the public disturbance. You may consider only the acts, shouts and noise of individuals engaged in tumultuous and violent conduct within the general awareness of the Defendant, that is, the activities which on the evidence you find he could reasonably have been expected to see or to hear at or about the time he engaged in the public disturbance if, in fact, you determine he did so engage.").

[12] For example, the need for a law enforcement officer to walk around a peaceable demonstrator in order to reach the place where the group disorderly conduct is occurring would not, alone, amount to substantial impairment. On the other hand, peaceful demonstrators linking arms in a manner that blocks police access to a site where rioters are engaged in setting fire to a building may amount to substantial impairment. Relevant considerations may include: the delay in response time to the arson due to the demonstrators' continued presence, the potential severity of the arson, and the vulnerability of the demonstrators to unintended harm if there is resistance by those committing arson to the course of a law enforcement response.

[13] D.C. Code § 22-1322.

[14] 18 DCMR § 2000.2.

[15] D.C. Code § 22-1322.

District municipal regulation criminalizes failure to obey a lawful police order,[16] and case law holds that a knowing refusal to obey a lawful order is sufficient for liability.[17] The RCC clearly specifies that knowledge, defined in RCC § 22E-206, is the applicable mental state. The focus of the offense is the person's response to a law enforcement order. Applying a knowledge culpable mental state requirement to interpret statutory elements that distinguish innocent from criminal behavior is a well-established practice in American jurisprudence.[18] This change improves the clarity and the consistency of the revised offense, and, to the extent it may require a new culpable mental state as to some of the principal elements of the offense, improves its proportionality.[19]

Second, the revised statute specifies that no culpable mental state needs to be proven as to the substantial impairment to law enforcement resulting from the person's failure to disperse. The current District regulation in 18 DCMR § 2000.2 is silent as to the culpable mental state, if any, required for this element of the offense. Case law interpreting 18 DCMR § 2000.2 suggests that a person need not believe or agree that an order is lawful before being required to obey it.[20] The RCC clearly specifies that no culpable mental state is required as to this element. The focus of the revised offense is the person's response to a law enforcement order and, in some situations, a person in a crowd may not know that their continued presence in the crowd substantially impairs law enforcement's ability to respond. Applying strict liability to statutory elements that do not distinguish innocent from criminal behavior is an accepted practice in American jurisprudence.[21] This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised offense.

Third, the revised statute specifies that a reckless culpable mental state must be proven as to the existence of riotous activity nearby. This culpable mental state of recklessness as to the criminal conduct being attempted or committed in the area perceptible to the actor distinguishes the culpability of an actor for the crime of failure to disperse as compared to the civil penalties for failure to obey a law enforcement officer's order per 18 DCMR § 2000.2 (Failure to obey a lawful police order). This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised offenses.

---

[16] 18 DCMR § 2000.2.

[17] Karriem v. District of Columbia, 717 A.2d 317, 322 (D.C. 1998) ("According to his own testimony, Karriem knowingly refused to comply with lawful police orders. That refusal provided an objective basis for the police officers' probable cause determination, and thus as a matter of law their arrest of Mr. Karriem was valid.") (emphasis added).

[18] See Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2009 (2015) ("[O]ur cases have explained that a defendant generally must 'know the facts that make his conduct fit the definition of the offense,' even if he does not know that those facts give rise to a crime." (Internal citation omitted)).

[19] Were a person strictly liable for conduct that causes liability under 18 DCMR § 2000.2, even mistakes or accidents by a defendant could be the basis of criminal liability for failing to obey a lawful police order. For example, a person who starts to disperse but twists their ankle and cannot move further without severe pain would be liable.

[20] Karriem v. District of Columbia, 717 A.2d 317, 322 (D.C. 1998).

[21] Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2010 (2015)("When interpreting federal criminal statutes that are silent on the required mental state, we read into the statute 'only that mens rea which is necessary to separate wrongful conduct from 'otherwise innocent conduct.'" Carter v. United States, 530 U.S. 255, 269, (2000) (quoting United States v. X-Citement Video, Inc., 513 U.S. 64, 72 (1994)).

Fourth, the revised offense requires eight or more actors be engaged in riotous activity for an actor to be liable for failure to disperse liability. Current District law defines a riot as five or more people engaged in "tumultuous and violent conduct,"[22] in part, because it is more convenient to prosecute five or more defendants together for the composite offense of rioting than to prosecute them separately for the underlying assault and property offenses.[23] However, there are many instances in which a group of five disorderly persons may not rise to the level of a riot.[24] This change reduces unnecessary overlap between the composite offense of rioting and the underlying substantive offenses.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

The revised offense requires proof that the person's continued presence substantially impairs the ability of a law enforcement officer to stop the riotous conduct of others nearby. In such circumstances, a law enforcement order to disperse is a "lawful" order under current District law. Under current law, a refusal to follow a necessary[25] and lawful[26] move-on order may subject a person to arrest in a variety of circumstances.[27] Crowd control measures in current law are designed to ensure law enforcement has adequate authority to immediately intervene when necessary to restore public order.[28] The revised offense merely clarifies the particular circumstances in which a law enforcement dispersal order is valid.

---

[22] D.C. Code § 22-1322.

[23] See Hearing Before Subcommittee No. 4 of the Committee on the District of Columbia, on H.R. 12328, H.R. 12605, H.R. 12721, H.R. 12557, Oct. 4, 1967 (Fred M. Vinson, Jr., Assistant Attorney General, Criminal Division, Department of Justice: "There are statutes in the states going as high as ten people. There is one statute that may go as high as 20 people. The New York statute is four people. Several statutes are five people. It was our subjective judgment that five or more people might rise to the dignity of a riot. Certainly fewer people than that can cause great trouble. However, fewer people than that causing trouble are much easier to handle, prosecutively, with regard to substantive offenses.").

[24] Examples include a three-versus-three, mutually-agreed upon street fight and a five-co-defendant robbery.

[25] See Bolz v. District of Columbia, 149 A.3d 1130, 1137 (D.C. 2016).

[26] See Streit v. District of Columbia, 26 A.3d 315, 319 (D.C. 2011).

[27] See, e.g., 18 DCMR § 2000.2 (Failure to Obey a Lawful Order of a Police Officer); 24 DCMR § 2100 (Crowd and Traffic Control); D.C. Code § 22-1307 (Crowding, obstructing, or incommoding); D.C. Code § 22-1314.02 (Prohibited acts); D.C. Code § 22-1321 (Obstructing bridges connecting D.C. and Virginia); D.C. Code § 22-2752 (Engaging in an unlawful protest targeting a residence); D.C. Code § 22-3302 (Unlawful entry on property); D.C. Code § 22-3321 (obstructing public highway).

[28] "The goal of restoring public order comes from the concern that citizens who are being bothered or annoyed might choose violent self-help when someone is being loud on the street or otherwise causing a disturbance." Report on Bill 18-425, "Disorderly Conduct Amendment Act of 2009," Council of the District of Columbia Committee on Public Safety and the Judiciary (November 19, 2010) at Page 3.

RCC § 22E-4401. Prostitution.

Explanatory Note. The RCC prostitution offense prohibits engaging in, agreeing to, or soliciting for a commercial sex act in exchange for the actor or a third party receiving anything of value. Along with the RCC patronizing prostitution offense,[1] the RCC prostitution offense replaces two distinct offenses in the current D.C. Code: prostitution[2] and soliciting for prostitution[3] and the definitions statute that applies to these offenses.[4] The revised prostitution statute also replaces in relevant part three distinct provisions for the current D.C. Code prostitution and soliciting for prostitution offenses: the deferred disposition provision,[5] provisions for establishing a nuisance and abating a nuisance,[6] and provisions for vehicle impoundment[7] and the Anti-Prostitution Vehicle Impoundment Proceeds Fund.[8]

Subsection (a) specifies the prohibited conduct for the revised prostitution statute. Paragraph (a)(1) specifies one type of prohibited conduct—pursuant to a prior agreement, explicit or implicit, engaging in or submitting to a sexual act or sex contact in exchange for the actor or a third party receiving anything of value. The phrase "in exchange for" specifies the transactional nature of the sexual act or sexual contact and is satisfied if the actor or a third party actually receives anything of value or if anything of value was promised to the actor or a third party.[9] Paragraph (a)(1) is intended to apply only to a prostitute—an individual that receives or agrees to receive payment for sexual activity—and not a patron. The RCC patronizing prostitution offense (RCC § 22E-4402) criminalizes patronizing prostitution. Subsection (a) specifies a culpable mental state of "knowingly" and per the rule of construction in RCC § 22E-207, the "knowingly" culpable mental state applies to all the elements in paragraph (a)(1). "Knowingly" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-206 that here means the actor must be "practically certain" that the actor, pursuant to a prior agreement, explicit or implicit, engages in or submits to a sexual act or sexual contact in exchange for the actor or a third party receiving anything of value. "Sexual act" and "sexual contact" are defined terms in RCC § 22E-701 that prohibit specific types of sexual penetration or sexual touching.

Paragraph (a)(2) specifies the second type of prohibited conduct—agreeing, explicitly or implicitly, to engage in or submit to a sexual act or sexual contact in exchange for the actor or a third party receiving anything of value. The phrase "in exchange for" specifies the transactional nature of the sexual act or sexual contact and is satisfied if the actor or a third party receives anything of value or if anything of value was promised to the actor or a third party. Paragraph (a)(2) is intended to apply only to a prostitute—an

[1] RCC § 22E-4402.
[2] D.C. Code § 22-2701.
[3] D.C. Code § 22-2701.
[4] D.C. Code § 22-2701.01.
[5] D.C. Code § 22-2703.
[6] D.C. Code §§ 22-2713 - 22-2720.
[7] D.C. Code § 22-2724.
[8] D.C. Code § 22-2725.
[9] If anything of value is promised as part of a prior agreement, this conduct also falls under paragraph (a)(2)—agreeing, explicitly or implicitly, to engage in or submit to sexual activity in exchange for the actor or a third party receiving anything of value.

individual that receives or agrees to receive payment for sexual activity—and not a patron. The RCC patronizing prostitution offense (RCC § 22E-4402) criminalizes patronizing prostitution. Subsection (a) specifies a culpable mental state of "knowingly" and per the rule of construction in RCC § 22E-207, the "knowingly" culpable mental state applies to all the elements in paragraph (a)(2). "Knowingly" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-206 that here means the actor must be "practically certain" that the actor agrees, explicitly or implicitly, to engage in or submit to a sexual act or sexual contact in exchange for the actor or a third party receiving anything of value. "Sexual act" and "sexual contact" are defined terms in RCC § 22E-701 that prohibit specific types of sexual penetration or sexual touching.

Paragraph (a)(3) prohibits the final type of prohibited conduct—commanding, requesting, or trying to persuade any person to engage in or submit to a sexual act or sexual contact in exchange for the actor or a third party receiving anything of value. "Commands, requests, or tries to persuade" matches the language in the RCC solicitation statute (RCC § 22E-302). The phrase "in exchange for" specifies the transactional nature of the sexual act or sexual contact and is satisfied if the actor or a third party receives anything of value or if anything of value was promised to the actor or a third party. Paragraph (a)(3) is intended to apply only to a prostitute—an individual that receives or agrees to receive payment for sexual activity—and not a patron. The RCC patronizing prostitution offense (RCC § 22E-4402) criminalizes patronizing prostitution. Subsection (a) specifies a culpable mental state of "knowingly" and per the rule of construction in RCC § 22E-207, the "knowingly" culpable mental state applies to all the elements in paragraph (a)(3). "Knowingly" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-206 that here means the actor must be "practically certain" that the actor commands, requests, or tries to persuade any person to engage in or submit to a sexual act or sexual contact in exchange for the actor or a third party receiving anything of value. "Sexual act" and "sexual contact" are defined terms in RCC § 22E-701 that prohibit specific types of sexual penetration or sexual touching.

Subsection (b) codifies immunity from the offense for a person under 18 years of age. Paragraph (b)(1) states that an actor does not commit an offense under this section when, "in fact" the actor is under 18 years of age. "In fact" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-207 that indicates there is no culpable mental state requirement for a given element, here the age of the actor. Paragraph (b)(2) requires that the Metropolitan Police Department and any other District agency designated by the Mayor refer a person under the age of 18 years that is suspected of violating subsection (a) of this section to an organization that provides treatment, housing, or services appropriate for victims of sex trafficking of a minor or adult incapable of consenting under RCC § 22E-1605.

Subsection (c) specifies relevant penalties for the offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.]

Subsection (d) cross-references applicable definitions located elsewhere in the RCC.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised prostitution statute clearly changes District law in eight main ways.

First, the revised prostitution statute is limited to an individual that engages in sexual activity in exchange for receiving payment. The current D.C. Code prostitution offense[10] and current D.C. Code soliciting for prostitution offense[11] include, without distinction, a patron that pays for sexual activity, as well as an adult[12] who receives payment for sexual activity. In contrast, the RCC prostitution statute is limited to an individual that engages in, agrees to engage in, or solicits for sexual activity, in exchange for the actor or a third party receiving payment. As is discussed in the explanatory note, the phrase "in exchange for" in paragraphs (a)(1), (a)(2), and (a)(3) of the revised statute is intended to exclude a patron from the offense. The RCC patronizing prostitution statute (RCC § 22E-4402) separately criminalizes patronizing prostitution—paying for, agreeing to pay for, or soliciting for sexual activity in exchange for giving payment. As part of this revision, the revised prostitution statute no longer uses the current D.C. Code definitions of "prostitution" (D.C. Code § 22-2701.01(3)) or "solicit for prostitution" (D.C. Code § 22-2701.01(7)), and there is no longer a separate soliciting for prostitution form of the offense.[13] This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Second, the revised prostitution statute deletes the special recidivist penalty for engaging in or soliciting for prostitution set forth in current D.C. Code § 22-2701(b).[14] For the first offense, the current D.C. Code prostitution or solicitation statute has a

---

[10] The current D.C. Code prostitution or solicitation statute prohibits "engag[ing] in prostitution" and defines "prostitution" as a "sexual act or contact with another person in return for giving or receiving anything of value." D.C. Code §§ 22-2701(a); 22-2701.01(3) (emphasis added). When the definition of "prostitution" is inserted into the current prostitution or solicitation statute, the statute prohibits both engaging in sexual activity "with another person in return for giving anything of value" and "with another person in return for receiving anything of value."

[11] The current D.C. Code prostitution or solicitation statute prohibits "solicit[ing] for prostitution." D.C. Code § 22-2701(a). "Solicit for prostitution" is defined, in relevant part, as "to invite, entice, offer, persuade, or agree to engage in prostitution, or address for the purpose of inviting, enticing, offering, persuading, or agreeing to engage in prostitution" and "prostitution" is defined as a "sexual act or contact with another person in return for giving or receiving anything of value." D.C. Code §§ 22-2701(a); 22-2701.01(3) (emphasis added). When the definitions of "solicit for prostitution" and "prostitution" are inserted into the current prostitution or solicitation statute, the statute prohibits offering, agreeing, or soliciting to engage in sexual activity both "with another person in return for giving anything of value" and "with another person in return for receiving anything of value."

[12] Although the current D.C. Code prostitution offense includes both a prostitute and a patron, the "safe harbor" provision in subsection (d)(1) of the current statute is limited to the individual that engages in sexual activity for payment, and excludes patrons. D.C. Code § 22-2701(d)(1) ("A child who engages in or offers to engage in a sexual act or sexual contact in return for receiving anything of value shall be immune from prosecution for a violation of subsection (a) of this section.").

[13] D.C. Code § 22-2701 prohibits both "engag[ing] in prostitution" and "solicit[ing] for prostitution."

[14] D.C. Code § 22-2701 ("(b)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, a person convicted of prostitution or soliciting for prostitution shall be: (A) Fined not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01, imprisoned for not more than 90 days, or both, for the first offense; and (B) Fined not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01, imprisoned not more than 180 days, or both, for the second offense. (2) A person convicted of prostitution or soliciting for prostitution who has 2 or more prior convictions for prostitution or soliciting for prostitution, not committed on the same occasion, shall be fined not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01, imprisoned for not more than 2 years, or both. (c) For the purposes of this section, a person shall be considered as having 2 or more prior convictions for prostitution or soliciting for prostitution if he or she has been convicted on at least 2 occasions of violations of: (1) This section; (2) A statute in one or more other jurisdictions prohibiting prostitution or soliciting for prostitution; or (3) Conduct that would constitute a violation of this section if committed in the District of Columbia.").

maximum term of imprisonment of 90 days.[15] The special recidivist penalty provides that for the second offense, the maximum term of imprisonment is 180 days,[16] and for a third or subsequent offense, the conviction is a felony with a maximum term of imprisonment of two years.[17] This special enhancement is highly unusual in current District law. In contrast, for the revised prostitution statute, only the general recidivism enhancement in section RCC § 22E-606 may provide enhanced punishment for recidivist prostitution, consistent with other misdemeanor offenses. There is no clear basis for singling out recidivist prostitution or solicitation offenses as compared to other offenses of similar seriousness. This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Third, the revised prostitution statute limits soliciting for prostitution to conduct that "commands, requests, or tries to persuade" another person. The current D.C. Code definition of "solicit for prostitution" is "to invite, entice, offer, persuade, or agree to engage in prostitution or address for the purpose of inviting, enticing, offering, persuading, or agreeing to engage in prostitution."[18] There is no DCCA case law interpreting this special definition of "solicit for prostitution."[19] However, an older version of the statute made it unlawful to "invite, entice, persuade, or to address for the purpose of inviting, enticing, or persuading"[20] for the purpose of prostitution. The DCCA stated that the older statute used the term "address," as opposed to "solicit" or "solicitation,"[21] which "removes the suggestion that an initial, active effort to engage someone in a conversation or transaction involving prostitution is a prerequisite to guilt,"[22] and that "an enticement also does not require an active, initiatory effort but can occur in a responsive manner."[23] Under this case law, it is also irrelevant which party broaches the subject of payment: "[o]nce there is an enticement or an address for the purpose of enticement, it becomes unimportant who broaches the commercial nature of

[15] D.C. Code § 22-2701(b)(1)(A).
[16] D.C. Code § 22-2701(b)(1)(B).
[17] D.C. Code § 22-2701(b)(2).
[18] D.C. Code § 22-2701.01(7).
[19] The current D.C. Code definition of "solicit for prostitution" was enacted in 2007. Omnibus Public Safety Amendment Act of 2006, 2006 District of Columbia Laws 16-306 (Act 16–482).
[20] D.C. Code § 22-2701 (1973).
[21] Dinkins v. United States, 374 A.2d 292, 294 (D.C. 1977).
[22] Dinkins v. United States, 374 A.2d 292, 295 (D.C. 1977). The DCCA in Dinkins affirmed a conviction under this older statute when the defendant did not initiate the encounter, merely responded to an undercover officer's questions, and the officer brought up the subject of payment. Dinkins v. United States, 374 A.2d 292, 296 (D.C. 1977) ("We hold that appellant's attire, her prolonged presence on the street corner, her approach to a complete stranger, her extremely suggestive verbal responses to the officer, her prompt discussion of financial terms, and her ready arrangement for a room are legally sufficient, when taken together, for a fact finder to conclude guilt beyond a reasonable doubt.").
[23] Dinkins, 374 A.2d at 295. The DCCA in Dinkins affirmed a conviction under this older statute when the defendant did not initiate the encounter, merely responded to an undercover officer's questions, and the officer brought up the subject of payment. Dinkins v. United States, 374 A.2d 292, 296 (D.C. 1977) ("We hold that appellant's attire, her prolonged presence on the street corner, her approach to a complete stranger, her extremely suggestive verbal responses to the officer, her prompt discussion of financial terms, and her ready arrangement for a room are legally sufficient, when taken together, for a fact finder to conclude guilt beyond a reasonable doubt.").

the transaction."[24] In contrast, the revised prostitution statute limits soliciting for prostitution to conduct that "commands, requests, or tries to persuade" another person to engage in sexual activity in exchange for the actor or a third party receiving anything of value. With this change, the revised prostitution statute uses language identical to the general RCC solicitation statute (RCC § 22E-302), and the RCC prostitution statute differs from the general RCC solicitation statute primarily in the required culpable mental state—prostitution requires "knowingly" rather than "purposely." To the extent that DCCA case law interpreting the older statute is still good law under the current D.C. Code, the revised statute preserves case law establishing that it is irrelevant which party initiates the encounter or brings up the subject of payment. However, unlike current case law, liability under paragraph (a)(3) of the revised statute does require active efforts to solicit another person—"commands, requests, or tries to persuade another person." This change reduces unnecessary overlap and improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Fourth, the revised prostitution statute uses the revised definitions of "sexual act" and "sexual contact" in RCC § 22E-701. The current D.C. Code definitions of "prostitution" and "solicit for prostitution" use the terms "sexual act" and "sexual contact" as those terms are currently defined in D.C. Code § 22-3001[25] for the current D.C. Code sexual abuse statutes. In contrast, the revised prostitution statute uses the revised definitions of "sexual act" and "sexual contact" in RCC § 22E-701. As the commentary to RCC § 22E-701 explains, the revised definitions of "sexual act" and "sexual contact" differ in multiple ways as compared to current law. As a result, the scope of the revised prostitution statute will differ as compared to the current D.C. Code prostitution or solicitation statute. For example, the current D.C. Code definitions of "sexual act" and "sexual contact" extend to conduct done with "an intent to abuse, humiliate, harass, degrade, or arouse or gratify the sexual desire of any person," but the RCC definitions are limited to conduct that is sexual in nature—with the desire to sexually "abuse, humiliate, harass, degrade, arouse, or gratify" any person. This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statute.

Fifth, a vehicle used in furtherance of the RCC prostitution offense is no longer subject to vehicle impoundment. Current D.C. Code § 22-2724[26] provides that when there

---

[24] Dinkins, 374 A.2d at 295. The DCCA further stated that "[i]t is sufficient that an understanding emerges that a commercial venture was contemplated when the sexual availability was made apparent." Dinkins, 374 A.2d at 296.

[25] D.C. Code §§ 22-2701.01(5), (6) (stating the terms "sexual act" and "sexual contact" in the prostitution and solicitation statute have the same meaning as in D.C. Code § 22-3001); 22-3001(8), (9) (defining "sexual act" as "(A) The penetration, however slight, of the anus or vulva of another by a penis; (B) Contact between the mouth and the penis, the mouth and the vulva, or the mouth and the anus; or (C) The penetration, however slight, of the anus or vulva by a hand or finger or by any object, with an intent to abuse, humiliate, harass, degrade, or arouse or gratify the sexual desire of any person. (D) The emission of semen is not required for the purposes of subparagraphs (A)-(C) of this paragraph" and "sexual contact" as "the touching with any clothed or unclothed body part or any object, either directly or through the clothing, of the genitalia, anus, groin, breast, inner thigh, or buttocks of any person with an intent to abuse, humiliate, harass, degrade, or arouse or gratify the sexual desire of any person.").

[26] In addition to D.C. Code § 22-2724, D.C. Code § 22-2725 establishes the Anti-Prostitution Vehicle Impoundment Proceeds Fund, which "shall be used solely to fund expenses directly related to the booting, towing, and impoundment of vehicles used in furtherance of prostitution-related activities, in violation of a prostitution-related offense." D.C. Code § 22-2725(b).

is probable cause that a vehicle "is being used in furtherance of a prostitution-related offense," including prostitution or solicitation,[27] and there is an arrest,[28] the vehicle "shall" be towed or immobilized and notice provided to the owner and to the person in control of the vehicle.[29] There is no requirement that the owner be involved in the offense or know of the vehicle's use in the offense. The owner is "entitled to a due process hearing regarding the seizure of the vehicle,"[30] but the statute does not specify the timing or the requirements of the hearing. Independent of such a hearing, the vehicle can be repossessed "at any time" by paying several different penalties, fees, and costs,[31] which are either not

---

D.C. Code § 22-2725 states that all "funds collected from the assessment of civil penalties, booting, towing, impoundment, and storage fees pursuant to § 22-2723" will be deposited in the fund. D.C. Code § 22-2725(a). The reference to "§ 22-2723" appears to be an error, however, and the text should instead refer to "§ 22-2724." D.C. Law 16-306, the Omnibus Public Safety Amendment Act of 2006 (Omnibus Act), added D.C. Code §§ 22-2724 and 22-2725 as section 6 and section 7 to a 1935 law "An act for the suppression of prostitution in the District of Columbia." The text of Section 7 in the Omnibus Act, establishing § 22-2725, states "All funds collected from the assessment of civil penalties, booting, towing, impoundment, and storage fees pursuant to section 5." The reference to section 5 appears to be an error. Section 5 of the 1935 "An act for the suppression of prostitution in the District of Columbia" is specific to forfeiture, not impoundment. The text in the Omnibus Act should instead refer to "section 6," which would be D.C. Code § 22-2724, and establishes the impoundment provision and the civil penalties, fees and costs for impoundment.

[27] D.C. Code § 22-2724(b). The current D.C. Code definition of "prostitution-related offenses" includes both engaging in "prostitution" and "solicit[ing] for prostitution" in D.C. Code § 22-2701. D.C. Code § 22-2701(4) (defining "prostitution-related offenses as "those crimes and offenses defined in this subchapter."). The RCC prostitution statutes no longer use the term "prostitution-related offenses."

[28] D.C. Code § 22-2724(b).

[29] D.C. Code § 22-2724(b)(1), (b)(2).

[30] D.C. Code § 22-2701(f) ("An owner, or person duly authorized by an owner, shall be entitled to a due process hearing regarding the seizure of the vehicle.").

[31] D.C. Code § 22-2724(d) ("An owner, or a person duly authorized by an owner, shall, upon proof of same, be permitted to repossess or secure the release of the immobilized or impounded vehicle at any time (subject to administrative availability) by paying to the District government, as directed by the Department of Public Works, an administrative civil penalty of $150, a booting fee, if applicable, all outstanding fines and penalties for infractions for which liability has been admitted, deemed admitted, or sustained after hearing, and all applicable towing and storage costs for impounded vehicles as provided by § 50-2421.09(a)(6). Payment of such fees shall not be admissible as evidence of guilt in any criminal proceeding.").

refundable,[32] or are refundable only in narrow circumstances.[33] Finally, it is unclear whether paying for the immediate release of a vehicle waives the owner's right to a due process hearing.[34] There is no DCCA case law interpreting the current D.C. Code prostitution impoundment provision. In contrast, a vehicle used in furtherance of the RCC prostitution offense is no longer subject to vehicle impoundment. Mandatory impoundment is a disproportionate penalty for what otherwise is a minor misdemeanor offense or comparatively low-level felony offense, particularly given the penalties, fees, and costs that must be paid for the immediate release of the vehicle with limited or no refund. A vehicle used, or intended to be used, to violate the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute (RCC § 22E-4403) is subject to forfeiture under certain circumstances, however, as opposed to impoundment, because that statute targets "pimps" and owners of prostitution businesses, as opposed to an individual engaged in consensual commercial sex work. This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Sixth, the revised prostitution statute is no longer subject to civil asset forfeiture. Current D.C. Code § 22-2723 makes subject to forfeiture all conveyances that are used, or [32] Subsection (d) requires paying "all outstanding fines and penalties for infractions for which liability has been admitted, deemed admitted, or sustained after hearing" and there is no provision for a refund of this money in subsection (e). In addition, the refund of towing and storage costs required in subsection (d) is capped at two days unless a police report indicates that the vehicle was stolen at the time it was seized. D.C. Code § 22-2724(d) ("An owner, or a person duly authorized by an owner, shall, upon proof of same, be permitted to repossess or secure the release of the immobilized or impounded vehicle at any time (subject to administrative availability) by paying . . . an administrative civil penalty of $150, a booting fee, if applicable, all outstanding fines and penalties for infractions for which liability has been admitted, deemed admitted, or sustained after hearing, and all applicable towing and storage costs for impounded vehicles as provided by § 50-2421.09(a)(6)."); § 22-2724(e) ("An owner, or person duly authorized by an owner, shall be entitled to refund of the administrative civil penalty, booting fee, and 2 days' towing and storage costs by showing that the prosecutor dropped the underlying criminal charges (except for instances of nolle prosequi or because the defendant completed a diversion program), that the Superior Court of the District of Columbia dismissed the case after consideration of the merits, or that the case resulted in a finding of not guilty on all prostitution-related charges, or by providing a police report demonstrating that the vehicle was stolen at the time that it was subject to seizure and impoundment. If the vehicle had been stolen at the time of seizure and impoundment, a refund of all towing and storage costs shall be made.").

---

[33] D.C. Code § 22-2724(e) ("An owner, or person duly authorized by an owner, shall be entitled to refund of the administrative civil penalty, booting fee, and 2 days' towing and storage costs by showing that the prosecutor dropped the underlying criminal charges (except for instances of nolle prosequi or because the defendant completed a diversion program), that the Superior Court of the District of Columbia dismissed the case after consideration of the merits, or that the case resulted in a finding of not guilty on all prostitution-related charges, or by providing a police report demonstrating that the vehicle was stolen at the time that it was subject to seizure and impoundment. If the vehicle had been stolen at the time of seizure and impoundment, a refund of all towing and storage costs shall be made.").

[34] Subsection (f) of current D.C. Code § 22-2724 states unequivocally that an owner "shall be entitled to a due process hearing regarding the seizure of the vehicle," D.C. Code § 22-2724(f), but other provisions in the statute suggest that paying for the immediate release of the vehicle waives the hearing. First, the written notice of the seizure of the vehicle must "convey[] . . . the right to obtain immediate return of the vehicle pursuant to subsection (d) of this section, in lieu of requesting a hearing." D.C. Code § 22-2724(b)(2) (emphasis added). The plain language of this provision suggests that an owner can either pay for immediate release or request a hearing, but cannot pay and then have a hearing. In addition, subsection (d) requires that, for the immediate release of the vehicle, the owner pay "all outstanding fines and penalties for infractions for which liability has been admitted, deemed admitted, or sustained after hearing." D.C. Code § 22-2724(d) (emphasis added).

intended to be used, "to transport, or in any manner to facilitate a violation of a prostitution-related offense,"[35] and all "money, coins, and currency" which are used, or intended to be used "in violation of a prostitution-related offense."[36] Prostitution forfeitures currently are subject to D.C. Law 20-278,[37] which provides significant due process protections for the owner of property,[38] but still can result in a lengthy or permanent loss of an individual's vehicle or money. There is no DCCA case law interpreting the current D.C. Code § 22-2723. However, under an earlier version of the solicitation for prostitution statute, the DCCA held in One Toyota Pick-Up Truck v. District of Columbia that forfeiture of the truck the defendant used to solicit for prostitution, valued at $15,500, would violate the Excessive Fines Clause of the U.S. Constitution.[39] The DCCA determined that, under controlling Supreme Court case law, the forfeiture would be "grossly disproportionate to the gravity of the defendant's offense."[40] It was the defendant's first conviction for solicitation and the DCCA stated that solicitation for prostitution "particularly for a first conviction, has historically been treated as a minor crime in the District, and was certainly so treated at the time of the defendant's conduct."[41] At the time, a first offense for solicitation for prostitution had a maximum criminal fine of $300 and no incarceration and the defendant actually received a $150 fine.[42] The court concluded that "forfeiting a vehicle valued at $15,500 inflicts a penalty . . . on the order of fifty times the fine authorized . . . and one hundred times the fine actually imposed."[43] Finally, the DCCA

---

[35] D.C. Code § 22-2723(a)(1). The current D.C. Code definition of "prostitution-related offenses" includes both engaging in "prostitution" and "solicit[ing] for prostitution" in D.C. Code § 22-2701. D.C. Code § 22-2701(4) (defining "prostitution-related offenses as "those crimes and offenses defined in this subchapter."). The RCC prostitution statutes no longer use the term "prostitution-related offenses."

[36] D.C. Code § 22-2723(a)(2). The current D.C. Code definition of "prostitution-related offenses" includes both engaging in "prostitution" and "solicit[ing] for prostitution" in D.C. Code § 22-2701. D.C. Code § 22-2701(4) (defining "prostitution-related offenses as "those crimes and offenses defined in this subchapter."). The RCC prostitution statutes no longer use the term "prostitution-related offenses."

[37] D.C. Code § 22-2723(b).

[38] See D.C. Code §§ 41-301 through 41-315.

[39] One 1995 Toyota Pick-Up Truck v. District of Columbia, 718 A.2d 558, 559, 560 (D.C. 1998).

[40] The DCCA applied the test established in United States v. Bajakajian, 524 U.S. 321 (1998), which states that "a punitive forfeiture violates the Excessive Fines Clause if it is grossly disproportional to the gravity of a defendant's offense." One 1995 Toyota Pick-Up Truck, 718 A.2d at 564-65 (quoting United States v. Bajakajian, 524 U.S. 321 (1998)). Prior to engaging in the proportionality analysis, the DCCA first had to establish whether the forfeiture provision in D.C. Code § 22-2723 was a "fine" within the meaning of the Excessive Fines Clause because "the limitation on excessive fines is meant to curb 'the government's power to extract payments, whether in cash or in kind, as punishment for some offense." One 1995 Toyota Pick-Up Truck, 718 A.2d at 560 (internal quotations and citations omitted) (emphasis in the original). The DCCA concluded that forfeiture of the truck pursuant to D.C. Code § 22-2723 was "at least in part," punishment for solicitation and that D.C. Code § 22-2723 "has distinct punitive aspects," an "innocent owner" defense and a direct tie to a violation of law. Id. at 562, 563. Although D.C. Code § 22-2723 has been amended since the version at issue in One 1995 Toyota Pick-Up Truck, it retains an "innocent owner defense" and directly ties the forfeiture to a violation of the prostitution laws, making it likely that the DCCA would reach the same conclusion—that D.C. Code § 22-2723 is subject to the Excessive Fines Clause.

[41] One 1995 Toyota Pick-Up Truck, 718 A.2d at 565.

[42] One 1995 Toyota Pick-Up Truck, 718 A.2d at 565-66.

[43] One 1995 Toyota Pick-Up Truck, 718 A.2d at 566. The court stated that these ratios are "comparable to the seventy-to-one figured considered grossly disproportionate" in the controlling Supreme Court case stated that while the defendant "fit[] within the class of persons for whom the statute was principally designed, he can not [sic] be made to bear grossly disproportionate responsibility for the problem of prostitution in the District or for the attendant consequences . . . he is, at bottom, one individual who on one occasion attempted to retain a prostitute."[44]

In contrast, a conveyance or money used or intended to be used in furtherance of the RCC prostitution offense is no longer subject to forfeiture. Forfeiture of a vehicle or money is a disproportionate penalty under the RCC prostitution statute and may violate the Excessive Fines Clause of the U.S. Constitution as the DCCA held under an earlier version of the statute.[45] A vehicle or money used, or intended to be used, to violate the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute (RCC § 22E-4403) is subject to forfeiture under RCC § 22E-4404 because that statute targets "pimps" and owners of prostitution businesses, as opposed to an individual engaged in consensual commercial sex work. This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Seventh, the revised prostitution statute deletes the prostitution nuisance provisions in current D.C. Code §§ 22-2713 through 22-2720 ("current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions") and instead relies on the existing nuisance provisions in D.C. Code §§ 42-3101 through 42-3114 ("Title 42 nuisance provisions."). The current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions apply to "any building, erection, or place used for the purpose of lewdness, assignation, or prostitution,"[46] or a nuisance that is established "in a criminal proceeding."[47] The scope of "in a criminal proceeding" is unclear under current

---

United States v. Bajakajian, 524 U.S. 321 (1998) and are "also consistent with excessiveness determinations in of other federal courts." One 1995 Toyota Pick-Up Truck, 718 A.2d at 566 (internal citations omitted).

[44] One 1995 Toyota Pick-Up Truck, 718 A.2d at 566. The DCCA further noted that "the forfeiture of the pick-up truck cannot fairly be said to compensate the District for any loss associated with Esparza's crime, one justification commonly advanced for the in rem action. . . . And although no findings have been made on the impact on Esparza and his family of the forfeiture of the truck, the government does not dispute Esparza's assertions that the vehicle played a significant role in the maintenance of his livelihood. Id. (internal citations omitted).

[45] The forfeiture statute has been amended since the version at issue in the 1998 One 1995 Toyota Pick-Up Truck case, but the amendments do not address the basis for the DCCA's ruling in that case that forfeiture of a vehicle valued at $15,500 was grossly disproportionate when the defendant received at $150 fine for a first conviction of solicitation for prostitution. The penalties for soliciting for prostitution have increased since the 1998 One 1995 Toyota Pick-Up Truck case, but it is unclear whether they would be significant enough for forfeiture of a vehicle to survive a constitutional challenge. The DCCA has not interpreted the current forfeiture statute under the increased prostitution or solicitation penalties.

[46] D.C. Code § 22-2713(a) ("Whoever shall erect, establish, continue, maintain, use, own, occupy, or release any building, erection, or place used for the purpose of lewdness, assignation, or prostitution in the District of Columbia is guilty of a nuisance, and the building, erection, or place, or the ground itself in or upon which such lewdness, assignation, or prostitution is conducted, permitted, or carried on, continued, or exists, and the furniture, fixtures, musical instruments, and contents are also declared a nuisance, and shall be enjoined and abated as hereinafter provided.").

[47] D.C. Code § 22-2717 ("If the existence of the nuisance be established in an action as provided in §§ 22-2713 to 22-2720, or in a criminal proceeding, an order of abatement shall be entered as a part of the judgment in the case which order shall direct the removal from the building or place of all fixtures, furniture, musical instruments, or movable property used in conducting the nuisance, and shall direct the sale thereof in the manner provided for the sale of chattels under execution, and the effectual closing of the District law.[48] Violating a court order under the current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions is punishable by no less than three months and no more than six months building or place against its use for any purpose, and so keeping it closed for a period of 1 year, unless sooner released. If any person shall break and enter or use a building, erection, or place so directed to be closed such person shall be punished as for contempt, as provided in § 22-2716.").

---

[48] D.C. Code § 22-2717 requires that an abatement order be entered as part of the judgment if "the existence of the nuisance be established in an action as provided in §§ 22-2713 to 22-2720, or in a criminal proceeding." A broad reading of "in a criminal proceeding" is that an order of abatement is required whenever a nuisance is established as part of any criminal proceeding. The DCCA has stated that "when a defendant has been found guilty of maintaining a bawdy or disorderly house in violation of [D.C. Code § 22-2722], the house in question must be deemed to be a nuisance per se which the trial court is compelled to abate." Raleigh v. United States, 351 A.2d 510, 514 (D.C. 1976). However, the DCCA has not addressed whether "in a criminal proceeding" extends to any criminal proceeding, or is limited to D.C. Code § 22-2722, or more generally to property used for prostitution.

In United States v. Wade, 152 F.3d 969, 973 (D.C. Cir. 1998), the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia rejected a broad interpretation of D.C. Code § 22-2717. The D.C. Circuit's interpretation of a D.C. Code statute is not binding on the DCCA, but may be persuasive authority for the DCCA. See, e.g., Tyler v. United States, 705 A.2d 270, 277 n.14 (D.C. 1997) ("even though we may find persuasive a federal court's interpretation of District of Columbia or of similar federal law . . ."). In United States v. Wade, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia vacated an order of abatement entered pursuant to D.C. Code § 22-2717 for a conviction of keeping a "disorderly house" under D.C. Code § 22-2722. United States v. Wade, 152 F.3d 969, 970, 973 (D.C. Cir. 1998). D.C. Code § 22-2722 prohibits "keeping a bawdy or disorderly house." Under DCCA case law, a "bawdy house" used for prostitution is a type of "disorderly house," but a "disorderly house" can extend beyond a "bawdy house" to encompass "activities on the premises that either disturb the public or constitute a nuisance per se." Harris v. United States, 315 A.2d 569, 573 (D.C. 1974) (footnote omitted). The property in Wade was used for selling drugs. Wade, 152 F.3d at 970.

On appeal, the defendants argued that D.C. Code § 22-2717 only applies to a "disorderly house" that is used for "lewdness, assignation, or prostitution" as required by the nuisance provision in D.C. Code § 22-2713. Wade, 152 F.3d at 971. The government argued that a conviction for keeping any disorderly house under D.C. Code § 22-2722, or a conviction of any crime where there is proof that the defendant engaged in conduct constituting a nuisance per se, requires an order of abatement under D.C. Code § 22-2717. Id. at 971, 972.

The D.C. Circuit reviewed the enactment history of the prostitution nuisance provisions in D.C. Code §§ 22-2713 through 22-2717 and the disorderly house statute in 22-2722, noting that they were enacted by Congress at different times in different bills. Wade, 152 F.3d at 971, 971-972. The court noted that D.C. Code § 22-2713 requires that the property be used for the purpose of "lewdness, assignation, or prostitution," and D.C. Code § 22-2717 refers to the existence of "the nuisance." Id. at 971-72 (emphasis in original). The court concluded that "the" refers back to the requirements of "lewdness, assignation, or prostitution" in D.C. Code § 22-2713 and that D.C. Code § 22-2717 "concerns only those nuisances defined in" D.C. Code § 22-2713. Id. at 972. The court noted that while a conviction for keeping a "bawdy house" under D.C. Code § 22-2722 would "clearly entail the type of nuisance described in [D.C. Code § 22-2713], the keeping of a disorderly house might or might not, depending on the nature of the activity conducted in it." Id. The court stated that "[b]ecause the Government failed to show that [the property] was 'used for the purpose of lewdness, assignation, or prostitution," the [defendants'] plea of guilty to keeping a disorderly house is insufficient to permit the application of [D.C. Code § 22-2717]." Id. The court acknowledged that the DCCA in Raleigh v. United States had stated that "when a defendant has been found guilty of maintaining a bawdy or disorderly house in violation of 22-2722, the house in question must be deemed to be a nuisance per se which the trial court is compelled to abate." Id. at 973 (quoting Raleigh v. United States, 351 A.2d 510, 514 (D.C. 1976)). However, the court noted that the property at issue in Raleigh was used for "lewdness, assignation, or prostitution," and, furthermore, that the DCCA "did not have before it the question of whether a disorderly house not used for such purposes is the kind of nuisance referred to in [D.C. Code § 22-2717]." Id. The court stated that "we conclude that, if confronted with this question, the [DCCA] would hold that conviction for keeping a disorderly house under [D.C. Code § 22-imprisonment.[49] The current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions have not been substantively amended since they were enacted in 1914, whereas the Title 42 nuisance provisions were enacted in 1999.[50] The Title 42 nuisance provisions were originally limited to drug-related nuisances, but were amended in 2006 to include prostitution-related nuisances,[51] and again in 2010 to include firearm-related nuisances.[52] It is unclear how the two sets of nuisance provisions relate, and there is no DCCA case law[53] or legislative

---

2722] will require an abatement order pursuant to [D.C. Code § 22-2717] only if that house was used, at least in part, for the purposes described in [D.C. Code § 22-2713]." Id.

[49] D.C. Code §§ 22-2716 (A party found guilty of contempt, under the provisions of this section, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $200 and not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01 or by imprisonment in the District Jail not less than three nor more than 6 months or by both fine and imprisonment."); 22-2717 ("If any person shall break and enter or use a building, erection, or place so directed to be closed such person shall be punished as for contempt, as provided in § 22-2716.").

[50] "Drug–Related Nuisance Abatement Act of 1998," 1998 District of Columbia Laws 12-194 (Act 12–470).

[51] "Nuisance Abatement Reform Amendment Act of 2006," 2006 District of Columbia Laws 16-81 (Act 16–267).

[52] "Community Impact Statement Amendment Act of 2010," 2010 District of Columbia Laws 18-259 (Act 18-446).

[53] Both the current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions and the current Title 42 nuisance provisions were used in a relatively recent United States District Court for the District of Columbia case. The government sought equitable relief under D.C. Code §§ 22-2713 through 22-2720 and D.C. Code §§ 42-3101 et seq. United States v. Prop. Identified as 1923 Rhode Island Ave. Ne., Washington, D.C., 522 F. Supp. 2d 204, 205 (D.D.C. 2007). The court did not discuss the apparent overlap between the two sets of nuisance provisions. The court noted that D.C. Code § 22-2714 "authorizes a special summary action in equity to abate and enjoin" a nuisance, and that D.C. Code § 42-3102 "authorizes an action to abate, enjoin, and prevent" a prostitution-related nuisance. 1923 Rhode Island Ave. Ne., 522 F. Supp. 2d at 208. The U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia's interpretation of a D.C. Code statute is not binding on the DCCA, but may be persuasive authority for the DCCA. See, e.g., Tyler v. United States, 705 A.2d 270, 277 n.14 (D.C. 1997) ("even though we may find persuasive a federal court's interpretation of District of Columbia or of similar federal law . . .").

It should be noted that the "special summary action in equity to abate and enjoin" a nuisance in D.C. Code § 22-2714 is limited to a preliminary injunction. D.C. Code § 22-2714 ("In such action [to perpetually enjoin a nuisance under D.C. Code § 22-2713], the court, or a judge in vacation, shall, upon the presentation of a petition therefor alleging that the nuisance complained of exists, allow a temporary writ of injunction, without bond, if it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the court or judge by evidence in the form of affidavits, depositions, oral testimony, or otherwise, as the complainant may elect, unless the court or judge by previous order shall have directed the form and manner in which it shall be presented."). The preliminary injunction is automatically granted if the defendant moves to continue the hearing, and, in that sense, may be considered a special summary action. D.C. Code § 22-2714 ("Three days notice, in writing, shall be given the defendant of the hearing of the application, and if then continued at his instance the writ as prayed shall be granted as a matter of course."). D.C. Code § 22-2715 requires a trial for a permanent injunction and order of abatement under D.C. Code § 22-2717.

D.C. Code § 42-3104 allows for a temporary injunction against a prostitution-related nuisance, but does not appear to allow a temporary injunction to be entered summarily if the defendant moves for a continuance. D.C. Code § 42-3104 ("(a) Upon the filing of a complaint to abate the drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance, the court shall hold a hearing on the motion for a preliminary injunction, within 10 business days of the filing of such action. If it appears, by affidavit or otherwise, that there is a substantial likelihood that the plaintiff will be able to prove at trial that a drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance exists, the court may enter an order preliminarily enjoining the drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance and granting such other relief as the court may deem appropriate, including those remedies provided in § 42-3110. A plaintiff need not prove irreparable harm to obtain a preliminary injunction. Where appropriate, the court may order a trial of the action on the merits to be advanced and consolidated history on this issue. In contrast, the revised prostitution statute deletes the prostitution nuisance provisions in current D.C. Code §§ 22-2713 through 22-2720 and instead relies on the Title 42 nuisance provisions. To the extent that the current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions are used instead of the Title 42 nuisance provisions, this revision results in several changes to current District law.

First, the Title 42 nuisance provisions[54] do not apply to real property that is used for "lewdness" or "assignation" like the current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions do.[55] To the extent that the current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions apply to private, consensual sexual conduct that is not prostitution, they may infringe on constitutional rights.[56] Second, the Title 42 nuisance provisions apply to any "real property"[57] "used" or "intended to be used" for prostitution,[58] whereas current D.C. Code § 22-2713 is limited to any "building, erection, or place used for the purpose of prostitution."[59] Third, the Title 42 nuisance provisions do not extend to a prostitution-with the hearing on the motion for preliminary injunction. (b) This section shall not be construed to prohibit the application for or the granting of a temporary restraining order, or other equitable relief otherwise provided by law.").

---

[54] The Title 42 nuisance provisions apply to any "real property, in whole or part, used, or intended to be used, to facilitate prostitution . . . that has an adverse impact on the community," and any "real property, in whole or in part, used or intended to be used to facilitate any violation of §§ 22-2701, 22-2703, and 22-2723, § 22-2701.01, § 22-2704, §§ 22-2705 to 22-2712, and § 22-2722." D.C. Code § 42-3101(5)(B), (5)(C).

[55] The current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions apply to any "building, erection, or place used for the purposes of lewdness, assignation, or prostitution." D.C. Code § 22-2713. In contrast, the Title 42 nuisance provisions apply to any "real property, in whole or part, used, or intended to be used, to facilitate prostitution . . . that has an adverse impact on the community," and any "real property, in whole or in part, used or intended to be used to facilitate any violation of §§ 22-2701, 22-2703, and 22-2723, § 22-2701.01, § 22-2704, §§ 22-2705 to 22-2712, and § 22-2722." D.C. Code § 42-3101(5)(B), (5)(C). D.C. Code § 22-2710 and D.C. Code § 22-2711 prohibit procuring an individual for the purposes of "debauchery" or "other immoral" purposes, which may overlap with "lewdness" or "assignation." However, as is discussed elsewhere in this commentary, the revised version of these offenses in the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute (RCC § 22E-4403) are limited to procuring for purposes of "prostitution."

[56] "Lewdness" and "assignation" appear to extend the current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions to property that is used for private, consensual sexual conduct that is not prostitution. Although the terms are not statutorily defined, the DCCA has stated that "lewdness" "has been defined by the Supreme Court as 'that form of immorality which has relation to sexual impurity.'" Riley v. United States, 298 A.2d 228, 230 (D.C. 1972). There is no DCCA case law explaining the meaning of "assignation," but Black's Law Dictionary defines it as "[a]n appointment of a time and place to meet secretly, esp. for engaging in illicit sex." Assignation, Black's Law Dictionary (11th ed. 2019). The United States Supreme Court has made clear that public morality cannot justify a law that regulates private sexual conduct that does not relate to prostitution, potential for injury or coercion, or public conduct. See Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558 (2003) (concerning the right to homosexual intercourse and other nonprocreative sexual activity); Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965) (concerning marital privacy and contraceptives).

[57] The Title 42 nuisance provisions define "property" as "tangible real property, or any interest in real property, including an interest in any leasehold, license or real estate, such as any house, apartment building, condominium, cooperative, office building, storage, restaurant, tavern, nightclub, warehouse, park, median, and the land extending to the boundaries of the lot upon which such structure is situated, and anything growing on, affixed to, or found on the land."

[58] The Title 42 nuisance provisions will require conforming amendments to refer to the revised prostitution offenses in RCC §§ 22E-4401 through 22E-4403, which will affect the range of real property subject to the Title 42 nuisance provisions.

[59] D.C. Code § 22-2713.

related nuisance that is established in a "criminal proceeding" as in current D.C. Code § 22-2720. Fourth, the Title 42 nuisance provisions do not punish the violation of a court order pertaining to a prostitution-related nuisance by three to six months' imprisonment as do the current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions.[60] Fifth, while both sets of nuisance provisions provide for a preliminary injunction,[61] a permanent injunction and order of abatement,[62] and a procedure for vacating an order of abatement,[63] the procedural

[60] D.C. Code §§ 22-2716 (A party found guilty of contempt, under the provisions of this section, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $200 and not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01 or by imprisonment in the District Jail not less than three nor more than 6 months or by both fine and imprisonment."); 22-2717 ("If any person shall break and enter or use a building, erection, or place so directed to be closed such person shall be punished as for contempt, as provided in § 22-2716."). A violation of a court order "issued under" the Title 42 nuisance provisions is "punishable as a contempt of court." D.C. Code § 42-3112(a).

[61] D.C. Code §§ 22-2714 (". . . In such action the court, or a judge in vacation, shall, upon the presentation of a petition therefor alleging that the nuisance complained of exists, allow a temporary writ of injunction, without bond, if it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the court or judge by evidence in the form of affidavits, depositions, oral testimony, or otherwise, as the complainant may elect, unless the court or judge by previous order shall have directed the form and manner in which it shall be presented. Three days notice, in writing, shall be given the defendant of the hearing of the application, and if then continued at his instance the writ as prayed shall be granted as a matter of course . . ."); 42-3104(a) ("Upon the filing of a complaint to abate the drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance, the court shall hold a hearing on the motion for a preliminary injunction, within 10 business days of the filing of such action. If it appears, by affidavit or otherwise, that there is a substantial likelihood that the plaintiff will be able to prove at trial that a drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance exists, the court may enter an order preliminarily enjoining the drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance and granting such other relief as the court may deem appropriate, including those remedies provided in § 42-3110. . . .").

[62] D.C. Code §§ 22-2717 ("If the existence of the nuisance be established in an action as provided in §§ 22-2713 to 22-2720, or in a criminal proceeding, an order of abatement shall be entered as a part of the judgment in the case which order shall direct the removal from the building or place of all fixtures, furniture, musical instruments, or movable property used in conducting the nuisance, and shall direct the sale thereof in the manner provided for the sale of chattels under execution, and the effectual closing of the building or place against its use for any purpose, and so keeping it closed for a period of 1 year, unless sooner released. If any person shall break and enter or use a building, erection, or place so directed to be closed such person shall be punished as for contempt, as provided in § 22-2716."); 42-3110(a) ("If the existence of a drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance is found, the court shall enter an order permanently enjoining, abating, and preventing the continuance or recurrence of the nuisance. In order to effectuate fully the equitable remedy of abatement, such order may include damages as provided in § 42-3111. The court may grant declaratory relief or any other relief deemed necessary to accomplish the purposes of the judgment. The court may retain jurisdiction of the case for the purpose of enforcing its orders. A drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance is a nuisance per se requiring abatement as provided under subsection (b) of this section.").

[63] D.C. Code §§ 22-2719 ("If the owner appears and pays all costs of the proceeding and files a bond, with sureties to be approved by the clerk, in the full value of the property, to be ascertained by the court or, in vacation, by the Collector of Taxes of the District of Columbia, conditioned that such owner will immediately abate said nuisance and prevent the same from being established or kept within a period of 1 year thereafter, the court, or, in vacation, the judge, may, if satisfied of such owner's good faith, order the premises closed under the order of abatement to be delivered to said owner and said order of abatement canceled so far as the same may relate to said property; and if the proceeding be an action in equity and said bond be given and costs therein paid before judgment and order of abatement, the action shall be thereby abated as to said building only. The release of the property under the provisions of this section shall not release it from judgment, lien, penalty, or liability to which it may be subject by law."); 42-3112(c) ("Upon motion, the court may vacate an order or judgment of abatement if the owner of the property satisfies the court that the drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance has been abated for 90 days prior requirements vary in the Title 42 nuisance provisions as compared to the current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions,[64] as do the types of equitable relief.[65] This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Eighth, the general RCC deferred disposition provision in RCC § 22E-602 makes several changes to the deferred disposition provision for prostitution or solicitation in current D.C. Code § 22-2703. Current D.C. Code § 22-2703 states that the "court may impose conditions upon any person found guilty under § 22-2701, and so long as such person shall comply therewith to the satisfaction of the court the imposition or execution of sentence may be suspended for such period as the court may direct."[66] The statute specifies examples of conditions that the court may impose on the defendant, such as "an order to stay away from the area within which the offense or offenses occurred."[67] D.C. Code § 22-2703 was enacted in 1914. Despite substantive revisions to the current D.C. Code prostitution or solicitation statute (D.C. Code § 22-2701) in 2007, 2009, and 2015, D.C. Code § 22-2703 has not been substantively amended since 1996.[68] In contrast, the

---

to the motion, corrects all housing code and health code violations on the property, and deposits a bond in an amount to be determined by the court, which shall be in an amount reasonably calculated to ensure continued abatement of the nuisance. Any bond posted under this subsection shall be forfeited immediately if the drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance recurs during the 2-year period following the date on which an order under this section is entered. At the close of 2 years following the date on which an order under this section is entered, the bond shall be returned.").

[64] For example, the Title 42 nuisance provisions require that the plaintiff must establish the existence of a nuisance by a preponderance of the evidence. D.C. Code § 42-3108 ("The plaintiff must establish that a drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance exists by a preponderance of the evidence. Once a reasonable attempt at notice is made pursuant to § 42-3103, the owner of the property shall be presumed to have knowledge of the drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance. A plaintiff is not required to make any further showing that the owner knew, or should have known, of the drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance to obtain relief under § 42-3110 or § 42-3111."). There is no such requirement specified in the current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions. D.C. Code §§ 22-2713 through 22-2720.

[65] For example, the current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions specifically require the removal and sale of all "fixtures, furniture, musical instruments, or movable property used in conducting the nuisance." D.C. Code § 22-2717 ("an order of abatement shall be entered as a part of the judgment in the case which order shall direct the removal from the building or place of all fixtures, furniture, musical instruments, or movable property used in conducting the nuisance, and shall direct the sale thereof in the manner provided for the sale of chattels under execution . . . ."). The Title 42 nuisance provisions do not specifically allow for such a sale, but do grant the court broad powers to order equitable relief that may extend to such a sale. D.C. Code § 42-3110(b) ("Any order issued under this section may include the following relief: (1) Assessment of reasonable attorney fees and costs to the prevailing party; (2) Ordering the owner to make repairs upon the property; (3) Ordering the owner to make reasonable expenditures upon the property, including the installation of secure locks, hiring private security personnel, increasing lighting in common areas, and using videotaped surveillance of the property and adjacent alleys, sidewalks, or parking lots; (4) Ordering all rental income from the property to be placed in an escrow account with the court for up to 90 days or until the drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance is abated; (5) Ordering all rental income for the property transferred to a trustee, to be appointed by the court, who shall be empowered to use the rental income to make reasonable expenditures related to the property in order to abate the drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance; (6) Ordering the property vacated, sealed, or demolished; or (7) Any other remedy which the court, in its discretion, deems appropriate.").

[66] D.C. Code § 22-2703.

[67] D.C. Code § 22-2703.

[68] The second sentence of D.C. Code § 22-2703, specifying examples of conditions that the court may impose on the defendant, was added in 1996. Safe Streets Anti–Prostitution Amendment Act of 1996, 1996 District of Columbia Laws 11-130 (Act 11–237).

RCC general deferred disposition provision in RCC § 22E-602 makes several changes to the deferred disposition provision for prostitution or solicitation in current D.C. Code § 22-2703.

First, the revised deferred disposition provision no longer codifies examples of conditions that the court may impose on the defendant. This language is unnecessary because the revised provision requires "reasonable conditions" and does not restrict the conditions the court may impose. Second, the revised provision deletes this language from D.C. Code § 22-2703: "The Department of Human Services of the District of Columbia, the Women's Bureau of the Police Department, and the probation officers of the court are authorized and directed to perform such duties as may be directed by the court in effectuating compliance with the conditions so imposed upon any defendant."[69] The current D.C. Code deferred disposition provision for possession of a controlled substance does not have such a provision,[70] and the statutory grant of authority to probation officers appears unnecessary. Similarly, it is unclear whether the Department of Human Services of the District of Columbia needs such a statutory grant of authority, and the Women's Bureau of the Police Department no longer exists. Third, the revised provision requires the consent of the defendant and limits the probation period to a maximum of one year, instead of "for such period as the court may direct"[71] in current D.C. Code § 22-2703. Fourth, the revised provision establishes that discharge or dismissal of the charge is not a conviction "for purposes of disqualifications or disabilities imposed by law," including the imposition of recidivist penalties for prior misdemeanor convictions under RCC § 22E-606 or other similar provisions, consistent with the deferred disposition for possession of a controlled substance in the current D.C. Code[72] and the RCC.[73] Fifth, after discharge of the proceedings, the revised provision provides for sealing the publicly available records of the arrest and related court proceedings under D.C. Code § 16–803. These changes improve the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Beyond these eight changes to current District law, six other aspects of the revised statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised prostitution statute clarifies that payment can be received by or promised to "the actor or a third party." The current D.C. Code prostitution or solicitation statute prohibits "engag[ing] in prostitution"[74] or "solicit[ing] for prostitution"[75] and defines "prostitution," in relevant part, as "a sexual act or sexual contact with another person in exchange for . . . receiving anything of value."[76] It is

[69] D.C. Code § 22-2703.
[70] D.C. Code § 48-904.01(e).
[71] D.C. Code § 22-2703 ("The court may impose conditions upon any person found guilty under § 22-2701, and so long as such person shall comply therewith to the satisfaction of the court the imposition or execution of sentence may be suspended for such period as the court may direct; and the court may at or before the expiration of such period remand such sentence or cause it to be executed."). Under the revised deferred disposition provision, the court must have the consent of the defendant to defer imposition or execution of sentence, and the period of probation is limited to one year.
[72] D.C. Code § 48-904.01(e).
[73] RCC § 48-904.01a(g).
[74] D.C. Code § 22-2701(a).
[75] D.C. Code § 22-2701(a).
[76] D.C. Code § 22-2701.01(3).

unclear whether the recipient of payment must be the person engaging in or soliciting for sexual activity for payment or if a third party, such as the owner of a prostitution business, would be sufficient. There is no DCCA case law on this issue. Resolving this ambiguity, the revised prostitution statute requires "in exchange for the actor or a third party receiving anything of value." This language clarifies that the recipient or promised recipient of payment can either be the individual engaging in or soliciting for the sexual activity for payment or a third party, as long as the payment is "in exchange" for the sexual activity. This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised statute and removes a possible gap in liability.

Second, a promise for payment of anything of value is sufficient for liability in the revised prostitution statute. The current D.C. Code prostitution or solicitation statute prohibits "engag[ing] in prostitution"[77] or "solicit[ing] for prostitution" and defines "prostitution," in relevant part, as "a sexual act or sexual contact with another person in exchange for . . . receiving anything of value."[78] It is unclear whether "receiving anything of value" requires that a person actually receive anything of value, or if a promise to receive anything of value in the future is sufficient. There is no DCCA case law on this issue. Resolving this ambiguity, the revised prostitution statute retains the language "receiving anything of value," but requires an agreement to engage in sexual activity in paragraphs (a)(1) and (a)(2), and, per the explanatory note to the commentary above, it is sufficient if anything of value is promised as part of this agreement. In paragraph (a)(1), the actor must engage in sexual activity in exchange for the actor or a third party "receiving anything of value" pursuant to a prior agreement. In paragraph (a)(2), the actor must agree to engage in sexual activity in exchange for the actor or a third party "receiving anything of value." In the revised statute the phrase "in exchange for" specifies the transactional nature of the sexual act or sexual contact and is satisfied if any person receives anything of value or if anything of value was promised to any person.[79] This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised statutes and removes a possible gap in liability.

Third, the revised prostitution statute requires that an individual engage in or submit to sexual activity in exchange for anything of value "pursuant to a prior agreement, explicit or implicit." The current D.C. Code prostitution or solicitation statute prohibits "engag[ing] in prostitution"[80] and defines "prostitution," in relevant part, as "a sexual act or sexual contact with another person in exchange for . . . receiving anything of value."[81] It seems clear that the offense includes an individual and a patron reaching an agreement for payment "in exchange" for sexual activity, and then engaging in sexual activity. It is unclear, however, if the offense includes individuals engaging in sexual activity, and after the fact coming to an agreement about payment. Resolving this ambiguity, the revised prostitution statute includes receiving anything of value in exchange for past sexual activity only if it is "pursuant to a prior agreement, explicit or

[77] D.C. Code § 22-2701(a).
[78] D.C. Code § 22-2701.01(3).
[79] As is noted in the explanatory note, there is overlap between paragraph (a)(1) and paragraph (a)(2). In paragraph (a)(1), if anything of value is promised to the actor or a third party as part of a prior agreement, this conduct also falls under paragraph (a)(2)—agreeing, explicitly or implicitly, to engage in or submit to sexual activity in exchange for the actor or a third party receiving anything of value.
[80] D.C. Code § 22-2701(a).
[81] D.C. Code § 22-2701.01(3).

implicit." Without requiring a prior agreement, receiving anything of value in exchange for past sexual activity could criminalize consensual romantic conduct with subsequent gifts. This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Fourth, the revised prostitution statute requires a "knowingly" culpable mental state for the prohibited conduct—engages in, agrees to engage in, or solicits for sexual activity, in exchange for the actor or a third party receiving anything of value. The current D.C. Code prostitution or solicitation statute does not specify any culpable mental states, and there is no DCCA case law on this issue.[82] Resolving this ambiguity, the revised prostitution statute requires a "knowingly" culpable mental state for the prohibited conduct—engaging in, or agreeing or offering to engage in, a sexual act or sexual contact in exchange for anything of value to be received by the actor or a third party. Requiring, at a minimum, a knowing culpable mental state for the elements of an offense that make otherwise legal conduct illegal is a generally accepted legal principle.[83] This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised statutes.

Fifth, the revised prostitution statute does not require that the sexual activity be "with another person." The current D.C. Code prostitution or solicitation statute prohibits "engag[ing] in prostitution or . . . solicit[ing] for prostitution"[84] and defines "prostitution" as a "sexual act or contact with another person in return for giving or receiving anything of value."[85] The current D.C. Code[86] and RCC[87] definitions of "sexual act" and "sexual contact" include masturbation. However, the current statute's "with another person" requirement may narrow the offense to exclude a prostitute engaging in or soliciting to [82] Due to the statutory definition of "sexual contact" (D.C. Code § 22-3001(9)), prostitution based on a "sexual contact" requires that the prostitute have an "intent to abuse, humiliate, harass, degrade, or arouse or gratify the sexual desire of any person." In the context of the District's current D.C. Code sexual abuse statutes, the DCCA has sustained a conviction for second degree child sexual abuse when the jury instructions required that the actor "knowingly" touched the complainant and erroneously omitted the additional intent requirement. Green v. United States, 948 A.2d 554, 558, 561 (D.C. 2008) (affirming appellant's conviction for second degree child sexual abuse when the jury instructions required that the appellant "knowingly" touched the complainant and omitted the "intent to abuse, humiliate, harass, degrade, or arouse or gratify the sexual desire of any person" requirement because "no rational jury could have found that appellant touched [the complainants] in a way consistent with the trial court's jury instruction . . . without also finding the requisite intent.").

---

[83] Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2010, 192 L.Ed.2d 1 (2015).

[84] D.C. Code § 22-2701(a).

[85] D.C. Code § 22-2701.01(3).

[86] D.C. Code §§ 22-2701.01(5), (6) (adopting the definition of "sexual act" in D.C. Code § 22-3001(8) and the definition of "sexual contact" in D.C. Code § 22-3001(9) for the prostitution or solicitation statute in D.C. Code § 22-2701); 22-3001(8) (defining "sexual act" as "(A) The penetration, however slight, of the anus or vulva of another by a penis; (B) Contact between the mouth and the penis, the mouth and the vulva, or the mouth and the anus; or (C) The penetration, however slight, of the anus or vulva by a hand or finger or by any object, with an intent to abuse, humiliate, harass, degrade, or arouse or gratify the sexual desire of any person. (D) The emission of semen is not required for the purposes of subparagraphs (A)-(C) of this paragraph."); 22-3001(9) (defining "sexual contact" as "the touching with any clothed or unclothed body part or any object, either directly or through the clothing, of the genitalia, anus, groin, breast, inner thigh, or buttocks of any person with an intent to abuse, humiliate, harass, degrade, or arouse or gratify the sexual desire of any person.").

[87] RCC § 22E-701.

engage in masturbation because masturbation is not "with another person." Alternatively, the current prostitution or solicitation offense could be interpreted to include a prostitute engaging in or soliciting to engage in masturbation "with another person," if the latter phrase is construed to mean "for another person to watch." To resolve this ambiguity, the revised statute does not require that the sexual activity be "with another person." Masturbation in exchange for anything of value is within the scope of the revised statute. This change improves the clarity, and may improve the proportionality, of the revised statute.

Sixth, the revised prostitution statute expands the scope of the "safe harbor" provision in the current D.C. Code prostitution or solicitation statute to include solicitation. The "safe harbor" provision in the current prostitution or solicitation statute states that a person under the age of 18 years that "engages in or offers to engage in a sexual act or sexual contact in return for receiving anything of value shall be immune from prosecution for a violation of subsection (a) of this section."[88] However, subsection (a) of the current statute prohibits conduct beyond engaging in or offering to engage in sexual activity. It also prohibits "solicit[ing] for prostitution,"[89] defined as "to invite, entice, offer, persuade, or agree to engage in prostitution or address for the purpose of inviting, enticing, offering, persuading, or agreeing to engage in prostitution."[90] It is unclear if the current safe harbor provision is limited to engaging in or offering to engage in sexual activity, or if it extends to all solicitation of prostitution, as prohibited in subsection (a). There is no DCCA case law interpreting the current "safe harbor" provision. Resolving this ambiguity, the safe harbor provision in the revised prostitution statute applies to all prohibited conduct in the revised statute—engages in, agrees to engage in, or solicits for sexual activity, in exchange for any person receiving payment. This change improves the clarity and may improve the proportionality of the revised statutes.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

First, the revised prostitution statute makes "agrees" to engage in or submit to sexual activity a discrete basis of liability in paragraph (a)(2), separate from soliciting for prostitution in paragraph (a)(3). The current D.C. Code prostitution or solicitation statute prohibits "solicit[ing] for prostitution"[91] and the current D.C. Code definition of "solicit for prostitution" is, in relevant part, "to invite, entice, offer, persuade, or agree to engage in prostitution."[92] Paragraph (a)(3) of the revised statute encompasses liability for "invite," "entice," "offer," or "persuade" to engage in prostitution using language consistent with the general RCC solicitation statute (RCC § 22E-302). Paragraph (a)(2) separately and clearly addresses an agreement to engage in prostitution. This change clarifies the revised statute.

[88] D.C. Code § 22-2701(d)(1).
[89] D.C. Code § 22-2701(a).
[90] D.C. Code § 22-2701.01(7).
[91] D.C. Code § 22-2701(a).
[92] D.C. Code § 22-2701.01(7).

Second, the revised prostitution statute specifies that an agreement can be either explicit or implicit. The current D.C. Code prostitution or solicitation statute prohibits "engag[ing] in prostitution or . . . solicit[ing] for prostitution"[93] and defines "prostitution" as a "sexual act or contact with another person in return for giving or receiving anything of value."[94] The language "in return for" implies the requirement of an agreement, either explicit or implicit, but there is no DCCA case law interpreting this requirement. An older version of the statute made it unlawful to "invite, entice, persuade, or to address for the purpose of inviting, enticing, or persuading"[95] for the purpose of prostitution and DCCA case law interpreting this older statute appears to have extended to both an explicit or implicit agreement.[96] More recent case law has also looked beyond spoken words to the surrounding circumstances to assess whether there is an agreement to prostitution.[97] This change improves the clarity of the revised statutes.

Third, the revised prostitution statute uses "in exchange" for anything of value instead of "in return" for anything of value. The current D.C. Code definition of "prostitution" is a "sexual act or contact with another person in return for giving or receiving anything of value."[98] "In exchange" emphasizes the transactional nature of the sexual act or sexual contact, regardless of when the sexual activity occurs, and is not intended to substantively change current District law.

Fourth, the revised safe harbor provision language is changed in several minor ways to be more consistent and clear than the safe harbor provision in current D.C. Code § 22-2701(d). First, the revised prostitution statute replaces "shall be immune from prosecution" with "does not commit an offense under this section." The revised language is consistent with other RCC offenses that contain an exclusion from liability and is not intended to change the scope of the provision. Second, the revised safe harbor provision no longer uses the term "child," defined in the current safe harbor provision as a "person who has not attained the age of 18 years."[99] The revised safe harbor provision instead refers to a person that is "under 18 years of age," which is consistent with other RCC offenses. Third, the revised safe harbor provision replaces the reference to current D.C. Code § 22-1834, the sex trafficking of children offense, with RCC § 22E-1805, the equivalent RCC sex trafficking a minor offense. This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised statutes.

Fifth, the revised prostitution statute includes an actor who "engages in or submits to" sexual activity (paragraph (a)(1)), agrees to "engage in or submit to" sexual activity, (paragraph (a)(2)), and solicits any person to "engage in or submit to" sexual activity

---

[93] D.C. Code § 22-2701(a).
[94] D.C. Code § 22-2701.01(3).
[95] D.C. Code § 22-2701 (1973).
[96] See, e.g., Dinkins v. United States, 374 A.2d 292, 296 (D.C. 1977) ("In the final analysis, it is a question of fact whether the acts and words of the defendant in general, viewed in the light of surrounding circumstances, constitute the enticing or addressing prohibited by the statute. Were specific language or conduct determinative, as urged by appellant, every prostitute could know how to avoid arrest.") (internal citations omitted).
[97] In 2013, the DCCA affirmed a conviction for soliciting for prostitution under D.C. Code § 22-2701 when the current definition of "solicitation" was in effect and stated that "we do not require the government to prove any particular language" and "we look to appellant's conduct or words in light of surrounding circumstances." Moten v. United States, 81 A.3d 1274, 1280, 1281 (D.C. 2013) (internal citations omitted).
[98] D.C. Code § 22-2701.01(3).
[99] D.C. Code § 22-2701(d)(3).

(paragraph (a)(3)). The current D.C. Code prostitution or solicitation statute prohibits "engag[ing] in prostitution or . . . solicit[ing] for prostitution"[100] and defines "prostitution" as a "sexual act or contact with another person in return for giving or receiving anything of value."[101] The revised language is consistent with the revised sex offenses in RCC Chapter 13 and is not intended to substantively change current District law.

Sixth, the revised prostitution statute is no longer subject to the definition of "anything of value" in D.C. Code § 22-1802 that applies to the current D.C. Code prostitution or solicitation statute. Current D.C. Code § 22-1802 states that "anything of value" "shall be held to include not only things possessing intrinsic value, but bank notes and other forms of paper money, and commercial paper and other writings which represent value."[102] This definition is unnecessary, and not explicitly specifying that money and commercial paper is included within "anything of value" in the revised offense is not intended to change current District law.

Seventh, the revised prostitution offense includes states that the Metropolitan Police Department (MPD) and "and any other District agency designated by the Mayor" shall refer any person under the age of 18 years suspected of violating subsection (a) of the revised statute to an organization that provides treatment, housing, or services appropriate for victims of sex trafficking of a minor under RCC § 22E-1605. The current D.C. Code prostitution or solicitation statute states that MPD "shall" shall refer any person under the age of 18 years suspected of engaging in prostitution or soliciting for prostitution "to an organization that provides treatment, housing, or services appropriate for victims of sex trafficking of children under § 22-1834."[103] Including "any other District agency designated by the Mayor" ensures the referral provision remains relevant and applicable should there be future changes in service delivery while ensuring that MPD remains bound to provide referrals. This change improves the clarity of the revised statutes.

[100] D.C. Code § 22-2701(a).
[101] D.C. Code § 22-2701.01(3).
[102] D.C. Code § 22-1802.
[103] D.C. Code § 22-2701(d)(2).

RCC § 22E-4402. Patronizing Prostitution.

Explanatory Note. The RCC patronizing prostitution offense prohibits engaging in a sexual act or sexual contact in exchange for giving another person anything of value and soliciting for this purpose, as well as agreeing to give anything of value to another person in exchange for a sexual act or sexual contact. The offense does not require that a person be convicted of the RCC prostitution offense (RCC § 22E-4401). The offense is graded based on the age of the person patronized and whether the person patronized is impaired. Along with the RCC prostitution offense,[1] the revised patronizing prostitution offense replaces two distinct offenses in the current D.C. Code: prostitution[2] and soliciting for prostitution[3] and the definitions statute that applies to these offenses.[4] The revised patronizing prostitution statute also replaces in relevant part three distinct provisions for the current D.C. Code prostitution and soliciting for prostitution offenses: the deferred disposition provision,[5] provisions for establishing a nuisance and abating a nuisance,[6] and provisions for vehicle impoundment[7] and the Anti-Prostitution Vehicle Impoundment Proceeds Fund.[8]

Subsection (a) specifies the prohibited conduct for the revised patronizing prostitution statute. Subsection (a) and paragraph (a)(1) specify one type of prohibited conduct—pursuant to a prior agreement, explicit or implicit, the actor engages in or submits to a sexual act or sex contact in exchange for the actor giving another person anything of value. The phrase "in exchange for" specifies the transactional nature of the sexual act or sexual contact and is satisfied if the actor gives anything of value or promises to give anything of value to another person.[9] Paragraph (a)(1) is intended to apply only to a patron—an individual that pays or promises to pay for sexual activity—and not a prostitute. The RCC prostitution offense (RCC § 22E-4401) criminalizes receiving or agreeing to receive payment for sexual activity. Subsection (a) specifies a culpable mental state of "knowingly" and per the rule of construction in RCC § 22E-207, the "knowingly" culpable mental state applies to all the elements in paragraph (a)(1). "Knowingly" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-206 that here means the actor must be "practically certain" that the actor, pursuant to a prior agreement, explicit or implicit, engages in or submits to a sexual act or sexual contact in exchange for the actor giving another person anything of value. The recipient or promised recipient of payment may be the person engaging in sexual activity

[1] RCC § 22E-4401.
[2] D.C. Code § 22-2701.
[3] D.C. Code § 22-2701.
[4] D.C. Code § 22-2701.01.
[5] D.C. Code § 22-2703.
[6] D.C. Code §§ 22-2713 - 22-2720.
[7] D.C. Code § 22-2724.
[8] D.C. Code § 22-2725.
[9] If anything of value is promised to another person as part of a prior agreement, this conduct also falls under paragraph (a)(2)—agreeing, explicitly or implicitly, to give anything of value in exchange for any person engaging in or submitting to sexual activity.

for payment or a third party. "Sexual act" and "sexual contact" are defined terms in RCC § 22E-701 that prohibit specific types of sexual penetration or sexual touching.

Subsection (a) and paragraph (a)(2) specify the second type of prohibited conduct—agreeing, explicitly or implicitly, to give anything of value to another person in exchange for any person engaging in or submitting to a sexual act or sexual contact. The phrase "in exchange for" specifies the transactional nature of the sexual act or sexual contact and is satisfied if the actor gives anything of value or promises to give anything of value to another person. Paragraph (a)(2) is intended to apply only to a patron—an individual that pays or promises to pay for sexual activity—and not a prostitute. The RCC prostitution offense (RCC § 22E-4401) criminalizes receiving or agreeing to receive payment for sexual activity. Subsection (a) specifies a culpable mental state of "knowingly" and per the rule of construction in RCC § 22E-207, the "knowingly" culpable mental state applies to all the elements in paragraph (a)(2). "Knowingly" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-206 that here means the actor must be "practically certain" that the actor agrees, explicitly or implicitly, to give anything of value to another person in exchange for any person engaging in or submitting to a sexual act or sexual contact. The recipient or promised recipient of payment may be the person agreeing to sexual activity for payment or a third party. "Sexual act" and "sexual contact" are defined terms in RCC § 22E-701 that prohibit specific types of sexual penetration or sexual touching.

Subsection (a) and paragraph (a)(3) prohibit the final type of prohibited conduct—commanding, requesting, or trying to persuade any person to engage in or submit to a sexual act or sexual contact in exchange for the actor giving another person anything of value. "Commands, requests, or tries to persuade" matches the language in the RCC solicitation statute (RCC § 22E-302). The phrase "in exchange for" specifies the transactional nature of the sexual act or sexual contact and is satisfied if the actor gives anything of value or promises to give anything of value to another person. Paragraph (a)(3) is intended to apply only to a patron—an individual that pays or promises to pay for sexual activity—and not a prostitute. The RCC prostitution offense (RCC § 22E-4401) criminalizes receiving or agreeing to receive payment for sexual activity. Subsection (a) specifies a culpable mental state of "knowingly" and per the rule of construction in RCC § 22E-207, the "knowingly" culpable mental state applies to all the elements in paragraph (a)(3). "Knowingly" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-206 that here means the actor must be "practically certain" that the actor commands, requests, or tries to persuade any person to engage in or submit to a sexual act or sexual contact in exchange for the actor giving another person anything of value. The recipient or promised recipient of payment may be the person soliciting for sexual activity for payment or a third party. "Sexual act" and "sexual contact" are defined terms in RCC § 22E-701 that prohibit specific types of sexual penetration or sexual touching.

Subsection (b) specifies relevant penalties for the offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.] Paragraph (b)(2) codifies several penalty enhancements for the revised patronizing prostitution statute. If any of the specified enhancements apply, the penalty classification for the revised offense is increased by one class.

The penalty enhancement in subparagraph (b)(2)(A) applies if the actor is reckless as to the fact that the person patronized is under 18 years of age, or if, in fact, the person patronized is under 12 years of age. "Reckless" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-206 that here means that the actor is aware of a substantial risk that the person patronized is under 18 years of age. In the alternative, the penalty enhancement applies if the person patronized "in fact" is under 12 years of age. "In fact" is defined term in RCC § 22E-207 that indicates there is no culpable mental state requirement as to a given element, here the age of the person patronized.

Two penalty enhancements are codified under subparagraph (b)(2)(B). Under subparagraph (b)(2)(B) and sub-subparagraph (b)(2)(B)(i), the actor must be reckless as to the fact that the person patronized is "incapable of appraising the nature of the sexual act or sexual contact" or of understanding the right to give or withhold consent to the sexual act or sexual contact. In addition, the person's inability must be either due to a drug, intoxicant, or other substance, or, due to an intellectual, developmental, or mental disability or mental illness when the actor has no similarly serious disability or illness. This language is identical to one of the requirements in second degree and fourth degree of the RCC sexual assault statute (RCC § 22E-1301) and is intended to have the same meaning. Per the rule of construction in RCC § 22E-207, the "reckless" culpable mental state in subparagraph (b)(2)(B) applies to the requirements in sub-subparagraph (b)(2)(B)(i). "Reckless" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-206 that here means that the actor is aware of a substantial risk that the person patronized is incapable of appraising the nature of the sexual act or sexual contact or of understanding the right to give or withhold consent to the sexual act or sexual contact, either due to a drug, intoxicant, or other substance, or, due to an intellectual, developmental, or mental disability or mental illness when the actor has no similarly serious disability or illness.

Under subparagraph (b)(2)(B) and sub-subparagraph (b)(2)(B)(ii), the actor must be reckless as to the fact that the person patronized is incapable of communicating[10] willingness or unwillingness to engage in the sexual act or sexual contact. This language is identical to one of the requirements in second degree and fourth degree of the RCC sexual assault statute (RCC § 22E-1301) and is intended to have the same meaning. Sub-subparagraph (b)(2)(B)(ii) includes paralyzed individuals who are able to appraise the nature of the sexual activity or of understanding the right to give or withhold consent under sub-subparagraph (b)(2)(B)(i), but are unable to communicate. Per the rule of construction in RCC § 22E-207, the "reckless" culpable mental state in subparagraph (b)(2)(B) applies to the requirements in sub-subparagraph (b)(2)(B)(i). "Reckless" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-206 that here means the actor is aware of a substantial risk that the person patronized is incapable of communicating willingness or unwillingness to engage in the sexual act or sexual contact.

Subsection (d) cross-references applicable definitions located elsewhere in the RCC.

[10] If the complainant is unable to communicate verbally or orally, but is able to make gestures, facial expressions, or engage in other conduct, the person may be capable of communicating and this element may not be satisfied.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised patronizing prostitution statute clearly changes District law in ten main ways.

First, the revised patronizing prostitution statute is limited to an individual that engages in sexual activity in exchange for paying another person. The current D.C. Code prostitution offense[11] and current D.C. Code soliciting for prostitution offense[12] include within their scope an individual that pays for sexual activity, as well as the individual that receives payment for sexual activity. In contrast, the RCC patronizing prostitution statute is limited to the individual that engages in or solicits for sexual activity in exchange for giving any person anything of value, or agrees to give any person anything of value in exchange for sexual activity. The RCC prostitution statute (RCC § 22E-4401) separately criminalizes engaging in, agreeing to, or soliciting for sexual activity in exchange for receiving payment. As part of this revision, the revised patronizing prostitution statute no longer uses the current D.C. Code definitions of "prostitution" (D.C. Code § 22-2701.01(3)) or "solicit for prostitution" (D.C. Code § 22-2701.01(7)), and there is no longer a separate soliciting for prostitution form of the offense.[13] This change improve the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Second, the revised patronizing prostitution statute deletes the special recidivist penalty for engaging in or soliciting for prostitution set forth in current D.C. Code § 22-2701(b).[14] For the first offense, the current D.C. Code prostitution or solicitation statute

---

[11] The current D.C. Code prostitution or solicitation statute prohibits "engag[ing] in prostitution" and defines "prostitution" as a "sexual act or contact with another person in return for giving or receiving anything of value." D.C. Code §§ 22-2701(a); 22-2701.01(3) (emphasis added). When the definition of "prostitution" is inserted into the current prostitution or solicitation statute, the statute prohibits both engaging in sexual activity "with another person in return for giving anything of value" and "with another person in return for receiving anything of value."
Although the current D.C. Code prostitution or solicitation offense includes both a prostitute and a patron, the "safe harbor" provision in the current statute is limited to the individual that engages in sexual activity for payment, and excludes patrons. D.C. Code § 22-2701(d)(1) ("A child who engages in or offers to engage in a sexual act or sexual contact in return for receiving anything of value shall be immune from prosecution for a violation of subsection (a) of this section.").

[12] The current D.C. Code prostitution or solicitation statute prohibits "solicit[ing] for prostitution." D.C. Code § 22-2701(a). "Solicit for prostitution" is defined, in relevant part, as "to invite, entice, offer, persuade, or agree to engage in prostitution, or address for the purpose of inviting, enticing, offering, persuading, or agreeing to engage in prostitution" and "prostitution" is defined as a "sexual act or contact with another person in return for giving or receiving anything of value." D.C. Code §§ 22-2701(a); 22-2701.01(3) (emphasis added). When the definitions of "solicit for prostitution" and "prostitution" are inserted into the current prostitution or solicitation statute, the statute prohibits offering, agreeing, or soliciting to engage in sexual activity both "with another person in return for giving anything of value" and "with another person in return for receiving anything of value."

[13] D.C. Code § 22-2701 prohibits both "engag[ing] in prostitution" and "solicit[ing] for prostitution."

[14] D.C. Code § 22-2701 ("(b)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, a person convicted of prostitution or soliciting for prostitution shall be: (A) Fined not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01, imprisoned for not more than 90 days, or both, for the first offense; and (B) Fined not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01, imprisoned not more than 180 days, or both, for the second offense. (2) A person convicted of prostitution or soliciting for prostitution who has 2 or more prior convictions for prostitution or soliciting for prostitution, not committed on the same occasion, shall be fined not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01, imprisoned for not more than 2 years, or both. (c) For the purposes of this section, a person shall be considered as having 2 or more prior convictions for prostitution or soliciting for prostitution if he or she has been convicted on at least 2 occasions of violations of: (1) This section; (2) has a maximum term of imprisonment of 90 days.[15] The special recidivist penalty provides that for the second offense, the maximum term of imprisonment is 180 days,[16] and for a third or subsequent offense, the conviction is a felony with a maximum term of imprisonment of two years.[17] This special enhancement is highly unusual in current District law. In contrast, for the revised patronizing prostitution statute, only the general recidivism enhancement in section RCC § 22E-606 may provide enhanced punishment for recidivist patronizing prostitution, consistent with other misdemeanor offenses. There is no clear basis for singling out recidivist prostitution or solicitation offenses as compared to other offenses of similar seriousness. This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Third, the revised patronizing prostitution statute limits soliciting to conduct that "commands, requests, or tries to persuade" any person. The current D.C. Code definition of "solicit for prostitution" is "to invite, entice, offer, persuade, or agree to engage in prostitution or address for the purpose of inviting, enticing, offering, persuading, or agreeing to engage in prostitution."[18] There is no DCCA case law interpreting this special definition of "solicit for prostitution."[19] However, an older version of the statute made it unlawful to "invite, entice, persuade, or to address for the purpose of inviting, enticing, or persuading"[20] for the purpose of prostitution. The DCCA stated that the older statute used the term "address," as opposed to "solicit" or "solicitation,"[21] which "removes the suggestion that an initial, active effort to engage someone in a conversation or transaction involving prostitution is a prerequisite to guilt,"[22] and that "an enticement also does not require an active, initiatory effort but can occur in a responsive manner."[23] Under this case law, it is also irrelevant which party broaches the subject of payment: "[o]nce there is an enticement or an address for the purpose of enticement, it becomes

---

A statute in one or more other jurisdictions prohibiting prostitution or soliciting for prostitution; or (3) Conduct that would constitute a violation of this section if committed in the District of Columbia.").

[15] D.C. Code § 22-2701(b)(1)(A).

[16] D.C. Code § 22-2701(b)(1)(B).

[17] D.C. Code § 22-2701(b)(2).

[18] D.C. Code § 22-2701.01(7). As is discussed elsewhere in this commentary, the current D.C. Code definition of "prostitution" includes both a patron and the individual engaging in prostitution for payment.

[19] The current D.C. Code definition of "solicit for prostitution" was enacted in 2007. Omnibus Public Safety Amendment Act of 2006, 2006 District of Columbia Laws 16-306 (Act 16–482).

[20] D.C. Code § 22-2701 (1973).

[21] Dinkins v. United States, 374 A.2d 292, 294 (D.C. 1977).

[22] Dinkins v. United States, 374 A.2d 292, 295 (D.C. 1977). The DCCA in Dinkins affirmed a conviction under this older statute when the defendant did not initiate the encounter, merely responded to an undercover officer's questions, and the officer brought up the subject of payment. Dinkins v. United States, 374 A.2d 292, 296 (D.C. 1977) ("We hold that appellant's attire, her prolonged presence on the street corner, her approach to a complete stranger, her extremely suggestive verbal responses to the officer, her prompt discussion of financial terms, and her ready arrangement for a room are legally sufficient, when taken together, for a fact finder to conclude guilt beyond a reasonable doubt.").

[23] Dinkins, 374 A.2d at 295. The DCCA in Dinkins affirmed a conviction under this older statute when the defendant did not initiate the encounter, merely responded to an undercover officer's questions, and the officer brought up the subject of payment. Dinkins v. United States, 374 A.2d 292, 296 (D.C. 1977) ("We hold that appellant's attire, her prolonged presence on the street corner, her approach to a complete stranger, her extremely suggestive verbal responses to the officer, her prompt discussion of financial terms, and her ready arrangement for a room are legally sufficient, when taken together, for a fact finder to conclude guilt beyond a reasonable doubt.").

unimportant who broaches the commercial nature of the transaction."[24] In contrast, the revised patronizing prostitution statute limits soliciting to conduct that "commands, requests, or tries to persuade" another person to engage in sexual activity in exchange for giving any person anything of value. With this change, the revised patronizing prostitution statute uses language identical to the general RCC solicitation statute (RCC § 22E-302), and the RCC patronizing prostitution statute differs from the general RCC solicitation statute primarily in the required culpable mental state—patronizing prostitution requires "knowingly" rather than "purposely." To the extent that DCCA case law interpreting the older statute is still good law, the revised statute preserves case law establishing that it is irrelevant which party initiates the encounter or brings up the subject of payment. However, unlike current case law, liability under paragraph (a)(3) of the revised statute does require active efforts to solicit another person—"commands, requests, or tries to persuade any person." This change reduces unnecessary overlap and improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Fourth, the revised patronizing prostitution statute uses the revised definitions of "sexual act" and "sexual contact" in RCC § 22E-701. The current D.C. Code definitions of "prostitution" and "solicit for prostitution" use the terms "sexual act" and "sexual contact" as those terms are currently defined in D.C. Code § 22-3001[25] for the current D.C. Code sexual abuse statutes. In contrast, the revised patronizing prostitution statute uses the revised definitions of "sexual act" and "sexual contact" in RCC § 22E-701. As the commentary to RCC § 22E-701 explains, the revised definitions of "sexual act" and "sexual contact" differ in multiple ways as compared to current law. As a result, the scope of the revised patronizing prostitution statute will differ as compared to the current D.C. Code prostitution or solicitation statute. For example, the current D.C. Code definitions of "sexual act" and "sexual contact" extend to conduct done with "an intent to abuse, humiliate, harass, degrade, or arouse or gratify the sexual desire of any person," but the RCC definitions are limited to conduct that is sexual in nature—with the desire to sexually "abuse, humiliate, harass, degrade, arouse, or gratify" any person. This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statute.

Fifth, a vehicle used in furtherance of the RCC patronizing prostitution offense is no longer subject to vehicle impoundment. Current D.C. Code § 22-2724[26] provides that

---

[24] Dinkins, 374 A.2d at 295. The DCCA further stated that "[i]t is sufficient that an understanding emerges that a commercial venture was contemplated when the sexual availability was made apparent." Dinkins, 374 A.2d at 296.

[25] D.C. Code §§ 22-2701.01(5), (6) (stating the terms "sexual act" and "sexual contact" in the prostitution and solicitation statute have the same meaning as in D.C. Code § 22-3001); 22-3001(8), (9) (defining "sexual act" as "(A) The penetration, however slight, of the anus or vulva of another by a penis; (B) Contact between the mouth and the penis, the mouth and the vulva, or the mouth and the anus; or (C) The penetration, however slight, of the anus or vulva by a hand or finger or by any object, with an intent to abuse, humiliate, harass, degrade, or arouse or gratify the sexual desire of any person. (D) The emission of semen is not required for the purposes of subparagraphs (A)-(C) of this paragraph" and "sexual contact" as "the touching with any clothed or unclothed body part or any object, either directly or through the clothing, of the genitalia, anus, groin, breast, inner thigh, or buttocks of any person with an intent to abuse, humiliate, harass, degrade, or arouse or gratify the sexual desire of any person.").

[26] In addition to D.C. Code § 22-2724, D.C. Code § 22-2725 establishes the Anti-Prostitution Vehicle Impoundment Proceeds Fund, which "shall be used solely to fund expenses directly related to the booting, towing, and impoundment of vehicles used in furtherance of prostitution-related activities, in violation of a prostitution-related offense." D.C. Code § 22-2725(b).

when there is probable cause that a vehicle "is being used in furtherance of a prostitution-related offense," including prostitution or solicitation,[27] and there is an arrest,[28] the vehicle "shall" be towed or immobilized and notice provided to the owner and to the person in control of the vehicle.[29] There is no requirement that the owner be involved in the offense or know of the vehicle's use in the offense. The owner is "entitled to a due process hearing regarding the seizure of the vehicle,"[30] but the statute does not specify the timing or the requirements of the hearing. Independent of such a hearing, the vehicle can be repossessed "at any time" by paying several different penalties, fees, and costs,[31] which are either not

---

D.C. Code § 22-2725 states that all "funds collected from the assessment of civil penalties, booting, towing, impoundment, and storage fees pursuant to § 22-2723" will be deposited in the fund. D.C. Code § 22-2725(a). The reference to "§ 22-2723" appears to be an error, however, and the text should instead refer to "§ 22-2724." D.C. Law 16-306, the Omnibus Public Safety Amendment Act of 2006 (Omnibus Act), added D.C. Code §§ 22-2724 and 22-2725 as section 6 and section 7 to a 1935 law "An act for the suppression of prostitution in the District of Columbia." The text of Section 7 in the Omnibus Act, establishing § 22-2725, states "All funds collected from the assessment of civil penalties, booting, towing, impoundment, and storage fees pursuant to section 5." The reference to section 5 appears to be an error. Section 5 of the 1935 "An act for the suppression of prostitution in the District of Columbia" is specific to forfeiture, not impoundment. The text in the Omnibus Act should instead refer to "section 6," which would be D.C. Code § 22-2724, and establishes the impoundment provision and the civil penalties, fees and costs for impoundment.

[27] D.C. Code § 22-2724(b). The current D.C. Code definition of "prostitution-related offenses" includes both engaging in "prostitution" and "solicit[ing] for prostitution" in D.C. Code § 22-2701. D.C. Code § 22-2701(4) (defining "prostitution-related offenses as "those crimes and offenses defined in this subchapter."). The RCC prostitution statutes no longer use the term "prostitution-related offenses."

[28] D.C. Code § 22-2724(b).

[29] D.C. Code § 22-2724(b)(1), (b)(2).

[30] D.C. Code § 22-2701(f) ("An owner, or person duly authorized by an owner, shall be entitled to a due process hearing regarding the seizure of the vehicle.").

[31] D.C. Code § 22-2724(d) ("An owner, or a person duly authorized by an owner, shall, upon proof of same, be permitted to repossess or secure the release of the immobilized or impounded vehicle at any time (subject to administrative availability) by paying to the District government, as directed by the Department of Public Works, an administrative civil penalty of $150, a booting fee, if applicable, all outstanding fines and penalties for infractions for which liability has been admitted, deemed admitted, or sustained after hearing, and all applicable towing and storage costs for impounded vehicles as provided by § 50-2421.09(a)(6). Payment of such fees shall not be admissible as evidence of guilt in any criminal proceeding.").

refundable,[32] or are refundable only in narrow circumstances.[33] Finally, it is unclear whether paying for the immediate release of a vehicle waives the owner's right to a due process hearing.[34] There is no DCCA case law interpreting the current D.C. Code prostitution impoundment provision. In contrast, a vehicle used in furtherance of the RCC patronizing prostitution offense is no longer subject to vehicle impoundment. Mandatory impoundment is a disproportionate penalty for what otherwise is a minor misdemeanor offense or comparatively low-level felony offense, particularly given the penalties, fees, and costs that must be paid for the immediate release of the vehicle with limited or no refund. A vehicle used, or intended to be used, to violate the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute (RCC § 22E-4403) is subject to forfeiture under certain circumstances, however, as opposed to impoundment, because that statute targets "pimps" and owners of prostitution businesses. This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Sixth, the revised patronizing prostitution statute is no longer subject to civil asset forfeiture. Current D.C. Code § 22-2723 makes subject to forfeiture all conveyances that [32] Subsection (d) requires paying "all outstanding fines and penalties for infractions for which liability has been admitted, deemed admitted, or sustained after hearing" and there is no provision for a refund of this money in subsection (e). In addition, the refund of towing and storage costs required in subsection (d) is capped at two days unless a police report indicates that the vehicle was stolen at the time it was seized. D.C. Code § 22-2724(d) ("An owner, or a person duly authorized by an owner, shall, upon proof of same, be permitted to repossess or secure the release of the immobilized or impounded vehicle at any time (subject to administrative availability) by paying . . . an administrative civil penalty of $150, a booting fee, if applicable, all outstanding fines and penalties for infractions for which liability has been admitted, deemed admitted, or sustained after hearing, and all applicable towing and storage costs for impounded vehicles as provided by § 50-2421.09(a)(6)."); § 22-2724(e) ("An owner, or person duly authorized by an owner, shall be entitled to refund of the administrative civil penalty, booting fee, and 2 days' towing and storage costs by showing that the prosecutor dropped the underlying criminal charges (except for instances of nolle prosequi or because the defendant completed a diversion program), that the Superior Court of the District of Columbia dismissed the case after consideration of the merits, or that the case resulted in a finding of not guilty on all prostitution-related charges, or by providing a police report demonstrating that the vehicle was stolen at the time that it was subject to seizure and impoundment. If the vehicle had been stolen at the time of seizure and impoundment, a refund of all towing and storage costs shall be made.").

---

[33] D.C. Code § 22-2724(e) ("An owner, or person duly authorized by an owner, shall be entitled to refund of the administrative civil penalty, booting fee, and 2 days' towing and storage costs by showing that the prosecutor dropped the underlying criminal charges (except for instances of nolle prosequi or because the defendant completed a diversion program), that the Superior Court of the District of Columbia dismissed the case after consideration of the merits, or that the case resulted in a finding of not guilty on all prostitution-related charges, or by providing a police report demonstrating that the vehicle was stolen at the time that it was subject to seizure and impoundment. If the vehicle had been stolen at the time of seizure and impoundment, a refund of all towing and storage costs shall be made.").

[34] Subsection (f) of current D.C. Code § 22-2724 states unequivocally that an owner "shall be entitled to a due process hearing regarding the seizure of the vehicle," D.C. Code § 22-2724(f), but other provisions in the statute suggest that paying for the immediate release of the vehicle waives the hearing. First, the written notice of the seizure of the vehicle must "convey[] . . . the right to obtain immediate return of the vehicle pursuant to subsection (d) of this section, in lieu of requesting a hearing." D.C. Code § 22-2724(b)(2) (emphasis added). The plain language of this provision suggests that an owner can either pay for immediate release or request a hearing, but cannot pay and then have a hearing. In addition, subsection (d) requires that, for the immediate release of the vehicle, the owner pay "all outstanding fines and penalties for infractions for which liability has been admitted, deemed admitted, or sustained after hearing." D.C. Code § 22-2724(d) (emphasis added).

are used, or intended to be used, "to transport, or in any manner to facilitate a violation of a prostitution-related offense,"[35] and all "money, coins, and currency" which are used, or intended to be used "in violation of a prostitution-related offense."[36] Prostitution forfeitures are subject to D.C. Law 20-278,[37] which provides significant due process protections for the owner of property,[38] but still can result in a lengthy or permanent loss of an individual's vehicle or money. There is no DCCA case law interpreting the current D.C. Code § 22-2723. However, under an earlier version of the statute, the DCCA held in One Toyota Pick-Up Truck v. District of Columbia that forfeiture of the truck the defendant used to solicit for prostitution, valued at $15,500, would violate the Excessive Fines Clause of the U.S. Constitution.[39] The DCCA determined that, under controlling Supreme Court case law, the forfeiture would be "grossly disproportionate to the gravity of the defendant's offense."[40] It was the defendant's first conviction for solicitation and the DCCA stated that solicitation for prostitution "particularly for a first conviction, has historically been treated as a minor crime in the District, and was certainly so treated at the time of the defendant's conduct."[41] At the time, a first offense for solicitation for prostitution had a maximum criminal fine of $300 and no incarceration and the defendant actually received a $150 fine.[42] The court concluded that "forfeiting a vehicle valued at $15,500 inflicts a penalty . . . on the order of fifty times the fine authorized . . . and one hundred times the fine actually imposed."[43] Finally, the DCCA stated that while the

[35] D.C. Code § 22-2723(a)(1). The current D.C. Code definition of "prostitution-related offenses" includes both engaging in "prostitution" and "solicit[ing] for prostitution" in D.C. Code § 22-2701. D.C. Code § 22-2701(4) (defining "prostitution-related offenses as "those crimes and offenses defined in this subchapter."). The RCC prostitution statutes no longer use the term "prostitution-related offenses."

[36] D.C. Code § 22-2723(a)(2). The current D.C. Code definition of "prostitution-related offenses" includes both engaging in "prostitution" and "solicit[ing] for prostitution" in D.C. Code § 22-2701. D.C. Code § 22-2701(4) (defining "prostitution-related offenses as "those crimes and offenses defined in this subchapter."). The RCC prostitution statutes no longer use the term "prostitution-related offenses."

[37] D.C. Code § 22-2723(b).

[38] See D.C. Code §§ 41-301 through 41-315.

[39] One 1995 Toyota Pick-Up Truck v. District of Columbia, 718 A.2d 558, 559, 560 (D.C. 1998).

[40] The DCCA applied the test established in United States v. Bajakajian, 524 U.S. 321 (1998), which states that "a punitive forfeiture violates the Excessive Fines Clause if it is grossly disproportional to the gravity of a defendant's offense." One 1995 Toyota Pick-Up Truck, 718 A.2d at 564-65 (quoting United States v. Bajakajian, 524 U.S. 321 (1998)). Prior to engaging in the proportionality analysis, the DCCA first had to establish whether the forfeiture provision in D.C. Code § 22-2723 was a "fine" within the meaning of the Excessive Fines Clause because "the limitation on excessive fines is meant to curb 'the government's power to extract payments, whether in cash or in kind, as punishment for some offense." One 1995 Toyota Pick-Up Truck, 718 A.2d at 560 (internal quotations and citations omitted) (emphasis in the original). The DCCA concluded that forfeiture of the truck pursuant to D.C. Code § 22-2723 was "at least in part," punishment for solicitation and that D.C. Code § 22-2723 "has distinct punitive aspects," an "innocent owner" defense and a direct tie to a violation of law. Id. at 562, 563. Although D.C. Code § 22-2723 has been amended since the version at issue in One 1995 Toyota Pick-Up Truck, it retains an "innocent owner defense" and directly ties the forfeiture to a violation of the prostitution laws, making it likely that the DCCA would reach the same conclusion—that D.C. Code § 22-2723 is subject to the Excessive Fines Clause.

[41] One 1995 Toyota Pick-Up Truck, 718 A.2d at 565.

[42] One 1995 Toyota Pick-Up Truck, 718 A.2d at 565-66.

[43] One 1995 Toyota Pick-Up Truck, 718 A.2d at 566. The court stated that these ratios are "comparable to the seventy-to-one figured considered grossly disproportionate" in the controlling Supreme Court case defendant "fit[] within the class of persons for whom the statute was principally designed, he can not [sic] be made to bear grossly disproportionate responsibility for the problem of prostitution in the District or for the attendant consequences . . . he is, at bottom, one individual who on one occasion attempted to retain a prostitute."[44]

In contrast, a conveyance or money used or intended to be used in furtherance of the RCC patronizing prostitution offense is no longer subject to forfeiture. Forfeiture of a vehicle or money is a disproportionate penalty under the RCC patronizing prostitution statute and may violate the Excessive Fines Clause of the U.S. Constitution as the DCCA held under an earlier version of the statute.[45] A vehicle or money used, or intended to be used, to violate the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute (RCC § 22E-4403) is subject to forfeiture under RCC § 22E-4404 because that statute targets "pimps" and owners of prostitution businesses. This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Seventh, the revised patronizing prostitution statute deletes the prostitution nuisance provisions in current D.C. Code §§ 22-2713 through 22-2720 ("current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions") and instead relies on the existing nuisance provisions in D.C. Code §§ 42-3101 through 42-3114 ("Title 42 nuisance provisions."). The current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions apply to "any building, erection, or place used for the purpose of lewdness, assignation, or prostitution,"[46] or a nuisance that is established "in a criminal proceeding."[47] The scope of "in a criminal proceeding" is unclear under

---

United States v. Bajakajian, 524 U.S. 321 (1998) and are "also consistent with excessiveness determinations in of other federal courts." One 1995 Toyota Pick-Up Truck, 718 A.2d at 566 (internal citations omitted).

[44] One 1995 Toyota Pick-Up Truck, 718 A.2d at 566. The DCCA further noted that "the forfeiture of the pick-up truck cannot fairly be said to compensate the District for any loss associated with Esparza's crime, one justification commonly advanced for the in rem action. . . .And although no findings have been made on the impact on Esparza and his family of the forfeiture of the truck, the government does not dispute Esparza's assertions that the vehicle played a significant role in the maintenance of his livelihood. Id. (internal citations omitted).

[45] The forfeiture statute has been amended since the version at issue in the 1998 One 1995 Toyota Pick-Up Truck case, but the amendments do not address the basis for the DCCA's ruling in that case that forfeiture of a vehicle valued at $15,500 was grossly disproportionate when the defendant received at $150 fine for a first conviction of solicitation for prostitution. The penalties for soliciting for prostitution have increased since the 1998 One 1995 Toyota Pick-Up Truck case, but it is unclear whether they would be significant enough for forfeiture of a vehicle to survive a constitutional challenge. The DCCA has not interpreted the current forfeiture statute under the increased prostitution or solicitation penalties.

[46] D.C. Code § 22-2713(a) ("Whoever shall erect, establish, continue, maintain, use, own, occupy, or release any building, erection, or place used for the purpose of lewdness, assignation, or prostitution in the District of Columbia is guilty of a nuisance, and the building, erection, or place, or the ground itself in or upon which such lewdness, assignation, or prostitution is conducted, permitted, or carried on, continued, or exists, and the furniture, fixtures, musical instruments, and contents are also declared a nuisance, and shall be enjoined and abated as hereinafter provided.").

[47] D.C. Code § 22-2717 ("If the existence of the nuisance be established in an action as provided in §§ 22-2713 to 22-2720, or in a criminal proceeding, an order of abatement shall be entered as a part of the judgment in the case which order shall direct the removal from the building or place of all fixtures, furniture, musical instruments, or movable property used in conducting the nuisance, and shall direct the sale thereof in the manner provided for the sale of chattels under execution, and the effectual closing of the building or place against its use for any purpose, and so keeping it closed for a period of 1 year, unless current District law.[48] Violating a court order under the current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions is punishable by no less than three months and no more than six months sooner released. If any person shall break and enter or use a building, erection, or place so directed to be closed such person shall be punished as for contempt, as provided in § 22-2716.").

---

[48] D.C. Code § 22-2717 requires that an abatement order be entered as part of the judgment if "the existence of the nuisance be established in an action as provided in §§ 22-2713 to 22-2720, or in a criminal proceeding." A broad reading of "in a criminal proceeding" is that an order of abatement is required whenever a nuisance is established as part of any criminal proceeding. The DCCA has stated that "when a defendant has been found guilty of maintaining a bawdy or disorderly house in violation of [D.C. Code § 22-2722], the house in question must be deemed to be a nuisance per se which the trial court is compelled to abate." Raleigh v. United States, 351 A.2d 510, 514 (D.C. 1976). However, the DCCA has not addressed whether "in a criminal proceeding" extends to any criminal proceeding, or is limited to D.C. Code § 22-2722, or more generally to property used for prostitution.

In United States v. Wade, 152 F.3d 969, 973 (D.C. Cir. 1998), the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia rejected a broad interpretation of D.C. Code § 22-2717. The D.C. Circuit's interpretation of a D.C. Code statute is not binding on the DCCA, but may be persuasive authority for the DCCA. See, e.g., Tyler v. United States, 705 A.2d 270, 277 n.14 (D.C. 1997) ("even though we may find persuasive a federal court's interpretation of District of Columbia or of similar federal law . . ."). In United States v. Wade, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia vacated an order of abatement entered pursuant to D.C. Code § 22-2717 for a conviction of keeping a "disorderly house" under D.C. Code § 22-2722. United States v. Wade, 152 F.3d 969, 970, 973 (D.C. Cir. 1998). D.C. Code § 22-2722 prohibits "keeping a bawdy or disorderly house." Under DCCA case law, a "bawdy house" used for prostitution is a type of "disorderly house," but a "disorderly house" can extend beyond a "bawdy house" to encompass "activities on the premises that either disturb the public or constitute a nuisance per se." Harris v. United States, 315 A.2d 569, 573 (D.C. 1974) (footnote omitted). The property in Wade was used for selling drugs. Wade, 152 F.3d at 970.

On appeal, the defendants argued that D.C. Code § 22-2717 only applies to a "disorderly house" that is used for "lewdness, assignation, or prostitution" as required by the nuisance provision in D.C. Code § 22-2713. Wade, 152 F.3d at 971. The government argued that a conviction for keeping any disorderly house under D.C. Code § 22-2722, or a conviction of any crime where there is proof that the defendant engaged in conduct constituting a nuisance per se, requires an order of abatement under D.C. Code § 22-2717. Id. at 971, 972.

The D.C. Circuit reviewed the enactment history of the prostitution nuisance provisions in D.C. Code §§ 22-2713 through 22-2717 and the disorderly house statute in 22-2722, noting that they were enacted by Congress at different times in different bills. Wade, 152 F.3d at 971, 971-972. The court noted that D.C. Code § 22-2713 requires that the property be used for the purpose of "lewdness, assignation, or prostitution," and D.C. Code § 22-2717 refers to the existence of "the nuisance." Id. at 971-72 (emphasis in original). The court concluded that "the" refers back to the requirements of "lewdness, assignation, or prostitution" in D.C. Code § 22-2713 and that D.C. Code § 22-2717 "concerns only those nuisances defined in" D.C. Code § 22-2713. Id. at 972. The court noted that while a conviction for keeping a "bawdy house" under D.C. Code § 22-2722 would "clearly entail the type of nuisance described in [D.C. Code § 22-2713], the keeping of a disorderly house might or might not, depending on the nature of the activity conducted in it." Id. The court stated that "[b]ecause the Government failed to show that [the property] was 'used for the purpose of lewdness, assignation, or prostitution," the [defendants'] plea of guilty to keeping a disorderly house is insufficient to permit the application of [D.C. Code § 22-2717]." Id. The court acknowledged that the DCCA in Raleigh v. United States had stated that "when a defendant has been found guilty of maintaining a bawdy or disorderly house in violation of 22-2722, the house in question must be deemed to be a nuisance per se which the trial court is compelled to abate." Id. at 973 (quoting Raleigh v. United States, 351 A.2d 510, 514 (D.C. 1976)). However, the court noted that the property at issue in Raleigh was used for "lewdness, assignation, or prostitution," and, furthermore, that the DCCA "did not have before it the question of whether a disorderly house not used for such purposes is the kind of nuisance referred to in [D.C. Code § 22-2717]." Id. The court stated that "we conclude that, if confronted with this question, the [DCCA] would hold that conviction for keeping a disorderly house under [D.C. Code § 22-imprisonment.[49] The current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions have not been substantively amended since they were enacted in 1914, whereas the Title 42 nuisance provisions were enacted in 1999.[50] The Title 42 nuisance provisions were originally limited to drug-related nuisances, but were amended in 2006 to include prostitution-related nuisances,[51] and again in 2010 to include firearm-related nuisances.[52] It is unclear how the two sets of nuisance provisions relate, and there is no DCCA case law[53] or legislative

---

2722] will require an abatement order pursuant to [D.C. Code § 22-2717] only if that house was used, at least in part, for the purposes described in [D.C. Code § 22-2713]." Id.

[49] D.C. Code §§ 22-2716 (A party found guilty of contempt, under the provisions of this section, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $200 and not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01 or by imprisonment in the District Jail not less than three nor more than 6 months or by both fine and imprisonment."); 22-2717 ("If any person shall break and enter or use a building, erection, or place so directed to be closed such person shall be punished as for contempt, as provided in § 22-2716.").

[50] "Drug–Related Nuisance Abatement Act of 1998," 1998 District of Columbia Laws 12-194 (Act 12–470).

[51] "Nuisance Abatement Reform Amendment Act of 2006," 2006 District of Columbia Laws 16-81 (Act 16–267).

[52] "Community Impact Statement Amendment Act of 2010," 2010 District of Columbia Laws 18-259 (Act 18-446).

[53] Both the current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions and the current Title 42 nuisance provisions were used in a relatively recent United States District Court for the District of Columbia case. The government sought equitable relief under D.C. Code §§ 22-2713 through 22-2720 and D.C. Code §§ 42-3101 et seq. United States v. Prop. Identified as 1923 Rhode Island Ave. Ne., Washington, D.C., 522 F. Supp. 2d 204, 205 (D.D.C. 2007). The court did not discuss the apparent overlap between the two sets of nuisance provisions. The court noted that D.C. Code § 22-2714 "authorizes a special summary action in equity to abate and enjoin" a nuisance, and that D.C. Code § 42-3102 "authorizes an action to abate, enjoin, and prevent" a prostitution-related nuisance. 1923 Rhode Island Ave. Ne., 522 F. Supp. 2d at 208. The U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia's interpretation of a D.C. Code statute is not binding on the DCCA, but may be persuasive authority for the DCCA. See, e.g., Tyler v. United States, 705 A.2d 270, 277 n.14 (D.C. 1997) ("even though we may find persuasive a federal court's interpretation of District of Columbia or of similar federal law . . .").

It should be noted that the "special summary action in equity to abate and enjoin" a nuisance in D.C. Code § 22-2714 is limited to a preliminary injunction. D.C. Code § 22-2714 ("In such action [to perpetually enjoin a nuisance under D.C. Code § 22-2713], the court, or a judge in vacation, shall, upon the presentation of a petition therefor alleging that the nuisance complained of exists, allow a temporary writ of injunction, without bond, if it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the court or judge by evidence in the form of affidavits, depositions, oral testimony, or otherwise, as the complainant may elect, unless the court or judge by previous order shall have directed the form and manner in which it shall be presented."). The preliminary injunction is automatically granted if the defendant moves to continue the hearing, and, in that sense, may be considered a special summary action. D.C. Code § 22-2714 ("Three days notice, in writing, shall be given the defendant of the hearing of the application, and if then continued at his instance the writ as prayed shall be granted as a matter of course."). D.C. Code § 22-2715 requires a trial for a permanent injunction and order of abatement under D.C. Code § 22-2717.

D.C. Code § 42-3104 allows for a temporary injunction against a prostitution-related nuisance, but does not appear to allow a temporary injunction to be entered summarily if the defendant moves for a continuance. D.C. Code § 42-3104 ("(a) Upon the filing of a complaint to abate the drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance, the court shall hold a hearing on the motion for a preliminary injunction, within 10 business days of the filing of such action. If it appears, by affidavit or otherwise, that there is a substantial likelihood that the plaintiff will be able to prove at trial that a drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance exists, the court may enter an order preliminarily enjoining the drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance and granting such other relief as the court may deem appropriate, including those remedies provided in § 42-3110. A plaintiff need not prove irreparable harm to obtain a preliminary injunction. Where appropriate, the court may order a trial of the action on the merits to be advanced and consolidated history on this issue. In contrast, the revised patronizing prostitution statute deletes the prostitution nuisance provisions in current D.C. Code §§ 22-2713 through 22-2720 and instead relies on the Title 42 nuisance provisions. To the extent that the current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions are used instead of the Title 42 nuisance provisions, this revision results in several changes to current District law.

First, the Title 42 nuisance provisions[54] do not apply to real property that is used for "lewdness" or "assignation" like the current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions do.[55] To the extent that the current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions apply to private, consensual sexual conduct that is not prostitution, they may infringe on constitutional rights.[56] Second, the Title 42 nuisance provisions apply to any "real property"[57] "used" or "intended to be used" for prostitution,[58] whereas current D.C. Code § 22-2713 is limited to any "building, erection, or place used for the purpose of prostitution."[59] Third, the Title 42 nuisance provisions do not extend to a prostitution-with the hearing on the motion for preliminary injunction. (b) This section shall not be construed to prohibit the application for or the granting of a temporary restraining order, or other equitable relief otherwise provided by law.").

---

[54] The Title 42 nuisance provisions apply to any "real property, in whole or part, used, or intended to be used, to facilitate prostitution . . . that has an adverse impact on the community," and any "real property, in whole or in part, used or intended to be used to facilitate any violation of §§ 22-2701, 22-2703, and 22-2723, § 22-2701.01, § 22-2704, §§ 22-2705 to 22-2712, and § 22-2722." D.C. Code § 42-3101(5)(B), (5)(C).

[55] The current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions apply to any "building, erection, or place used for the purposes of lewdness, assignation, or prostitution." D.C. Code § 22-2713. In contrast, the Title 42 nuisance provisions apply to any "real property, in whole or part, used, or intended to be used, to facilitate prostitution . . . that has an adverse impact on the community," and any "real property, in whole or in part, used or intended to be used to facilitate any violation of §§ 22-2701, 22-2703, and 22-2723, § 22-2701.01, § 22-2704, §§ 22-2705 to 22-2712, and § 22-2722." D.C. Code § 42-3101(5)(B), (5)(C). D.C. Code § 22-2710 and D.C. Code § 22-2711 prohibit procuring an individual for the purposes of "debauchery" or "other immoral" purposes, which may overlap with "lewdness" or "assignation." However, as is discussed elsewhere in this commentary, the revised version of these offenses in the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute (RCC § 22E-4403) are limited to procuring for purposes of "prostitution."

[56] "Lewdness" and "assignation" appear to extend the current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions to property that is used for private, consensual sexual conduct that is not prostitution. Although the terms are not statutorily defined, the DCCA has stated that "lewdness" "has been defined by the Supreme Court as 'that form of immorality which has relation to sexual impurity.'" Riley v. United States, 298 A.2d 228, 230 (D.C. 1972). There is no DCCA case law explaining the meaning of "assignation," but Black's Law Dictionary defines it as "[a]n appointment of a time and place to meet secretly, esp. for engaging in illicit sex." Assignation, Black's Law Dictionary (11th ed. 2019). The United States Supreme Court has made clear that public morality cannot justify a law that regulates private sexual conduct that does not relate to prostitution, potential for injury or coercion, or public conduct. See Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558 (2003) (concerning the right to homosexual intercourse and other nonprocreative sexual activity); Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965) (concerning marital privacy and contraceptives).

[57] The Title 42 nuisance provisions define "property" as "tangible real property, or any interest in real property, including an interest in any leasehold, license or real estate, such as any house, apartment building, condominium, cooperative, office building, storage, restaurant, tavern, nightclub, warehouse, park, median, and the land extending to the boundaries of the lot upon which such structure is situated, and anything growing on, affixed to, or found on the land."

[58] The Title 42 nuisance provisions will require conforming amendments to refer to the revised prostitution offenses in RCC §§ 22E-4401 through 22E-4403, which will affect the range of real property subject to the Title 42 nuisance provisions.

[59] D.C. Code § 22-2713.

related nuisance that is established in a "criminal proceeding" as in current D.C. Code § 22-2720. Fourth, the Title 42 nuisance provisions do not punish the violation of a court order pertaining to a prostitution-related nuisance by three to six months' imprisonment as do the current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions.[60] Fifth, while both sets of nuisance provisions provide for a preliminary injunction,[61] a permanent injunction and order of abatement,[62] and a procedure for vacating an order of abatement,[63] the procedural

[60] D.C. Code §§ 22-2716 (A party found guilty of contempt, under the provisions of this section, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $200 and not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01 or by imprisonment in the District Jail not less than three nor more than 6 months or by both fine and imprisonment."); 22-2717 ("If any person shall break and enter or use a building, erection, or place so directed to be closed such person shall be punished as for contempt, as provided in § 22-2716."). A violation of a court order "issued under" the Title 42 nuisance provisions is "punishable as a contempt of court." D.C. Code § 42-3112(a).

[61] D.C. Code §§ 22-2714 (". . . In such action the court, or a judge in vacation, shall, upon the presentation of a petition therefor alleging that the nuisance complained of exists, allow a temporary writ of injunction, without bond, if it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the court or judge by evidence in the form of affidavits, depositions, oral testimony, or otherwise, as the complainant may elect, unless the court or judge by previous order shall have directed the form and manner in which it shall be presented. Three days notice, in writing, shall be given the defendant of the hearing of the application, and if then continued at his instance the writ as prayed shall be granted as a matter of course . . ."); 42-3104(a) ("Upon the filing of a complaint to abate the drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance, the court shall hold a hearing on the motion for a preliminary injunction, within 10 business days of the filing of such action. If it appears, by affidavit or otherwise, that there is a substantial likelihood that the plaintiff will be able to prove at trial that a drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance exists, the court may enter an order preliminarily enjoining the drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance and granting such other relief as the court may deem appropriate, including those remedies provided in § 42-3110. . . .").

[62] D.C. Code §§ 22-2717 ("If the existence of the nuisance be established in an action as provided in §§ 22-2713 to 22-2720, or in a criminal proceeding, an order of abatement shall be entered as a part of the judgment in the case which order shall direct the removal from the building or place of all fixtures, furniture, musical instruments, or movable property used in conducting the nuisance, and shall direct the sale thereof in the manner provided for the sale of chattels under execution, and the effectual closing of the building or place against its use for any purpose, and so keeping it closed for a period of 1 year, unless sooner released. If any person shall break and enter or use a building, erection, or place so directed to be closed such person shall be punished as for contempt, as provided in § 22-2716."); 42-3110(a) ("If the existence of a drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance is found, the court shall enter an order permanently enjoining, abating, and preventing the continuance or recurrence of the nuisance. In order to effectuate fully the equitable remedy of abatement, such order may include damages as provided in § 42-3111. The court may grant declaratory relief or any other relief deemed necessary to accomplish the purposes of the judgment. The court may retain jurisdiction of the case for the purpose of enforcing its orders. A drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance is a nuisance per se requiring abatement as provided under subsection (b) of this section.").

[63] D.C. Code §§ 22-2719 ("If the owner appears and pays all costs of the proceeding and files a bond, with sureties to be approved by the clerk, in the full value of the property, to be ascertained by the court or, in vacation, by the Collector of Taxes of the District of Columbia, conditioned that such owner will immediately abate said nuisance and prevent the same from being established or kept within a period of 1 year thereafter, the court, or, in vacation, the judge, may, if satisfied of such owner's good faith, order the premises closed under the order of abatement to be delivered to said owner and said order of abatement canceled so far as the same may relate to said property; and if the proceeding be an action in equity and said bond be given and costs therein paid before judgment and order of abatement, the action shall be thereby abated as to said building only. The release of the property under the provisions of this section shall not release it from judgment, lien, penalty, or liability to which it may be subject by law."); 42-3112(c) ("Upon motion, the court may vacate an order or judgment of abatement if the owner of the property satisfies the court that the drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance has been abated for 90 days prior requirements vary in the Title 42 nuisance provisions as compared to the current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions,[64] as do the types of equitable relief.[65] This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Eighth, the general RCC deferred disposition provision in RCC § 22E-602 makes several changes to the deferred disposition provision for prostitution or solicitation in current D.C. Code § 22-2703. Current D.C. Code § 22-2703 states that the "court may impose conditions upon any person found guilty under § 22-2701, and so long as such person shall comply therewith to the satisfaction of the court the imposition or execution of sentence may be suspended for such period as the court may direct."[66] The statute specifies examples of conditions that the court may impose on the defendant, such as "an order to stay away from the area within which the offense or offenses occurred."[67] D.C. Code § 22-2703 was enacted in 1914. Despite substantive revisions to the current D.C. Code prostitution or solicitation statute (D.C. Code § 22-2701) in 2007, 2009, and 2015, D.C. Code § 22-2703 has not been substantively amended since 1996.[68] In contrast, the

---

to the motion, corrects all housing code and health code violations on the property, and deposits a bond in an amount to be determined by the court, which shall be in an amount reasonably calculated to ensure continued abatement of the nuisance. Any bond posted under this subsection shall be forfeited immediately if the drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance recurs during the 2-year period following the date on which an order under this section is entered. At the close of 2 years following the date on which an order under this section is entered, the bond shall be returned.").

[64] For example, the Title 42 nuisance provisions require that the plaintiff must establish the existence of a nuisance by a preponderance of the evidence. D.C. Code § 42-3108 ("The plaintiff must establish that a drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance exists by a preponderance of the evidence. Once a reasonable attempt at notice is made pursuant to § 42-3103, the owner of the property shall be presumed to have knowledge of the drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance. A plaintiff is not required to make any further showing that the owner knew, or should have known, of the drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance to obtain relief under § 42-3110 or § 42-3111."). There is no such requirement specified in the current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions. D.C. Code §§ 22-2713 through 22-2720.

[65] For example, the current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions specifically require the removal and sale of all "fixtures, furniture, musical instruments, or movable property used in conducting the nuisance." D.C. Code § 22-2717 ("an order of abatement shall be entered as a part of the judgment in the case which order shall direct the removal from the building or place of all fixtures, furniture, musical instruments, or movable property used in conducting the nuisance, and shall direct the sale thereof in the manner provided for the sale of chattels under execution . . . ."). The Title 42 nuisance provisions do not specifically allow for such a sale, but do grant the court broad powers to order equitable relief that may extend to such a sale. D.C. Code § 42-3110(b) ("Any order issued under this section may include the following relief: (1) Assessment of reasonable attorney fees and costs to the prevailing party; (2) Ordering the owner to make repairs upon the property; (3) Ordering the owner to make reasonable expenditures upon the property, including the installation of secure locks, hiring private security personnel, increasing lighting in common areas, and using videotaped surveillance of the property and adjacent alleys, sidewalks, or parking lots; (4) Ordering all rental income from the property to be placed in an escrow account with the court for up to 90 days or until the drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance is abated; (5) Ordering all rental income for the property transferred to a trustee, to be appointed by the court, who shall be empowered to use the rental income to make reasonable expenditures related to the property in order to abate the drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance; (6) Ordering the property vacated, sealed, or demolished; or (7) Any other remedy which the court, in its discretion, deems appropriate.").

[66] D.C. Code § 22-2703.

[67] D.C. Code § 22-2703.

[68] The second sentence of D.C. Code § 22-2703, specifying examples of conditions that the court may impose on the defendant, was added in 1996. Safe Streets Anti–Prostitution Amendment Act of 1996, 1996 District of Columbia Laws 11-130 (Act 11–237).

RCC general deferred disposition provision in RCC § 22E-602 makes several changes to the deferred disposition provision for prostitution or solicitation in current D.C. Code § 22-2703.

First, the revised deferred disposition provision no longer codifies examples of conditions that the court may impose on the defendant. This language is unnecessary because the revised provision requires "reasonable conditions" and does not restrict the conditions the court may impose. Second, the revised provision deletes this language from D.C. Code § 22-2703: "The Department of Human Services of the District of Columbia, the Women's Bureau of the Police Department, and the probation officers of the court are authorized and directed to perform such duties as may be directed by the court in effectuating compliance with the conditions so imposed upon any defendant."[69] The current D.C. Code deferred disposition provision for possession of a controlled substance does not have such a provision,[70] and the statutory grant of authority to probation officers appears unnecessary. Similarly, it is unclear whether the Department of Human Services of the District of Columbia needs such a statutory grant of authority, and the Women's Bureau of the Police Department no longer exists. Third, the revised provision requires the consent of the defendant and limits the probation period to a maximum of one year, instead of "for such period as the court may direct"[71] in current D.C. Code § 22-2703. Fourth, the revised provision establishes that discharge or dismissal of the charge is not a conviction "for purposes of disqualifications or disabilities imposed by law," including the imposition of recidivist penalties for prior misdemeanor convictions under RCC § 22E-606 or other similar provisions, consistent with the deferred disposition for possession of a controlled substance in the current D.C. Code[72] and the RCC.[73] Fifth, after discharge of the proceedings, the revised provision provides for sealing the publicly available records of the arrest and related court proceedings under D.C. Code § 16–803. These changes improve the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Ninth, the patronizing prostitution statute authorizes enhanced penalties if the accused is reckless as to the fact that the person patronized is under 18 years of age, or if in fact, the person patronized is under 12 years of age. The current D.C. prostitution or solicitation statute does not enhance penalties based on the age of the complainant.[74] However, the current D.C. Code pandering statute[75] and the current D.C. Code procuring

[69] D.C. Code § 22-2703.
[70] D.C. Code § 48-904.01(e).
[71] D.C. Code § 22-2703 ("The court may impose conditions upon any person found guilty under § 22-2701, and so long as such person shall comply therewith to the satisfaction of the court the imposition or execution of sentence may be suspended for such period as the court may direct; and the court may at or before the expiration of such period remand such sentence or cause it to be executed."). Under the revised deferred disposition provision, the court must have the consent of the defendant to defer imposition or execution of sentence, and the period of probation is limited to one year.
[72] D.C. Code § 48-904.01(e).
[73] RCC § 48-904.01a(g).
[74] D.C. Code § 22-2701(b).
[75] D.C. Code § 22-2705(c)(1), (c)(2) (pandering statute authorizing a maximum penalty of five years imprisonment, unless the person trafficked is under the age of 18 years, in which case the maximum penalty is 20 years).

for prostitution statute[76] have enhanced penalties when the trafficked person is under the age of 18 years. The penalty enhancements do not specify any culpable mental states for the age of the complainant and there is no DCCA case law on this issue. In contrast, the RCC patronizing prostitution statute authorizes a penalty increase of one class, consistent with other enhanced penalties in the RCC, if the accused is reckless as to the fact that the complainant is under 18 years of age or, if, in fact the person patronized is under the age of 12 years. Recklessness as to under the age of 18 years and strict liability for under the age of 12 years is consistent with other age-based penalty enhancements in the RCC sex offenses and the RCC Chapter 16 human trafficking offenses. However, the patronizing prostitution penalty enhancement is intended to be used in the rare instance when a more serious RCC sex offense, such as sexual abuse of a minor (RCC § 22E-1302), or RCC Chapter 16 human trafficking offense does not apply.[77] This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised statute.

Tenth, the patronizing prostitution statute authorizes enhanced penalties if the actor is reckless as to the fact that the person patronized is incapacitated, impaired, or incapable of communicating willingness or unwillingness to engage in a sexual act or sexual contact. The current D.C. prostitution or solicitation statute does not enhance penalties based on whether the person patronized is incapacitated or impaired.[78] In contrast, the RCC patronizing prostitution statute authorizes a penalty increase of one class, consistent with other enhanced penalties in the RCC, if the accused is reckless as to the fact that the person patronized is incapacitated, impaired, or incapable of communicating willingness or unwillingness to engage in a sexual act or sexual contact. These requirements are consistent with the requirements in second degree and fourth degree of the RCC sexual assault statute, as well as a penalty enhancement in the RCC Chapter 16 human trafficking offenses. However, the patronizing prostitution penalty enhancement is intended to be used when a more serious RCC sex offense, such as sexual assault (RCC § 22E-1301), or RCC Chapter 16 human trafficking offense does not apply. This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised statute.

Beyond these ten changes to current District law, four other aspects of the revised statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised patronizing prostitution statute clarifies that payment can be given to or promised to "another person." The current D.C. Code prostitution or solicitation statute prohibits "engag[ing] in prostitution"[79] or "solicit[ing] for prostitution"[80] and defines "prostitution," in relevant part, as "a sexual act or sexual [76] D.C. Code § 22-2707(b)(1), (c)(2) (procuring statute prohibiting receiving anything of value for or on account of arranging for prostitution and authorizing a maximum penalty of five years imprisonment, unless the person procured is under the age of 18 years, in which case the maximum penalty is 20 years).

[77] Because the patronizing prostitution statute includes more inchoate conduct (e.g., efforts to persuade) with a "knowingly" culpable mental state, there may be rare instances where patronizing prostitution is chargeable but attempted sexual abuse of a minor or human trafficking offenses are not chargeable due to the heightened mental state requirements for attempt liability.
[78] D.C. Code § 22-2701(b).
[79] D.C. Code § 22-2701(a).
[80] D.C. Code § 22-2701(a).

contact with another person in exchange for giving . . . anything of value."[81] It is unclear whether the payment must be given to the person engaging in or soliciting for sexual activity for payment or if a third party, such as the owner of a prostitution business, would be sufficient. There is no DCCA case law on this issue. Resolving this ambiguity, the revised patronizing prostitution statute specifies "another person." This language clarifies that the recipient or promised recipient of payment can either be the individual engaging in, agreeing to, or soliciting for the sexual activity for payment or a third party, as long as the payment is "in exchange" for the sexual activity. This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised statute and removes a possible gap in liability.

Second, a promise to give anything of value is sufficient for liability in the revised patronizing prostitution statute. The current D.C. Code prostitution or solicitation statute prohibits "engag[ing] in prostitution"[82] or "solicit[ing] for prostitution"[83] and defines "prostitution," in relevant part, as "a sexual act or sexual contact with another person in exchange for giving . . . anything of value."[84] It is unclear whether "giving anything of value" requires that a person actually give anything of value, or if a promise to give anything of value in the future is sufficient. There is no DCCA case law on this issue. Resolving this ambiguity, the revised patronizing prostitution statute retains the requirement of giving anything of value, but requires an agreement to engage in sexual activity in paragraphs (a)(1) and (a)(2), and, per the explanatory note to the commentary above, it is sufficient if anything of value is promised as part of this agreement. In paragraph (a)(1), the actor must engage in sexual activity in exchange for "giving" another person anything of value pursuant to a prior agreement. In paragraph (a)(2), the actor must agree to give another person anything of value "in exchange" for sexual activity. In the revised statute the phrase "in exchange for" specifies the transactional nature of the sexual act or sexual contact and is satisfied if the actor gives anything of value to any person or if anything of value was promised to any person.[85] This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised statutes and removes a possible gap in liability.

Third, the revised patronizing prostitution statute requires a "knowingly" culpable mental state for the prohibited conduct—engages in or solicits for sexual activity, in exchange for giving another person anything of value, or agrees to give anything of value in exchange for sexual activity. The current D.C. Code prostitution or solicitation statute does not specify any culpable mental states, and there is no DCCA case law on this issue.[86]

---

[81] D.C. Code § 22-2701.01(3).
[82] D.C. Code § 22-2701(a).
[83] D.C. Code § 22-2701(a).
[84] D.C. Code § 22-2701.01(3).
[85] As is noted in the explanatory note, there is overlap between paragraph (a)(1) and paragraph (a)(2). In paragraph (a)(1), if anything of value is promised to another person as part of a prior agreement, this conduct also falls under paragraph (a)(2)—agreeing, explicitly or implicitly, to give anything of value to another person in exchange for any person engaging in or submitting to sexual activity.
[86] Due to the statutory definition of "sexual contact" (D.C. Code § 22-3001(9)), prostitution based on a "sexual contact" requires that the prostitute have an "intent to abuse, humiliate, harass, degrade, or arouse or gratify the sexual desire of any person." In the context of the District's current D.C. Code sexual abuse statutes, the DCCA has sustained a conviction for second degree child sexual abuse when the jury instructions required that the actor "knowingly" touched the complainant and erroneously omitted the additional intent requirement. Green v. United States, 948 A.2d 554, 558, 561 (D.C. 2008) (affirming appellant's conviction for second degree child sexual abuse when the jury instructions required that the

Resolving this ambiguity, the revised patronizing prostitution statute requires a "knowingly" culpable mental state for the prohibited conduct—engages in or solicits for sexual activity, in exchange for giving another person anything of value, or agrees to give anything of value in exchange for sexual activity. Requiring, at a minimum, a knowing culpable mental state for the elements of an offense that make otherwise legal conduct illegal is a generally accepted legal principle.[87] This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised statute.

Fourth, the revised patronizing prostitution statute does not require that the sexual activity be "with another person." The current D.C. Code prostitution or solicitation statute prohibits "engag[ing] in prostitution or . . . solicit[ing] for prostitution"[88] and defines "prostitution" as a "sexual act or contact with another person in return for giving or receiving anything of value."[89] The current D.C. Code[90] and RCC[91] definitions of "sexual act" and "sexual contact" include masturbation. However, the current statute's "with another person" requirement may narrow the offense to exclude a patron engaging in or soliciting to engage in masturbation because masturbation is not "with another person." Alternatively, the current prostitution or solicitation offense could be interpreted to include a patron engaging in or soliciting to engage in masturbation "with another person," if the latter phrase is construed to mean "for another person to watch." To resolve this ambiguity, the revised statute does not require that the sexual activity be "with another person." Masturbation in exchange for anything of value is within the scope of the revised statute. This change improves the clarity, and may improve the proportionality, of the revised statutes.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

First, the revised patronizing prostitution statute makes "agrees" to give anything of value in exchange for sexual activity a discrete basis of liability in paragraph (a)(2), appellant "knowingly" touched the complainant and omitted the "intent to abuse, humiliate, harass, degrade, or arouse or gratify the sexual desire of any person" requirement because "no rational jury could have found that appellant touched [the complainants] in a way consistent with the trial court's jury instruction . . . without also finding the requisite intent.").

---

[87] Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2010, 192 L.Ed.2d 1 (2015).

[88] D.C. Code § 22-2701(a).

[89] D.C. Code § 22-2701.01(3).

[90] D.C. Code §§ 22-2701.01(5), (6) (adopting the definition of "sexual act" in D.C. Code § 22-3001(8) and the definition of "sexual contact" in D.C. Code § 22-3001(9) for the prostitution or solicitation statute in D.C. Code § 22-2701); 22-3001(8) (defining "sexual act" as "(A) The penetration, however slight, of the anus or vulva of another by a penis; (B) Contact between the mouth and the penis, the mouth and the vulva, or the mouth and the anus; or (C) The penetration, however slight, of the anus or vulva by a hand or finger or by any object, with an intent to abuse, humiliate, harass, degrade, or arouse or gratify the sexual desire of any person. (D) The emission of semen is not required for the purposes of subparagraphs (A)-(C) of this paragraph."); 22-3001(9) (defining "sexual contact" as "the touching with any clothed or unclothed body part or any object, either directly or through the clothing, of the genitalia, anus, groin, breast, inner thigh, or buttocks of any person with an intent to abuse, humiliate, harass, degrade, or arouse or gratify the sexual desire of any person.").

[91] RCC § 22E-701.

separate from soliciting for prostitution in paragraph (a)(3). The current D.C. Code prostitution or solicitation statute prohibits "solicit[ing] for prostitution"[92] and the current D.C. Code definition of "solicit for prostitution" is, in relevant part, "to invite, entice, offer, persuade, or agree to engage in prostitution."[93] Paragraph (a)(3) of the revised statute encompasses liability for "invite," "entice," "offer," or "persuade" to engage in prostitution using language consistent with the general RCC solicitation statute (RCC § 22E-302). Paragraph (a)(2) separately and clearly addresses an agreement to engage in prostitution. This change clarifies the revised statute.

Second, the revised patronizing prostitution statute specifies that an agreement can be either explicit or implicit. The current D.C. Code prostitution or solicitation statute prohibits "engag[ing] in prostitution or . . . solicit[ing] for prostitution"[94] and defines "prostitution" as a "sexual act or contact with another person in return for giving or receiving anything of value."[95] The language "in return for" implies the requirement of an agreement, either explicit or implicit, but there is no DCCA case law interpreting this requirement. An older version of the statute made it unlawful to "invite, entice, persuade, or to address for the purpose of inviting, enticing, or persuading"[96] for the purpose of prostitution and DCCA case law interpreting this older statute appears to have extended to both an explicit or implicit agreement.[97] More recent case law has also looked beyond spoken words to the surrounding circumstances to assess whether there is an agreement to prostitution.[98] This change improves the clarity of the revised statutes.

Third, the revised patronizing prostitution statute uses "in exchange" for anything of value instead of "in return" for anything of value. The current D.C. Code definition of "prostitution" is a "sexual act or contact with another person in return for giving or receiving anything of value."[99] "In exchange" emphasizes the transactional nature of the sexual act or sexual contact, regardless of when the sexual activity occurs, and is not intended to substantively change current District law.

Fourth, the revised patronizing prostitution statute includes an actor who "engages in or submits to" sexual activity (paragraph (a)(1)), agrees to give anything of value in exchange for a person "engaging in or submitting to" sexual activity, (paragraph (a)(2)), and solicits any person to "engage in or submit to" sexual activity (paragraph (a)(3)). The current D.C. Code prostitution or solicitation statute prohibits "engag[ing] in prostitution or . . . solicit[ing] for prostitution"[100] and defines "prostitution" as a "sexual

---

[92] D.C. Code § 22-2701(a).
[93] D.C. Code § 22-2701.01(7).
[94] D.C. Code § 22-2701(a).
[95] D.C. Code § 22-2701.01(3).
[96] D.C. Code § 22-2701 (1973).
[97] See, e.g., Dinkins v. United States, 374 A.2d 292, 296 (D.C. 1977) ("In the final analysis, it is a question of fact whether the acts and words of the defendant in general, viewed in the light of surrounding circumstances, constitute the enticing or addressing prohibited by the statute. Were specific language or conduct determinative, as urged by appellant, every prostitute could know how to avoid arrest.") (internal citations omitted).
[98] In 2013, the DCCA affirmed a conviction for soliciting for prostitution under D.C. Code § 22-2701 when the current definition of "solicitation" was in effect and stated that "we do not require the government to prove any particular language" and "we look to appellant's conduct or words in light of surrounding circumstances." Moten v. United States, 81 A.3d 1274, 1280, 1281 (D.C. 2013) (internal citations omitted).
[99] D.C. Code § 22-2701.01(3).
[100] D.C. Code § 22-2701(a).

act or contact with another person in return for giving or receiving anything of value."[101] The revised language is consistent with the revised sex offenses in RCC Chapter 13 and is not intended to substantively change current District law.

Fifth, the revised patronizing prostitution statute clarifies that an individual that engages in or submits to sexual activity in exchange for giving anything of value must do so "pursuant to a prior agreement, explicit or implicit." The current D.C. Code prostitution or solicitation statute prohibits "engag[ing] in prostitution"[102] and defines "prostitution," in relevant part, as "a sexual act or sexual contact with another person in return for giving . . . anything of value."[103] The language "in return for" implies that there was a prior agreement, but there is no DCCA case law interpreting this language. The revised patronizing prostitution statute includes giving anything of value in exchange for past sexual activity only if it is "pursuant to a prior agreement, explicit or implicit." Without requiring a prior agreement, giving anything of value in exchange for sexual activity could criminalize consensual romantic conduct with subsequent gifts. This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Sixth, the revised patronizing prostitution statute is no longer subject to the definition of "anything of value" in D.C. Code § 22-1802 that applies to the current D.C. Code prostitution or solicitation statute. Current D.C. Code § 22-1802 states that "anything of value" "shall be held to include not only things possessing intrinsic value, but bank notes and other forms of paper money, and commercial paper and other writings which represent value."[104] This definition is unnecessary, and not explicitly specifying that money and commercial paper is included within "anything of value" in the revised offense is not intended to change current District law.

[101] D.C. Code § 22-2701.01(3).
[102] D.C. Code § 22-2701(a).
[103] D.C. Code § 22-2701.01(3).
[104] D.C. Code § 22-1802.

RCC § 22E-4403. Trafficking in Commercial Sex.

Explanatory Note. The RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute prohibits causing, procuring, providing, recruiting, or enticing a person to engage in or submit to a commercial sex act or providing a location for this purpose, as well as obtaining anything of value from a commercial sex act. The offense provides enhanced penalties based on the age of the person trafficked and whether the person trafficked is impaired. The RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute replaces the operating a house of prostitution statute,[1] portions of the keeping a disorderly or bawdy house statute,[2] portions of the pandering statute,[3] the procuring for prostitution statute,[4] the procuring for a house of prostitution statute,[5] the procuring for a third person statute,[6] and the definitions statute that applies to these offenses.[7] The revised trafficking in commercial sex statute also replaces in relevant part two distinct provisions for the current D.C. Code prostitution and solicitating for prostitution offenses: provisions for establishing a nuisance and abating a nuisance,[8] and provisions for vehicle impoundment[9] and the Anti-Prostitution Vehicle Impoundment Proceeds Fund.[10]

Subsection (a) specifies the prohibited conduct for the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute. Paragraph (a)(1) specifies one basis of liability for the offense. Per paragraph (a)(1), the actor must act with "intent to receive anything of value as a result." "Intent" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-206 that here means the actor was practically certain that the actor would receive anything of value as a result. Per RCC § 22E-205, the object of the phrase "with intent to" is not an objective element that requires separate proof—only the actor's culpable mental state must be proven regarding the object of this phrase. It is not necessary to prove that the actor actually received anything of value as a result, just that the actor believed to a practical certainty that the actor would receive anything of value as a result.

Under subparagraph (a)(1)(A) and subparagraph (a)(1)(B), the actor must either cause, procure, provide, recruit, or entice a person to engage in or submit to a "commercial sex act" with or for another person, or provide or maintain a location for a person to engage in or submit to a "commercial sex act" with or for another person. "Commercial sex act" is defined in RCC § 22E-701 as "any sexual act or sexual contact on account of which or for which anything of value is given to, promised to, or received by any person." The requirement "with or for another person" may be satisfied if the

[1] D.C. Code § 22-2712.
[2] D.C. Code § 22-2722.
[3] D.C. Code § 22-2705(a)(1), (a)(2). As is discusssed in the commentary to this offense, other RCC offenses, such as kidnapping (RCC § 22E-1401) and criminal restaint (RCC § 22E-1402), replace current D.C. Code §§ 22-2705(a)(3) and 22-2705(b), which prohibit abducting or detaining an individual for the purposes of prostitution, sexual activity, or marriage.
[4] D.C. Code § 22-2707.
[5] D.C. Code § 22-2710.
[6] D.C. Code § 22-2711.
[7] D.C. Code § 22-2701.01.
[8] D.C. Code §§ 22-2713 - 22-2720.
[9] D.C. Code § 22-2724.
[10] D.C. Code § 22-2725.

actor causes the complainant to engage in a commercial sex act with a third party, or if the actor causes the complainant to engage in masturbatory conduct.[11] An actor who causes, procures, etc., a person to engage in or submit to a consensual commercial sex act with the actor, or provides or maintains a location for a person to engage in or submit to a consensual commercial sex act with the actor, may be subject to liability under the RCC patronizing prostitution statute (RCC § 22E-4402).[12]

Paragraph (a)(1) also specifies a culpable mental state of "purposely." Per the rule of construction in RCC § 22E-207, the "purposely" culpable mental state in paragraph (a)(1) applies to the elements in subparagraph (a)(1)(A) and subparagraph (a)(1)(B). "Purposely" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-206 that here means the actor must "consciously desire" that the actor causes, procures, etc., a person to engage in or submit to a commercial sex act with or for another person, or provides or maintains a location for a person to engage in or submit to a commercial sex act with or for another person.

Paragraph (a)(2) specifies a second basis of liability for the offense. For this basis of liability, the actor must receive anything of value as a result of causing, procuring, providing, recruiting, or enticing a person to engage in or submit to a "commercial sex act" with or for another person (subparagraph (a)(2)(A)), or providing or maintaining a location for a person to engage in or submit to a "commercial sex act" with or for another person (subparagraph (a)(2)(B)). "Commercial sex act" is defined in RCC § 22E-701 as "any sexual act or sexual contact on account of which or for which anything of value is given to, promised to, or received by any person." Paragraph (a)(2) specifies a culpable mental state of "knowingly." Per the rule of construction in RCC § 22E-207, the "knowingly" culpable mental state in paragraph (a)(2) applies to the elements in paragraph (a)(2), subparagraph (a)(2)(A), and subparagraph (a)(2)(B). "Knowingly" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-206 that here means the actor must be "practically certain" that the actor receives anything of value as a result of causing, procuring, etc., a person to engage in or submit to a commercial sex act with or for another person, or providing or maintaining a location for a person to engage in or submit to a commercial sex act with or for another person. An actor who receives anything of value as a result of causing, procuring, etc., a person to engage in or submit to a consensual commercial sex act with the actor, or providing or maintaining a location for a person to engage in or submit to a consensual commercial sex act with the actor, may be subject to liability under the RCC prostitution statute (RCC § 22E-4401).[13]

Paragraph (a)(3) specifies the final possible basis of liability for the offense. The actor must receive anything of value from the proceedings or earnings of a "commercial sex act" that a person has engaged in or submitted to, without consideration or when the [11] Masturbation is not explicitly included in the RCC definition of "commercial sex act." However, the term "commercial sex act" is defined to include any "sexual act" or "sexual contact" performed in exchange for anything of value. To the extent that conduct commonly understood as masturbation meets the RCC definitions of "sexual act" or "sexual contact," if it performed in exchange for anything of value, it constitutes a "commercial sex act."

[12] If the commercial sex act is not consensual, or if the person whom the actor solicits or patronizes is under the age of 18 years, there may be liability under the RCC sex assault offenses in Chapter 13.

[13] If the commercial sex act is not consensual, or if the person whom the actor solicits or with whom the actor engages in sexual activity is under the age of 18 years, there may be liability under the RCC sex assault offenses in Chapter 13.

consideration is providing or maintaining a location for a "commercial sex act." "Commercial sex act" is defined in RCC § 22E-701 as "any sexual act or sexual contact on account of which or for which anything of value is given to, promised to, or received by any person." Per the rule of construction in RCC § 22E-207, the "knowingly" culpable mental state in paragraph (a)(2) applies to the elements in paragraph (a)(3). "Knowingly" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-206 that here means the actor must be "practically certain" that the actor receives anything of value from the proceeds or earnings of a "commercial sex act" that a person has engaged in or submitted to, without consideration or when the consideration is providing or maintaining a location for a "commercial sex act." Unlike the other bases of liability, paragraph (a)(3) does not require that the "commercial sex act" be "with or for another person." An actor that engages in a "commercial sex act" with a person, and receives anything of value from any earnings or proceeds of that commercial sex act, has liability under paragraph (a)(3) if the other requirements of the provision are met. Similarly, if the only consideration is providing or maintaining a location for a "commercial sex act" with the actor, the actor has liability under paragraph (a)(3) if the other requirements of the provision are met.

Subsection (b) specifies relevant penalties for the offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.]

Paragraph (b)(2) codifies several penalty enhancements for the revised trafficking in commercial sex statute. If any of the specified enhancements apply, the penalty classification for the revised offense is increased by one class.

The penalty enhancement in subparagraph (b)(2)(A) applies if the actor is reckless as to the fact that the person trafficked is under 18 years of age, or if, in fact, the person trafficked is under 12 years of age. "Reckless" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-206 that here means that the actor is aware of a substantial risk that the person trafficked is under 18 years of age. In the alternative, the penalty enhancement applies if the person trafficked "in fact" is under 12 years of age. "In fact" is defined term in RCC § 22E-207 that indicates there is no culpable mental state requirement as to a given element, here the age of the person trafficked.

Two penalty enhancements are codified under subparagraph (b)(2)(B). Under subparagraph (b)(2)(B) and sub-subparagraph (b)(2)(B)(i), the actor must be reckless as to the fact that the person trafficked is "incapable of appraising the nature of the commercial sex act" or of understanding the right to give or withhold consent to the commercial sex act. In addition, the person's inability must be either due to a drug, intoxicant, or other substance, or, due to an intellectual, developmental, or mental disability or mental illness when the actor has no similarly serious disability or illness. This language is identical to one of the requirements in second degree and fourth degree of the RCC sexual assault statute (RCC § 22E-1301) and is intended to have the same meaning. Per the rule of construction in RCC § 22E-207, the "reckless" culpable mental state in subparagraph (b)(2)(B) applies to the requirements in sub-subparagraph (b)(2)(B)(i). "Reckless" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-206 that here means that the actor is aware of a substantial risk that the person trafficked is incapable of appraising the nature of the commercial sex act or of understanding the right to give or withhold consent to the commercial sex act, either due to a drug, intoxicant, or other substance, or, due to an intellectual, developmental, or mental disability or mental illness when the actor has no similarly serious disability or illness.

Under subparagraph (b)(2)(B) and sub-subparagraph (b)(2)(B)(ii), the actor must be reckless as to the fact that the person trafficked is incapable of communicating[14] willingness or unwillingness to engage in the commercial sex act. This language is identical to one of the requirements in second degree and fourth degree of the RCC sexual assault statute (RCC § 22E-1301) and is intended to have the same meaning. Sub-subparagraph (b)(2)(B)(ii) includes paralyzed individuals who are able to appraise the nature of the commercial sex act or of understanding the right to give or withhold consent under sub-subparagraph (b)(2)(B)(i), but are unable to communicate. Per the rule of construction in RCC § 22E-207, the "reckless" culpable mental state in subparagraph (b)(2)(B) applies to the requirements in sub-subparagraph (b)(2)(B)(i). "Reckless" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-206 that here means the actor is aware of a substantial risk that the person trafficked is incapable of communicating willingness or unwillingness to engage in the commercial sex act.

Subsection (c) cross-references applicable definitions located elsewhere in the RCC.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised trafficking in commercial sex statute clearly changes District law in twelve main ways.

First, the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute no longer prohibits abducting or detaining an individual for the purposes of prostitution, sexual activity, or marriage. Several of the current D.C. Code prostitution statutes prohibit abducting or detaining an individual for the purposes of prostitution, sexual activity, or marriage, with maximum penalties that range from five years to 20 years.[15] In addition to these statutes, current D.C.

---

[14] If the complainant is unable to communicate verbally or orally, but is able to make gestures, facial expressions, or engage in other conduct, the person may be capable of communicating and this element may not be satisfied.

[15] D.C. Code § 22-2704 prohibits abducting, secreting, or harboring a person under the age of 18 years for purposes of prostitution and has a maximum penalty of 20 years. D.C. Code § 22-2704 ("(a) It is unlawful for any person, for purposes of prostitution, to: (1) Persuade, entice, or forcibly abduct a child under 18 years of age from his or her home or usual abode, or from the custody and control of the child's parents or guardian; or (2) Secrete or harbor any child so persuaded, enticed, or abducted from his or her home or usual abode, or from the custody and control of the child's parents or guardian. (b) A person who violates subsection (a) of this section shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 20 years, or by a fine of not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01, or both.").

D.C. Code § 22-2705(a)(3) prohibits taking or detaining an individual to force them to marry another person, with a maximum penalty of 5 years, unless the individual is under the age of 18 years, in which case the maximum penalty is 20 years. D.C. Code §§ 22-2705(a)(3), (c)(1), (c)(2) ("(a) It is unlawful for any person, within the District of Columbia to: (3) Take or detain an individual against the individual's will, with intent to compel such individual by force, threats, menace, or duress to marry the abductor or to marry any other person. . . . (c)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, a person who violates subsection (a) or (b) of this section shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or by a fine of not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01, or both. (2) A person who violates subsection (a) or (b) of this section when the individual so placed, caused, compelled, induced, enticed, procured, taken, detained, or used or attempted to be so placed, caused, compelled, induced, enticed, procured, taken, detained, or used is under the age of 18 years shall be guilty of a felony and, upon Code § 22-2708 prohibits "plac[ing] or leav[ing]" a spouse or domestic partner "in a house of prostitution, or to lead a life of prostitution" by "force, fraud, intimidation, or threats."[16] These statutes overlap with the current D.C. Code kidnapping statute (RCC § 22-2001), which has a higher maximum penalty (30 years),[17] as well as other current D.C. Code statutes, such as human trafficking. In contrast, the RCC kidnapping (RCC § 22E-1401) and RCC criminal restraint (RCC § 22E-1402) statutes criminalize abducting or detaining an individual for the purposes of prostitution, sexual activity, or marriage, as well as placing or leaving a spouse or domestic partner "in a house of prostitution, or to lead a life conviction, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 20 years or by a fine of not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01, or both.

---

D.C. Code § 22-2705(b) prohibits a parent, guardian, or other legal custodian from consenting to an individual being taken or detained for purposes of prostitution or sexual activity, with a maximum penalty of 5 years, unless the individual is under the age of 18 years, in which case the maximum penalty is 20 years. D.C. Code §§ 22-2705(b), (c)(1), (c)(2) ("(b) It is unlawful for any parent, guardian, or other person having legal custody of the person of an individual, to consent to the individual's being taken, detained, or used by any person, for the purpose of prostitution or a sexual act or sexual contact. . . . (c)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, a person who violates subsection (a) or (b) of this section shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or by a fine of not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01, or both. (2) A person who violates subsection (a) or (b) of this section when the individual so placed, caused, compelled, induced, enticed, procured, taken, detained, or used or attempted to be so placed, caused, compelled, induced, enticed, procured, taken, detained, or used is under the age of 18 years shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 20 years or by a fine of not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01, or both.").

D.C. Code § 22-2706 prohibits, by threats or duress, detaining an individual or compelling an individual to reside with any person for the purposes of prostitution or sexual activity and has a maximum penalty of 15 years, unless the complainant is under the age of 18, in which case the maximum penalty is 20 years. D.C. Code § 22-2706 ("(a) It is unlawful for any person, within the District of Columbia, by threats or duress, to detain any individual against such individual's will, for the purpose of prostitution or a sexual act or sexual contact, or to compel any individual against such individual's will to reside with him or her or with any other person for the purposes of prostitution or a sexual act or sexual contact. (b)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, a person who violates subsection (a) of this section shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 15 years or by a fine of not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01, or both. (2) A person who violates subsection (a) of the section when the individual so detained or compelled is under the age of 18 years shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 20 years or by a fine of not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01, or both.").

D.C. Code § 22-2709 prohibits attempting to detain an individual in a disorderly house or house of prostitution because of debt accrued while living in that house and has a five year maximum penalty. D.C. Code § 22-2709 ("Any person or persons who attempt to detain any individual in a disorderly house or house of prostitution because of any debt or debts such individual has contracted, or is said to have contracted, while living in said house of prostitution or disorderly house shall be guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof be imprisoned for a term not less than one year nor more than 5 years. In addition to any other penalty provided under this section, a person may be fined an amount not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01."). This statute will also overlap with attempted kidnapping and attempted criminal restraint under the RCC general attempt provision (RCC § 22E-301).

[16] D.C. Code § 22-2708 ("Any person who by force, fraud, intimidation, or threats, places or leaves, or procures any other person or persons to place or leave, a spouse or domestic partner in a house of prostitution, or to lead a life of prostitution, shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be imprisoned not less than one year nor more than 10 years. In addition to any other penalty provided under this section, a person may be fined an amount not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01.").

[17] D.C. Code § 22-2001.

of prostitution" by "force, fraud, intimidation, or threats." There may also be liability under the RCC human trafficking statutes in RCC Chapter 16 or other RCC offenses against persons, such as sexual assault. There is no reason why forcing a person into prostitution should be penalized differently or less severely than other forms of sexual assault, kidnapping, criminal coercion, and human trafficking. This change reduces unnecessary overlap between offenses and improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statute.

Second, the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute is limited to consensual commercial sex acts that are not caused by the prohibited means in the RCC human trafficking statutes, such as physical force or a coercive threat. Two of the current D.C. Code prostitution statutes require the use of force, threats, etc.,[18] but most of the current D.C. Code prostitution statutes do not specify whether force, threats, etc., are required. As a result, most of the current D.C. Code prostitution statutes appear to extend liability equally to both coerced and consensual commercial sexual conduct, particularly the statutes that require "causing"[19] or "compelling"[20] an individual to engage in prostitution. There is no DCCA case law discussing the scope of "causing" or "compelling" in these statutes. However, under earlier versions of the D.C. Code pandering[21] and procuring for prostitution[22] statutes, the DCCA upheld the trial court admitting evidence of the appellant's assault on a prostitute because the "evidence was relevant to the issue of appellant's intent to coerce complainant to engage in prostitution."[23] To the extent that the current D.C. Code prostitution statutes extend to forced or coerced commercial sexual conduct, they overlap with the current D.C. Code human trafficking statutes, which generally have significantly higher maximum penalties for the same conduct.[24] In contrast,

---

[18] D.C. Code § 22-2706 ("(a) It is unlawful for any person, within the District of Columbia, by threats or duress, to detain any individual against such individual's will, for the purpose of prostitution or a sexual act or sexual contact, or to compel any individual against such individual's will, to reside with him or her or with any other person for the purposes of prostitution or a sexual act or sexual contact."); 22-2708 ("Any person who by force, fraud, intimidation, or threats, places or leaves, or procures any other person or persons to place or leave, a spouse or domestic partner in a house of prostitution, or to lead a life of prostitution, shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be imprisoned not less than one year nor more than 10 years. In addition to any other penalty provided under this section, a person may be fined an amount not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01.").

[19] D.C. Code §§ 22-2705(a)(2)(C) (pandering statute prohibiting, in part, "[c]ause . . . any individual" to "engage in prostitution."); 22-2707(a) (procuring statute prohibiting, in part, receiving anything of value "for or on account of . . . causing any individual to engage in prostitution or a sexual act or contact.").

[20] D.C. Code §§ 22-2705(a)(2)(C) (pandering statute prohibiting, in part, "[c]ause, compel, induce, entice, or procure or attempt to cause, compel, induce, entice, or procure any individual" to "engage in prostitution.").

[21] D.C. Code § 22-2705.

[22] D.C. Code § 22-2707.

[23] Godfrey v. United States, 454 A.2d, 293, 295, 295 & n. 1 (D.C. 1982).

[24] The relevant D.C. Code human trafficking statutes have a maximum term of imprisonment of 20 years. See D.C. Code §§ 22-1833; 22-1834; 22-1837(a)(1), (c) (statutes prohibiting trafficking in labor or commercial sex acts and sex trafficking of children with maximum terms of imprisonment of 20 years, and statute prohibiting benefitting financially from human trafficking with the same maximum penalty as the underlying trafficking offense, which, in the case of trafficking in commercial sex acts and sex trafficking of children, is 20 years).
In contrast, the current D.C. Code prostitution statutes that prohibit causing individuals to engage in prostitution and procuring individuals for prostitution, have a maximum penalty of five years unless the the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute is limited to consensual commercial sex acts, with lower maximum penalties, and the RCC human trafficking statutes in Chapter 16 require forced or coerced commercial sex acts, and have higher maximum penalties. The seriousness of forced or coerced commercial sex acts is far greater than consensual acts. This change improves the clarity and the proportionality of the revised assault statute.

Third, the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute requires a "purposely" culpable mental state for the prohibited conduct in subparagraph (a)(1)(A) and that the conduct be "with intent to receive anything of value as a result." The current D.C. Code pandering statute prohibits, in part, conduct to "[c]ause, compel, induce, entice, or procure" any individual "to engage in prostitution."[25] There is no requirement that the defendant receive anything of value as a result. The statute does not specify any culpable mental states and there is no District case law on this issue. However, in the context of denying a claim for merger of a pandering conviction and a procuring conviction, the DCCA has stated that "[t]o convict appellant of pandering, the government had to prove that he induced or coerced complainant to engage in prostitution, not merely that he facilitated or arranged for an act that she, herself, elected to do."[26] In contrast, the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute requires a "purposely" culpable mental state for the pandering conduct under paragraph subparagraph (a)(1)(A)—cause, procure, provide, recruit, or entice a person to engage in or submit to a commercial sex act—and that the defendant act "with intent to receive anything of value as a result." In the RCC statute, the "purposely" culpable mental state excludes many well-intentioned individuals who might otherwise be captured by a lower culpable mental state.[27] In addition, the RCC trafficking in commercial complainant is under the age of 18 years, in which case the maximum penalty is 20 years. See D.C. Code §§ 22-2705(a)(2)(C), (c)(1), (c)(2) (pandering statute prohibiting causing, compelling, inducing, enticing, or procuring any individual to engage in prostitution with a maximum term of imprisonment of 5 years unless the complainant is under the age of 18 years, in which case the maximum term of imprisonment is 20 years); 22-2707 (procuring statute prohibiting receiving anything of value for arranging for or causing an individual to engage in prostitution with a maximum term of imprisonment of five years, unless the complainant is under the age of 18 years, in which case the maximum term of imprisonment is 20 years); 22-2710 (procuring statute prohibiting paying or receiving anything of value for procuring for or placing an individual in a house of prostitution with a maximum term of imprisonment of five years); 22-2711 (procuring statute prohibiting receiving anything of value for procuring and placing an individual in the custody of a third person for purposes of prostitution with a maximum term of imprisonment of five years); 22-2712 (statute prohibiting operating a house of prostitution with a maximum term of imprisonment of five years); 22-2722 (statute prohibiting keeping a bawdy house or disorderly house with a maximum term of imprisonment of five years).

---

[25] D.C. Code § 22-2705(a)(2)(C).

[26] Godfrey v. United States, 454 A.2d 295 n.1 (D.C. 1982). Although Godfrey was decided in 1982, D.C. Code § 22-2705 has not been substantively amended since.

[27] The RCC generally uses a lower culpable mental state of knowledge for prohibited conduct, which here would require that the defendant be "practically certain" that he or she causes, procures, etc., an individual to engage in or submit to a commercial sex act. However, a knowledge culpable mental state, particularly without any additional requirement that the defendant receive or intend to receive anything of value as a result, would criminalize well-intentioned individuals such as friends, family, other individuals engaged in commercial sex work, and medical professionals, that facilitate consensual commercial sex work that a person chooses to do. For example, a friend or family member that drives an individual to a location for commercial sex work that the individual wants to do or needs to do for financial reasons is arguably "knowingly" causing that individual to engage in commercial sex work. The friend or family member is sex offense requires that an individual must have "intent to receive anything of value as a result"—i.e. the individual must be practically certain that he or she will receive anything of value as a result of his or her actions. This requirement limits the RCC offense to traditional "pimping" behavior and would also excluded well-intentioned individuals that facilitate but do not desire to profit from the consensual commercial sex work of another. If an individual actually receives anything of value as a result of causing, procuring, etc., an individual to engage in a commercial sex act, that would satisfy the "with intent" requirement. This change is consistent with DCCA case law and improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statute.

Fourth, the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute punishes an attempted offense the same as most other criminal attempts. The current D.C. Code pandering statute includes an "attempt" to cause any individual to engage in prostitution,[28] and the current D.C. Code procuring for prostitution statute includes "any act . . . to attempt to procure or otherwise arrange for the purpose of prostitution."[29] There is no District case law construing this "attempt" language. The current D.C. Code pandering and procuring for prostitution statutes penalize an attempted offense the same as a completed offense. In contrast, under the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute, the general attempt provision in RCC § 22E-301 will establish liability and penalties for attempted trafficking in commercial sex consistent with other RCC offenses. Under RCC § 22E-301, the penalty for an attempted offense is one-half the maximum penalty of the completed offense, consistent with several of the more recently revised D.C. Code offenses.[30] There is no clear rationale for attempts to be treated differently in trafficking in commercial sex as compared to other offenses, or for penalizing attempted trafficking in commercial sex the same as the completed offense. This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statute.

Fifth, the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute does not include as a discrete basis of liability a parent or guardian of an individual consenting to that individual being used in prostitution. The current D.C. Code pandering statute prohibits, in part, "any parent, guardian, or other person having legal custody of the person of an individual [consenting] to the individual's being . . . used by any person, for the purpose of prostitution or a sexual act or sexual contact."[31] The current D.C. Code pandering statute has a maximum penalty of five years unless the complainant is under the age of 18 years, in which case the maximum penalty is 20 years.[32] In contrast, the RCC arranging for sexual "practically certain," as required by the definition of "knowingly" in RCC § 22E-206, that his or her conduct is causing that individual to engage in commercial sex work.

[28] D.C. Code § 22-2705(a)(2)(C) (pandering statute prohibiting "Cause, compel, induce, entice, or procure or attempt to cause, compel, induce, entice, or procure any individual . . . to engage in prostitution.").

[29] This language appears in the current D.C. Code definition of "arranging for prostitution." D.C. Code § 22-2701.01(1) (defining "arranging for prostitution" as "any act to procure or attempt to procure or otherwise arrange for the purpose of prostitution, regardless of whether such procurement or arrangement occurred or anything of value was given or received."). The definition is incorporated into the current D.C. Code procuring for prostitution statute, which prohibits receiving anything of value "for or on account of arranging for . . . any individual to engage in prostitution."). D.C. Code § 22-2707.

[30] See, e.g., D.C. Code § 22–3018, Attempts to commit sexual offenses.

[31] D.C. Code § 22-2705(b).

[32] D.C. Code § 22-2705(c)(1), (c)(2).

conduct with a minor or person incapable of consenting statute (RCC § 22E-1306) criminalizes a person with a responsibility under civil law for the health, welfare, or supervision of a complainant that is under the age of 18 years giving effective consent for that complainant to engage in or submit to a sexual act or sexual contact. If the sexual act or sexual contact occurs, there also may be liability under the RCC sexual assault offenses in Chapter 13 or RCC human trafficking statutes in Chapter 16. This change reduces unnecessary overlap and improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised prostitution statutes.

Sixth, to the extent that keeping a "disorderly house" does not otherwise satisfy the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute (including accomplice liability for trafficking in commercial sex), this conduct is no longer criminalized in the RCC.[33] Current D.C. Code § 22-2722 prohibits "keeping a bawdy or disorderly house" with a five year maximum penalty.[34] The statute does not codify the elements of the offense; they are established entirely by District case law. DCCA case law refers to the common law definition of a "disorderly house"[35] and establishes that keeping a "disorderly house" requires that "acts take place on the premises that disturb the public or constitute a nuisance per se in the nature of a gambling house or bawdy house; that the premises are regularly resorted to for the commission of these acts; and, that the proprietor knows or should know of the acts and does nothing to prevent them."[36] A "bawdy house" for prostitution is a type of "disorderly house," but a "disorderly house" can extend to other conduct.[37] In contrast, the RCC

[33] But see RCC § 48-904.12 prohibits knowingly maintaining or opening any location with the intent that the location will be used to manufacture methamphetamine. While it seems likely that such a location would be considered a "disorderly house" under current District law, there is no DCCA case law on point.

[34] D.C. Code § 22-2722 ("Whoever is convicted of keeping a bawdy or disorderly house in the District shall be fined not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.").

[35] See, e.g., Harris v. United States, 315 A.2d 569, 572 (D.C. 1974) ("Since Congress in enacting our disorderly house statute made no attempt to define what conduct it was seeking to proscribe we necessarily must resort to the common-law definition of the crime.").

[36] Harris v. United States, 315 A.2d 569, 575 (D.C. 1947). Earlier DCCA case law (Payne v. United States, 171 A.2d 509, 511 (D.C. 1961)) required that the acts be "subversive of the public morals," but Harris specifically overruled this requirement. Harris, 315 A.2d at 573 ("We conclude . . . that subversion of the public morals is not an element of [keeping a disorderly house]. . . . Payne was incorrect in requiring proof by the government that the defendant subverted public morals."). Payne had upheld a disorderly house conviction when the defendant regularly purchased stolen property at her home and the court in Harris noted that this "departed from the mainstream of the common law that for a disorderly house to exist there must be a public disturbance or a nuisance per se." Harris, 315 A.2d at 573.

[37] The majority of District case law on disorderly houses is limited to prostitution, but the United States District Court for the District of Columbia noted that a "crack house" would likely be a nuisance per se and would be a disorderly house, even if it did not disturb the public peace. United States v. Wade, 992 F. Supp. 6, 15 & n.5 (D.D.C. 1997) (ordered vacated on other grounds by United States v. Wade, 152 F.3d 969 (D.C. Cir. 1998) ("A reasonable argument could be made that a crack house fits under this definition [nuisance per se]; the inherent potential for breaches of the peace when a crack house is present is beyond question. However, this court does not at this time conclude that § 22–2722 is applicable whenever police seize a crack house, and therefore limits its reach to situations in which the government has proven that there exists an actual, demonstrative public disturbance."). The United States District Court for the District of Columbia's interpretation of a D.C. Code statute is not binding on the DCCA, but may be persuasive authority for the DCCA. See, e.g., Tyler v. United States, 705 A.2d 270, 277 n.14 (D.C. 1997) ("even though we may find persuasive a federal court's interpretation of District of Columbia or of similar federal law . . .").

trafficking in commercial sex statute, and the RCC generally, do not specifically criminalize keeping a "disorderly house." If an individual commits a crime at or in relation to the property, such as a drug-related or prostitution-related crime, that individual will have liability for that offense. If an individual does not commit a crime at or in relation to the property, but merely "knows or should know" of the activity at the property, it is disproportionate to impose criminal liability. The civil nuisance and abatement provisions in D.C. Code §§ 42-3101 et. seq. address the harm of such a property, and are discussed elsewhere in this commentary. Where, however, a person purposely maintains a "disorderly house" to facilitate trafficking in commercial sex, there may be liability as a principal or accomplice to RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute to the extent the statutory requirements are met. This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Seventh, to the extent that keeping a "bawdy house" does not otherwise satisfy the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute (including accomplice liability for trafficking in commercial sex), this conduct is no longer criminalized in the RCC. Current D.C. Code § 22-2722 prohibits "keeping a bawdy or disorderly house" with a five year maximum penalty.[38] The statute does not codify the elements of the offense; they are established entirely by District case law. DCCA case law refers to the common law definition of a "disorderly house"[39] and establishes that keeping a "disorderly house" requires that "acts take place on the premises that disturb the public or constitute a nuisance per se in the nature of a gambling house or bawdy house; that the premises are regularly resorted to for the commission of these acts; and, that the proprietor knows or should know of the acts and does nothing to prevent them."[40] The DCCA has stated that "the government does not have to prove ownership or legal control of the premises"[41] and that it is sufficient that the defendant "in fact controlled or managed the premises."[42] A "bawdy house" is a type of "disorderly house," but DCCA case law does not clearly state the elements of a "bawdy

---

The District case law on a "disorderly house" is fairly limited in scope, but the United States Supreme Court has made clear that public morality cannot justify a law that regulates private sexual conduct that does not relate to prostitution, potential for injury or coercion, or public conduct. See Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558 (2003) (concerning the right to homosexual intercourse and other nonprocreative sexual activity); Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965) (concerning marital privacy and contraceptives).

[38] D.C. Code § 22-2722 ("Whoever is convicted of keeping a bawdy or disorderly house in the District shall be fined not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.").

[39] See, e.g., Harris v. United States, 315 A.2d 569, 572 (D.C. 1974) ("Since Congress in enacting our disorderly house statute made no attempt to define what conduct it was seeking to proscribe we necessarily must resort to the common-law definition of the crime.").

[40] Harris v. United States, 315 A.2d 569, 575 (D.C. 1947). Earlier DCCA case law (Payne v. United States, 171 A.2d 509, 511 (D.C. 1961)) required that the acts be "subversive of the public morals," but Harris specifically overruled this requirement. Harris, 315 A.2d at 573 ("We conclude . . . that subversion of the public morals is not an element of [keeping a disorderly house]. . . . Payne was incorrect in requiring proof by the government that the defendant subverted public morals."). Payne had upheld a disorderly house conviction when the defendant regularly purchased stolen property at her home and the court in Harris noted that this "departed from the mainstream of the common law that for a disorderly house to exist there must be a public disturbance or a nuisance per se." Harris, 315 A.2d at 573.

[41] Thomas v. United States, 588 A.2d 272, 275 (D.C. 1991).

[42] Thomas v. United States, 588 A.2d 272, 275 (D.C. 1991).

house" specifically. In dicta, the DCCA referred to a "bawdy house" as "a place for the convenience of people of both sexes in resorting to lewdness.[43]

In contrast, keeping or maintaining a "bawdy house," alone, is not sufficient for liability under the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute. Keeping or maintaining a "bawdy house" must otherwise satisfy the requirements of the RCC offense. Three provisions in particular apply to keeping or maintaining a "bawdy house," although the other provisions of the RCC offense may also apply: 1) purposely providing or maintaining a location for a commercial sex act with or for another person with intent to receive anything of value as a result (subparagraph (a)(1)(B)); 2) knowingly receiving anything of value as a result of providing or maintaining a location for a commercial sex act with or for another person; (subparagraph (a)(2)(B)); or 3) receiving anything of value from a commercial sex act and providing or maintaining a location for a commercial sex act as the only consideration (paragraph (a)(3)). Unlike current law, a person that merely "knows or should know" that prostitution occurs at the property and does nothing to prevent it is not criminally liable. It is disproportionate to impose criminal liability in such a situation. The civil nuisance and abatement provisions in D.C. Code §§ 42-3101 address the harm of such a property, and are discussed elsewhere in this commentary. Although the scope of the RCC offense may be narrower than the current D.C. Code "bawdy house" offense, it is also broader in the sense that a single commercial sex act, or no commercial sex act, can be sufficient for liability, as opposed to the requirement of "regularly" sexual activity occurring under current law. This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Eighth, the revised trafficking in commercial sex statute authorizes enhanced penalties if the accused is reckless as to the fact that the person trafficked is under 18 years of age or if, in fact, the person trafficked is under 12 years of age. The current D.C. Code pandering statute[44] and the current D.C. Code procuring for prostitution statute[45] have enhanced penalties when the trafficked person is under the age of 18 years, but the current D.C. Code procuring for a house of prostitution,[46] procuring for a third person,[47] operating [43] Riley v. United States, 298 A.2d 228, 230 (D.C. 1972) ("A bawdy house has been defined as a place for the convenience of people of both sexes in resorting to lewdness. It is a place many people may frequent for immoral purposes or a house where one may go for immoral purposes without invitation.") (citing Trent v. Commonwealth, 181 Va. 338 (1943)).

[44] D.C. Code § 22-2705(c)(1), (c)(2) (pandering statute authorizing a maximum penalty of five years imprisonment, unless the person trafficked is under the age of 18 years, in which case the maximum penalty is 20 years).

[45] D.C. Code § 22-2707(b)(1), (c)(2) (procuring statute prohibiting receiving anything of value for or on account of arranging for prostitution and authorizing a maximum penalty of five years imprisonment, unless the person procured is under the age of 18 years, in which case the maximum penalty is 20 years).

[46] D.C. Code § 22-2710 (procuring statute prohibiting paying or receiving anything of value for or an account of procuring an individual for or placing an individual in a house of prostitution, with a maximum penalty of five years).

[47] D.C. Code § 22-2711 (procuring statute prohibiting procuring and placing an individual in the custody of a third person for purposes of prostitution with a maximum penalty of five years).

a house of prostitution,[48] and keeping a "bawdy house"[49] statutes do not. In the pandering and procuring statutes that do have an enhanced penalty, the penalty quadruples, increasing from a five year maximum penalty to a 20 year maximum penalty. The penalty enhancements do not specify any culpable mental states for the age of the complainant and there is no DCCA case law on this issue. It is unclear whether a reasonable mistake of fact as to the complainant's age would be a defense. In contrast, the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute authorizes a penalty increase of one class, consistent with other enhanced penalties in the RCC, if the accused is reckless as to the fact that the person trafficked is under 18 years of age or if, in fact the person trafficked is under the age of 12 years. Recklessness for under the age of 18 years and strict liability for under the age of 12 years are consistent with other age-based penalty enhancements in the RCC sex offenses and the RCC Chapter 16 human trafficking offenses. However, the trafficking in commercial sex penalty enhancement is generally intended to be used when a more serious RCC sex offense, or RCC Chapter 16 human trafficking offense does not apply. This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised statute. This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Ninth, the revised trafficking in commercial sex statute authorizes enhanced penalties if the actor is reckless as to the fact that the person trafficked is incapacitated, impaired, or incapable of communicating willingness or unwillingness to engage in a commercial sex act. The current D.C. Code pandering,[50] procuring,[51] house of prostitution,[52] and keeping a disorderly or bawdy house[53] statutes do not enhance penalties based on whether the person trafficked is incapacitated or impaired. In contrast, the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute authorizes a penalty increase of one class, consistent with other enhanced penalties in the RCC, if the accused is reckless as to the fact that the person trafficked is incapacitated, impaired, or incapable of communicating willingness or unwillingness to engage in a commercial sex act. These requirements are consistent with the requirements in second degree and fourth degree of the RCC sexual assault statute, as well as the requirements for an incapacitated complainant in the RCC sex trafficking of a minor or adult incapable of consenting statute (RCC § 22E-1605). However, the trafficking in commercial sex penalty enhancement is intended to be used in the rare instance when a more serious RCC sex offense, such as sexual abuse of a minor (RCC § 22E-1302), or RCC Chapter 16 human trafficking offense does not apply.[54] This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised statute.

---

[48] D.C. Code § 22-2712 (statute prohibiting operating a house of prostitution with a five year maximum penalty).
[49] D.C. Code § 22-2722 (statute prohibiting keeping or maintaining a "bawdy house" with a maximum penalty of five years).
[50] D.C. Code § 22-2705(a).
[51] D.C. Code §§ 22-2707(a); 22-2710; 22-2711.
[52] D.C. Code § 22-2712.
[53] D.C. Code § 22-2722.
[54] Because the trafficking in commercial sex statute includes conduct with a "knowingly" culpable mental state, there may be rare instances where the commercial sex statute is chargeable but accomplice liability

Tenth, through the RCC definition of "commercial sex act," the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute uses the revised definitions of "sexual act" and "sexual contact" in RCC § 22E-701. The current D.C. Code definition of "prostitution"[55] uses the terms "sexual act" and "sexual contact" as those terms are currently defined in D.C. Code § 22-3001[56] for the current D.C. Code sexual abuse statutes. In contrast, through the RCC definition of "commercial sex act," the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute uses the revised definitions of "sexual act" and "sexual contact" in RCC § 22E-701. As the commentary to RCC § 22E-701 explains, the revised definitions of "sexual act" and "sexual contact" differ in multiple ways as compared to current law. As a result, the scope of the trafficking in commercial sex statute will differ as compared to the current D.C. Code pandering,[57] procuring,[58] and house of prostitution[59] statutes. For example, the current D.C. Code definitions of "sexual act" and "sexual contact" extend to conduct done with "an intent to abuse, humiliate, harass, degrade, or arouse or gratify the sexual desire of any person," but the RCC definitions are limited to conduct that is sexual in nature—with the desire to sexually "abuse, humiliate, harass, degrade, arouse, or gratify" any person. This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Eleventh, a vehicle used in furtherance of the RCC trafficking in commercial sex offense is no longer subject to vehicle impoundment. Current D.C. Code §§ 22-2724[60] for sexual abuse of a minor or human trafficking offenses are not chargeable due to the heightened mental state requirements for accomplice liability.

---

[55] D.C. Code § 22-2701.01(3) (defining "prostitution" as "a sexual act or contact with another person in return for giving or receiving anything of value."). Several of the current D.C. Code prostitution statutes that the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute replaces use the term "prostitution." See D.C. Code §§ 22-2705; 22-2707; 22-2710; 22-2711; 22-2712.

[56] D.C. Code §§ 22-2701.01(5), (6) (stating the terms "sexual act" and "sexual contact" in the prostitution and solicitation statute have the same meaning as in D.C. Code § 22-3001); 22-3001(8), (9) (defining "sexual act" as "(A) The penetration, however slight, of the anus or vulva of another by a penis; (B) Contact between the mouth and the penis, the mouth and the vulva, or the mouth and the anus; or (C) The penetration, however slight, of the anus or vulva by a hand or finger or by any object, with an intent to abuse, humiliate, harass, degrade, or arouse or gratify the sexual desire of any person. (D) The emission of semen is not required for the purposes of subparagraphs (A)-(C) of this paragraph" and "sexual contact" as "the touching with any clothed or unclothed body part or any object, either directly or through the clothing, of the genitalia, anus, groin, breast, inner thigh, or buttocks of any person with an intent to abuse, humiliate, harass, degrade, or arouse or gratify the sexual desire of any person.").

[57] D.C. Code § 22-2705(a)(2)(C) (pandering statute prohibiting causing a person to "engage in prostitution.").

[58] D.C. Code §§ 22-2707(a) ("It is unlawful for any person, within the District of Columbia, to receive any money or other valuable thing for or on account of arranging for or causing any individual to engage in prostitution or a sexual act or contact."); 22-2710 ("Any person who, within the District of Columbia, shall pay or receive any money or other valuable thing for or on account of the procuring for, or placing in, a house of prostitution, for purposes of . . . prostitution . . . ."); 22-2711 ("Any person who, within the District of Columbia, shall receive any money or other valuable thing for or on account of procuring and placing in the charge or custody of another person for . . . prostitution . . . .").

[59] D.C. Code § 22-2712 ("Any person who, within the District of Columbia, knowingly, shall accept, receive, levy, or appropriate any money or other valuable thing, without consideration other than the furnishing of a place for prostitution or the servicing of a place for prostitution, from the proceeds or earnings of any individual engaged in prostitution shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 5 years and by a fine of not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01.").

[60] D.C. Code § 22-2725 establishes the Anti-Prostitution Vehicle Impoundment Proceeds Fund, which "shall be used solely to fund expenses directly related to the booting, towing, and impoundment of vehicles provides that when there is probable cause that a vehicle "is being used in furtherance of a prostitution-related offense"[61] and there is an arrest,[62] the vehicle "shall" be towed or immobilized and notice provided to the owner and to the person in control of the vehicle.[63] There is no requirement that the owner be involved in the offense or know of the vehicle's use in the offense. The owner is "entitled to a due process hearing regarding the seizure of the vehicle,"[64] but the statute does not specify the timing or the requirements of the hearing. Independent of such a hearing, the vehicle can be repossessed "at any time" by paying several different penalties, fees, and costs,[65] which are either not refundable,[66] or are used in furtherance of prostitution-related activities, in violation of a prostitution-related offense." D.C. Code § 22-2725(b).

---

D.C. Code § 22-2725 states that all "funds collected from the assessment of civil penalties, booting, towing, impoundment, and storage fees pursuant to § 22-2723" will be deposited in the fund. D.C. Code § 22-2725(a). The reference to "§ 22-2723" appears to be an error, however, and the text should instead refer to "§ 22-2724." D.C. Law 16-306, the Omnibus Public Safety Amendment Act of 2006 (Omnibus Act), added D.C. Code §§ 22-2724 and 22-2725 as section 6 and section 7 to a 1935 law "An act for the suppression of prostitution in the District of Columbia." The text of Section 7 in the Omnibus Act, establishing § 22-2725, states "All funds collected from the assessment of civil penalties, booting, towing, impoundment, and storage fees pursuant to section 5." The reference to section 5 appears to be an error. Section 5 of the 1935 "An act for the suppression of prostitution in the District of Columbia" is specific to forfeiture, not impoundment.

The text in the Omnibus Act should instead refer to "section 6," which would be D.C. Code § 22-2724, and establishes the impoundment provision and the civil penalties, fees and costs for impoundment.

[61] D.C. Code § 22-2724(b). The current D.C. Code definition of "prostitution-related offenses" includes the current D.C. Code prostitution offenses that the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute replaces. D.C. Code § 22-2701(4) (defining "prostitution-related offenses as "those crimes and offenses defined in this subchapter."). The RCC prostitution statutes no longer use the term "prostitution-related offenses."

[62] D.C. Code § 22-2724(b).

[63] D.C. Code § 22-2724(b)(1), (b)(2).

[64] D.C. Code § 22-2701(f) ("An owner, or person duly authorized by an owner, shall be entitled to a due process hearing regarding the seizure of the vehicle.").

[65] D.C. Code § 22-2724(d) ("An owner, or a person duly authorized by an owner, shall, upon proof of same, be permitted to repossess or secure the release of the immobilized or impounded vehicle at any time (subject to administrative availability) by paying to the District government, as directed by the Department of Public Works, an administrative civil penalty of $150, a booting fee, if applicable, all outstanding fines and penalties for infractions for which liability has been admitted, deemed admitted, or sustained after hearing, and all applicable towing and storage costs for impounded vehicles as provided by § 50-2421.09(a)(6). Payment of such fees shall not be admissible as evidence of guilt in any criminal proceeding.").

[66] Subsection (d) requires paying "all outstanding fines and penalties for infractions for which liability has been admitted, deemed admitted, or sustained after hearing" and there is no provision for a refund of this money in subsection (e). In addition, the refund of towing and storage costs required in subsection (d) is capped at two days unless a police report indicates that the vehicle was stolen at the time it was seized. D.C. Code § 22-2724(d) ("An owner, or a person duly authorized by an owner, shall, upon proof of same, be permitted to repossess or secure the release of the immobilized or impounded vehicle at any time (subject to administrative availability) by paying . . . an administrative civil penalty of $150, a booting fee, if applicable, all outstanding fines and penalties for infractions for which liability has been admitted, deemed admitted, or sustained after hearing, and all applicable towing and storage costs for impounded vehicles as provided by § 50-2421.09(a)(6)."); § 22-2724(e) ("An owner, or person duly authorized by an owner, shall be entitled to refund of the administrative civil penalty, booting fee, and 2 days' towing and storage costs by showing that the prosecutor dropped the underlying criminal charges (except for instances of nolle prosequi or because the defendant completed a diversion program), that the Superior Court of the District of Columbia dismissed the case after consideration of the merits, or that the case resulted in a finding of not guilty on all prostitution-related charges, or by providing a police report demonstrating that refundable only in narrow circumstances.[67] Finally, it is unclear whether paying for the immediate release of a vehicle waives the owner's right to a due process hearing.[68] There is no DCCA case law interpreting the current prostitution impoundment provisions. In contrast, a vehicle used in furtherance of the RCC trafficking in commercial sex offense is no longer subject to vehicle impoundment. Mandatory impoundment is a disproportionate penalty for what is comparatively low-level felony offense, particularly given the penalties, fees, and costs that must be paid for the immediate release of the vehicle with limited or no refund. However, a vehicle used, or intended to be used, to violate the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute is subject to forfeiture under the RCC prostitution forfeiture provision (RCC § 22E-4404). RCC § 22E-4404, like the current prostitution forfeiture statute,[69] requires that the seizures and forfeitures of property "be pursuant to the standards and procedures set forth in D.C. Law 20-278." D.C. Law 20-278 provides significant due process protections that are lacking in the current prostitution impoundment provisions, such as strict deadlines for filings,[70] and requires the owner's knowledge and consent to the use of the property, or willful blindness.[71] This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Twelfth, the revised trafficking in commercial sex statute deletes the prostitution nuisance provisions in current D.C. Code §§ 22-2723 through 22-2720 ("current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions") and instead relies on the existing nuisance provisions in D.C. Code §§ 42-3101 through 42-3114 ("Title 42 nuisance provisions."). The current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions apply to "any building, erection, or place used the vehicle was stolen at the time that it was subject to seizure and impoundment. If the vehicle had been stolen at the time of seizure and impoundment, a refund of all towing and storage costs shall be made.").

---

[67] D.C. Code § 22-2724(e) ("An owner, or person duly authorized by an owner, shall be entitled to refund of the administrative civil penalty, booting fee, and 2 days' towing and storage costs by showing that the prosecutor dropped the underlying criminal charges (except for instances of nolle prosequi or because the defendant completed a diversion program), that the Superior Court of the District of Columbia dismissed the case after consideration of the merits, or that the case resulted in a finding of not guilty on all prostitution-related charges, or by providing a police report demonstrating that the vehicle was stolen at the time that it was subject to seizure and impoundment. If the vehicle had been stolen at the time of seizure and impoundment, a refund of all towing and storage costs shall be made.").

[68] Subsection (f) of current D.C. Code § 22-2724 states unequivocally that an owner "shall be entitled to a due process hearing regarding the seizure of the vehicle," D.C. Code § 22-2724(f), but other provisions in the statute suggest that paying for the immediate release of the vehicle waives the hearing. First, the written notice of the seizure of the vehicle must "convey[] . . . the right to obtain immediate return of the vehicle pursuant to subsection (d) of this section, in lieu of requesting a hearing." D.C. Code § 22-2724(b)(2) (emphasis added). The plain language of this provision suggests that an owner can either pay for immediate release or request a hearing, but cannot pay and then have a hearing. In addition, subsection (d) requires that, for the immediate release of the vehicle, the owner pay "all outstanding fines and penalties for infractions for which liability has been admitted, deemed admitted, or sustained after hearing." D.C. Code § 22-2724(d) (emphasis added).

[69] D.C. Code § 22-2723.

[70] D.C. Code §§ 41-301 through 41-315.

[71] D.C. Code § 41-302(b) ("No property shall be subject to forfeiture by reason of an act or omission committed or omitted without the actual knowledge and consent of the owner, unless the owner was willfully blind to the knowledge of the act or omission."). The District has the burden of proof to prove the owner's knowledge or willful blindness by a preponderance of the evidence or, if the property is a motor vehicle or real property, by clear and convincing evidence. D.C. Code § 41-308(d)(1)(A) – (C).

for the purpose of lewdness, assignation, or prostitution,"[72] or a nuisance that is established "in a criminal proceeding."[73] The scope of "in a criminal proceeding" is unclear under current District law,[74] but the DCCA has stated that "when a defendant has been found

[72] D.C. Code § 22-2713(a) ("Whoever shall erect, establish, continue, maintain, use, own, occupy, or release any building, erection, or place used for the purpose of lewdness, assignation, or prostitution in the District of Columbia is guilty of a nuisance, and the building, erection, or place, or the ground itself in or upon which such lewdness, assignation, or prostitution is conducted, permitted, or carried on, continued, or exists, and the furniture, fixtures, musical instruments, and contents are also declared a nuisance, and shall be enjoined and abated as hereinafter provided.").

[73] D.C. Code § 22-2717 ("If the existence of the nuisance be established in an action as provided in §§ 22-2713 to 22-2720, or in a criminal proceeding, an order of abatement shall be entered as a part of the judgment in the case which order shall direct the removal from the building or place of all fixtures, furniture, musical instruments, or movable property used in conducting the nuisance, and shall direct the sale thereof in the manner provided for the sale of chattels under execution, and the effectual closing of the building or place against its use for any purpose, and so keeping it closed for a period of 1 year, unless sooner released. If any person shall break and enter or use a building, erection, or place so directed to be closed such person shall be punished as for contempt, as provided in § 22-2716.").

[74] D.C. Code § 22-2717 requires that an abatement order be entered as part of the judgment if "the existence of the nuisance be established in an action as provided in §§ 22-2713 to 22-2720, or in a criminal proceeding." A broad reading of "in a criminal proceeding" is that an order of abatement is required whenever a nuisance is established as part of any criminal proceeding. The DCCA has stated that "when a defendant has been found guilty of maintaining a bawdy or disorderly house in violation of [D.C. Code § 22-2722], the house in question must be deemed to be a nuisance per se which the trial court is compelled to abate." Raleigh v. United States, 351 A.2d 510, 514 (D.C. 1976). However, the DCCA has not addressed whether "in a criminal proceeding" extends to any criminal proceeding, or is limited to D.C. Code § 22-2722, or more generally to property used for prostitution.

In United States v. Wade, 152 F.3d 969, 973 (D.C. Cir. 1998), the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia rejected a broad interpretation of D.C. Code § 22-2717. The D.C. Circuit's interpretation of a D.C. Code statute is not binding on the DCCA, but may be persuasive authority for the DCCA. See, e.g., Tyler v. United States, 705 A.2d 270, 277 n.14 (D.C. 1997) ("even though we may find persuasive a federal court's interpretation of District of Columbia or of similar federal law . . ."). In United States v. Wade, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia vacated an order of abatement entered pursuant to D.C. Code § 22-2717 for a conviction of keeping a "disorderly house" under D.C. Code § 22-2722. United States v. Wade, 152 F.3d 969, 970, 973 (D.C. Cir. 1998). D.C. Code § 22-2722 prohibits "keeping a bawdy or disorderly house." Under DCCA case law, a "bawdy house" used for prostitution is a type of "disorderly house," but a "disorderly house" can extend beyond a "bawdy house" to encompass "activities on the premises that either disturb the public or constitute a nuisance per se." Harris v. United States, 315 A.2d 569, 573 (D.C. 1974) (footnote omitted). The property in Wade was used for selling drugs. Wade, 152 F.3d at 970.

On appeal, the defendants argued that D.C. Code § 22-2717 only applies to a "disorderly house" that is used for "lewdness, assignation, or prostitution" as required by the nuisance provision in D.C. Code § 22-2713. Wade, 152 F.3d at 971. The government argued that a conviction for keeping any disorderly house under D.C. Code § 22-2722, or a conviction of any crime where there is proof that the defendant engaged in conduct constituting a nuisance per se, requires an order of abatement under D.C. Code § 22-2717. Id. at 971, 972.

The D.C. Circuit reviewed the enactment history of the prostitution nuisance provisions in D.C. Code §§ 22-2713 through 22-2717 and the disorderly house statute in 22-2722, noting that they were enacted by Congress at different times in different bills. Wade, 152 F.3d at 971, 971-972. The court noted that D.C. Code § 22-2713 requires that the property be used for the purpose of "lewdness, assignation, or prostitution," and D.C. Code § 22-2717 refers to the existence of "the nuisance." Id. at 971-72 (emphasis in original). The court concluded that "the" refers back to the requirements of "lewdness, assignation, or prostitution" in D.C. Code § 22-2713 and that D.C. Code § 22-2717 "concerns only those nuisances defined in" D.C. Code § 22-2713. Id. at 972. The court noted that while a conviction for keeping a "bawdy house" under D.C. Code § 22-2722 would "clearly entail the type of nuisance described in [D.C. guilty of maintaining a bawdy or disorderly house in violation of 22-2722, the house in question must be deemed to be a nuisance per se which the trial court is compelled to abate."[75] Violating a court order under the current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions is punishable by no less than three months and no more than six months imprisonment.[76] The current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions have not been substantively amended since they were enacted in 1914, whereas the Title 42 nuisance provisions were enacted in 1999.[77] The Title 42 nuisance provisions were originally limited to drug-related nuisances, but were amended in 2006 to include prostitution-related nuisances,[78] and again in 2010 to include firearm-related nuisances.[79] It is unclear how the two sets of nuisance provisions relate, and there is no DCCA case law[80] or legislative

---

Code § 22-2713], the keeping of a disorderly house might or might not, depending on the nature of the activity conducted in it." Id. The court stated that "[b]ecause the Government failed to show that [the property] was 'used for the purpose of lewdness, assignation, or prostitution," the [defendants'] plea of guilty to keeping a disorderly house is insufficient to permit the application of [D.C. Code § 22-2717]." Id. The court acknowledged that the DCCA in Raleigh v. United States had stated that "when a defendant has been found guilty of maintaining a bawdy or disorderly house in violation of 22-2722, the house in question must be deemed to be a nuisance per se which the trial court is compelled to abate." Id. at 973 (quoting Raleigh v. United States, 351 A.2d 510, 514 (D.C. 1976)). However, the court noted that the property at issue in Raleigh was used for "lewdness, assignation, or prostitution," and, furthermore, that the DCCA "did not have before it the question of whether a disorderly house not used for such purposes is the kind of nuisance referred to in [D.C. Code § 22-2717]." Id. The court stated that "we conclude that, if confronted with this question, the [DCCA] would hold that conviction for keeping a disorderly house under [D.C. Code § 22-2722] will require an abatement order pursuant to [D.C. Code § 22-2717] only if that house was used, at least in part, for the purposes described in [D.C. Code § 22-2713]." Id.

[75] Raleigh v. United States, 351 A.2d 510, 514 (D.C. 1976)).

[76] D.C. Code §§ 22-2716 (A party found guilty of contempt, under the provisions of this section, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $200 and not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01 or by imprisonment in the District Jail not less than three nor more than 6 months or by both fine and imprisonment."); 22-2717 ("If any person shall break and enter or use a building, erection, or place so directed to be closed such person shall be punished as for contempt, as provided in § 22-2716.").

[77] "Drug–Related Nuisance Abatement Act of 1998," 1998 District of Columbia Laws 12-194 (Act 12–470).

[78] "Nuisance Abatement Reform Amendment Act of 2006," 2006 District of Columbia Laws 16-81 (Act 16–267).

[79] "Community Impact Statement Amendment Act of 2010," 2010 District of Columbia Laws 18-259 (Act 18-446).

[80] Both the current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions and the current Title 42 nuisance provisions were used in a relatively recent United States District Court for the District of Columbia case. The government sought equitable relief under D.C. Code §§ 22-2713 through 22-2720 and D.C. Code §§ 42-3101 et seq. United States v. Prop. Identified as 1923 Rhode Island Ave. Ne., Washington, D.C., 522 F. Supp. 2d 204, 205 (D.D.C. 2007). The court did not discuss the apparent overlap between the two sets of nuisance provisions. The court noted that D.C. Code § 22-2714 "authorizes a special summary action in equity to abate and enjoin" a nuisance, and that D.C. Code § 42-3102 "authorizes an action to abate, enjoin, and prevent" a prostitution-related nuisance. 1923 Rhode Island Ave. Ne., 522 F. Supp. 2d at 208. The U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia's interpretation of a D.C. Code statute is not binding on the DCCA, but may be persuasive authority for the DCCA. See, e.g., Tyler v. United States, 705 A.2d 270, 277 n.14 (D.C. 1997) ("even though we may find persuasive a federal court's interpretation of District of Columbia or of similar federal law . . .").

It should be noted that the "special summary action in equity to abate and enjoin" a nuisance in D.C. Code § 22-2714 is limited to a preliminary injunction. D.C. Code § 22-2714 ("In such action [to perpetually enjoin a nuisance under D.C. Code § 22-2713], the court, or a judge in vacation, shall, upon the presentation of a petition therefor alleging that the nuisance complained of exists, allow a temporary writ of history on this issue. In contrast, the revised trafficking in commercial sex prostitution statute deletes the prostitution nuisance provisions in current D.C. Code §§ 22-2723 through 22-2720 and instead relies on the Title 42 nuisance provisions. To the extent that the current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions are used instead of the Title 42 nuisance provisions, this revision results in several changes to current District law.

First, the Title 42 nuisance provisions[81] do not apply to real property that is used for "lewdness" or "assignation" like the current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions do.[82] To the extent that the current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions apply to private, consensual sexual conduct that is not prostitution, they may infringe on constitutional rights.[83] Second, the Title 42 nuisance provisions apply to any "real injunction, without bond, if it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the court or judge by evidence in the form of affidavits, depositions, oral testimony, or otherwise, as the complainant may elect, unless the court or judge by previous order shall have directed the form and manner in which it shall be presented."). The preliminary injunction is automatically granted if the defendant moves to continue the hearing, and, in that sense, may be considered a special summary action. D.C. Code § 22-2714 ("Three days notice, in writing, shall be given the defendant of the hearing of the application, and if then continued at his instance the writ as prayed shall be granted as a matter of course."). D.C. Code § 22-2715 requires a trial for a permanent injunction and order of abatement under D.C. Code § 22-2717.

---

D.C. Code § 42-3104 allows for a temporary injunction against a prostitution-related nuisance, but does not appear to allow a temporary injunction to be entered summarily if the defendant moves for a continuance. D.C. Code § 42-3104 ("(a) Upon the filing of a complaint to abate the drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance, the court shall hold a hearing on the motion for a preliminary injunction, within 10 business days of the filing of such action. If it appears, by affidavit or otherwise, that there is a substantial likelihood that the plaintiff will be able to prove at trial that a drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance exists, the court may enter an order preliminarily enjoining the drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance and granting such other relief as the court may deem appropriate, including those remedies provided in § 42-3110. A plaintiff need not prove irreparable harm to obtain a preliminary injunction. Where appropriate, the court may order a trial of the action on the merits to be advanced and consolidated with the hearing on the motion for preliminary injunction. (b) This section shall not be construed to prohibit the application for or the granting of a temporary restraining order, or other equitable relief otherwise provided by law.").

[81] The Title 42 nuisance provisions apply to any "real property, in whole or part, used, or intended to be used, to facilitate prostitution . . . that has an adverse impact on the community," and any "real property, in whole or in part, used or intended to be used to facilitate any violation of §§ 22-2701, 22-2703, and 22-2723, § 22-2701.01, § 22-2704, §§ 22-2705 to 22-2712, and § 22-2722." D.C. Code § 42-3101(5)(B), (5)(C).

[82] The current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions apply to any "building, erection, or place used for the purposes of lewdness, assignation, or prostitution." D.C. Code § 22-2713. In contrast, the Title 42 nuisance provisions apply to any "real property, in whole or part, used, or intended to be used, to facilitate prostitution . . . that has an adverse impact on the community," and any "real property, in whole or in part, used or intended to be used to facilitate any violation of §§ 22-2701, 22-2703, and 22-2723, § 22-2701.01, § 22-2704, §§ 22-2705 to 22-2712, and § 22-2722." D.C. Code § 42-3101(5)(B), (5)(C). D.C. Code § 22-2710 and D.C. Code § 22-2711 prohibit procuring an individual for the purposes of "debauchery" or "other immoral" purposes, which may overlap with "lewdness" or "assignation." However, as is discussed elsewhere in this commentary, the revised version of these offenses in the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute (RCC § 22E-4403) are limited to procuring for purposes of "prostitution."

[83] "Lewdness" and "assignation" appear to extend the current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions to property that is used for private, consensual sexual conduct that is not prostitution. Although the terms are not statutorily defined, the DCCA has stated that "lewdness" "has been defined by the Supreme Court as 'that form of immorality which has relation to sexual impurity.'" Riley v. United States, 298 A.2d 228, 230 (D.C. 1972). There is no DCCA case law explaining the meaning of "assignation," but Black's Law Dictionary defines it as "[a]n appointment of a time and place to meet secretly, esp. for engaging in illicit property"[84] "used" or "intended to be used" for prostitution,[85] whereas current D.C. Code § 22-2713 is limited to any "building, erection, or place used for the purpose of prostitution."[86] Third, the Title 42 nuisance provisions do not extend to a prostitution-related nuisance that is established in a "criminal proceeding" as in current D.C. Code § 22-2720. Fourth, the Title 42 nuisance provisions do not punish the violation of a court order pertaining to a prostitution-related nuisance by three to six months' imprisonment as do the current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions.[87] Fifth, while both sets of nuisance provisions provide for a preliminary injunction,[88] a permanent injunction and sex." Assignation, Black's Law Dictionary (11th ed. 2019). The United States Supreme Court has made clear that public morality cannot justify a law that regulates private sexual conduct that does not relate to prostitution, potential for injury or coercion, or public conduct. See Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558 (2003) (concerning the right to homosexual intercourse and other nonprocreative sexual activity); Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965) (concerning marital privacy and contraceptives).

[84] The Title 42 nuisance provisions define "property" as "tangible real property, or any interest in real property, including an interest in any leasehold, license or real estate, such as any house, apartment building, condominium, cooperative, office building, storage, restaurant, tavern, nightclub, warehouse, park, median, and the land extending to the boundaries of the lot upon which such structure is situated, and anything growing on, affixed to, or found on the land."

[85] The Title 42 nuisance provisions will require conforming amendments to refer to the revised prostitution offenses in RCC §§ 22E-4401 through 22E-4403, which will affect the range of real property subject to the Title 42 nuisance provisions.

[86] D.C. Code § 22-2713.

[87] D.C. Code §§ 22-2716 (A party found guilty of contempt, under the provisions of this section, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $200 and not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01 or by imprisonment in the District Jail not less than three nor more than 6 months or by both fine and imprisonment."); 22-2717 ("If any person shall break and enter or use a building, erection, or place so directed to be closed such person shall be punished as for contempt, as provided in § 22-2716."). A violation of a court order "issued under" the Title 42 nuisance provisions is "punishable as a contempt of court." D.C. Code § 42-3112(a).

[88] D.C. Code §§ 22-2714 (". . . In such action the court, or a judge in vacation, shall, upon the presentation of a petition therefor alleging that the nuisance complained of exists, allow a temporary writ of injunction, without bond, if it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the court or judge by evidence in the form of affidavits, depositions, oral testimony, or otherwise, as the complainant may elect, unless the court or judge by previous order shall have directed the form and manner in which it shall be presented. Three days notice, in writing, shall be given the defendant of the hearing of the application, and if then continued at his instance the writ as prayed shall be granted as a matter of course . . ."); 42-3104(a) ("Upon the filing of a complaint to abate the drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance, the court shall hold a hearing on the motion for a preliminary injunction, within 10 business days of the filing of such action. If it appears, by affidavit or otherwise, that there is a substantial likelihood that the plaintiff will be able to prove at trial that a drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance exists, the court may enter an order preliminarily enjoining the drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance and granting such other relief as the court may deem appropriate, including those remedies provided in § 42-3110. . . .").

order of abatement,[89] and a procedure for vacating an order of abatement,[90] the procedural requirements vary in the Title 42 nuisance provisions as compared to the current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions,[91] as do the types of equitable relief.[92] This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statutes.

---

[89] D.C. Code §§ 22-2717 ("If the existence of the nuisance be established in an action as provided in §§ 22-2713 to 22-2720, or in a criminal proceeding, an order of abatement shall be entered as a part of the judgment in the case which order shall direct the removal from the building or place of all fixtures, furniture, musical instruments, or movable property used in conducting the nuisance, and shall direct the sale thereof in the manner provided for the sale of chattels under execution, and the effectual closing of the building or place against its use for any purpose, and so keeping it closed for a period of 1 year, unless sooner released. If any person shall break and enter or use a building, erection, or place so directed to be closed such person shall be punished as for contempt, as provided in § 22-2716."); 42-3110(a) ("If the existence of a drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance is found, the court shall enter an order permanently enjoining, abating, and preventing the continuance or recurrence of the nuisance. In order to effectuate fully the equitable remedy of abatement, such order may include damages as provided in § 42-3111. The court may grant declaratory relief or any other relief deemed necessary to accomplish the purposes of the judgment. The court may retain jurisdiction of the case for the purpose of enforcing its orders. A drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance is a nuisance per se requiring abatement as provided under subsection (b) of this section.").

[90] D.C. Code §§ 22-2719 ("If the owner appears and pays all costs of the proceeding and files a bond, with sureties to be approved by the clerk, in the full value of the property, to be ascertained by the court or, in vacation, by the Collector of Taxes of the District of Columbia, conditioned that such owner will immediately abate said nuisance and prevent the same from being established or kept within a period of 1 year thereafter, the court, or, in vacation, the judge, may, if satisfied of such owner's good faith, order the premises closed under the order of abatement to be delivered to said owner and said order of abatement canceled so far as the same may relate to said property; and if the proceeding be an action in equity and said bond be given and costs therein paid before judgment and order of abatement, the action shall be thereby abated as to said building only. The release of the property under the provisions of this section shall not release it from judgment, lien, penalty, or liability to which it may be subject by law.); 42-3112(c) ("Upon motion, the court may vacate an order or judgment of abatement if the owner of the property satisfies the court that the drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance has been abated for 90 days prior to the motion, corrects all housing code and health code violations on the property, and deposits a bond in an amount to be determined by the court, which shall be in an amount reasonably calculated to ensure continued abatement of the nuisance. Any bond posted under this subsection shall be forfeited immediately if the drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance recurs during the 2-year period following the date on which an order under this section is entered. At the close of 2 years following the date on which an order under this section is entered, the bond shall be returned.").

[91] For example, the Title 42 nuisance provisions require that the plaintiff must establish the existence of a nuisance by a preponderance of the evidence. D.C. Code § 42-3108 ("The plaintiff must establish that a drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance exists by a preponderance of the evidence. Once a reasonable attempt at notice is made pursuant to § 42-3103, the owner of the property shall be presumed to have knowledge of the drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance. A plaintiff is not required to make any further showing that the owner knew, or should have known, of the drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance to obtain relief under § 42-3110 or § 42-3111."). There is no such requirement specified in the current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions. D.C. Code §§ 22-2713 through 22-2720.

[92] For example, the current D.C. Code prostitution nuisance provisions specifically require the removal and sale of all "fixtures, furniture, musical instruments, or movable property used in conducting the nuisance." D.C. Code § 22-2717 ("an order of abatement shall be entered as a part of the judgment in the case which order shall direct the removal from the building or place of all fixtures, furniture, musical instruments, or movable property used in conducting the nuisance, and shall direct the sale thereof in the manner provided for the sale of chattels under execution . . . ."). The Title 42 nuisance provisions do not specifically allow for such a sale, but do grant the court broad powers to order equitable relief that may extend to such a sale. D.C. Code § 42-3110(b) ("Any order issued under this section may include the following relief: (1) Assessment of reasonable attorney fees and costs to the prevailing party; (2) Ordering the owner to make

Beyond these twelve changes to current District law, eight other aspects of the revised statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute does not include as a discrete basis of liability "arranging for" prostitution. Current D.C. Code § 22-2707 prohibits receiving anything of value "for or on account of arranging for . . . any individual to engage in prostitution."[93] "Arranging for prostitution" is defined in current D.C. Code § 22-2701.01, in part, as "any act to procure . . . or otherwise arrange for the purpose of prostitution."[94] It is unclear what conduct this definition covers beyond procuring an individual for prostitution. There is no DCCA case law interpreting the current D.C. Code definition of "arranging for prostitution." Resolving this ambiguity, paragraph (a)(2) of the revised trafficking in commercial sex statute prohibits knowingly receiving anything of value as a result of the prohibited conduct—causing, procuring, etc., a person to engage in or submit to a commercial sex act. The prohibited conduct encompasses what is ordinarily considered "arranging" for prostitution. This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Second, the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute limits liability for procuring to procuring a person for a "commercial sex act." Two of the current D.C. Code procuring statutes prohibit receiving anything of value for procuring an individual for "debauchery" or an "immoral" act or purpose, in addition to prostitution.[95] "Debauchery" and "immoral" are undefined statutorily and there is no DCCA case law interpreting these terms. It is unclear to what extent these terms refer to conduct other than prostitution. Resolving this ambiguity, the procuring provisions in the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute are limited to a "commercial sex act," as that term is defined in RCC § 22E-701. The United States Supreme Court has made clear that public morality cannot justify a law that regulates repairs upon the property; (3) Ordering the owner to make reasonable expenditures upon the property, including the installation of secure locks, hiring private security personnel, increasing lighting in common areas, and using videotaped surveillance of the property and adjacent alleys, sidewalks, or parking lots; (4) Ordering all rental income from the property to be placed in an escrow account with the court for up to 90 days or until the drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance is abated; (5) Ordering all rental income for the property transferred to a trustee, to be appointed by the court, who shall be empowered to use the rental income to make reasonable expenditures related to the property in order to abate the drug-, firearm-, or prostitution-related nuisance; (6) Ordering the property vacated, sealed, or demolished; or (7) Any other remedy which the court, in its discretion, deems appropriate.").

---

[93] D.C. Code § 22-2707.

[94] D.C. Code § 22-271.01(1). The full definition is "any act to procure or attempt to procure or otherwise arrange for the purpose of prostitution, regardless of whether such procurement or arrangement occurred or anything of value was given or received." The scope of the "attempt" language is unclear. To the extent the current D.C. Code definition of "arranging for prostitution" includes an attempted offense in current D.C. Code § 22-2707, the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute is limited to a completed offense. This is discussed elsewhere in this commentary as a substantive change in law.

[95] D.C. Code §§ 22-2710 ("Any person who, within the District of Columbia, shall . . . receive any money or other valuable thing for or on account of the procuring for, or placing in, a house of prostitution, for purposes of . . . prostitution, debauchery, or other immoral act, any individual . . . ."); 22-2711 ("Any person who, within the District of Columbia, shall receive any money or other valuable thing for or on account of procuring and placing in the charge or custody of another person for . . . prostitution, debauchery, or other immoral purposes any individual . . . .").

private sexual conduct that does not relate to prostitution, potential for injury or coercion, or public conduct.[96] To the extent that "debauchery" and "immoral" act or purpose refer to private sexual conduct other than prostitution, the current D.C. Code procuring statutes may be unconstitutional. This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Third, the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute clarifies that a promise for payment is sufficient for liability. The current D.C. Code definition of "prostitution" is "a sexual act or sexual contact with another person in exchange for giving or receiving anything of value."[97] The current D.C. Code pandering statute prohibits "causing" a person to engage in "prostitution,"[98] the current D.C. Code procuring for prostitution statute prohibits receiving anything of value for "arranging for or causing" a person to engage in "prostitution,"[99] and the current D.C. Code house of prostitution statute prohibits "furnishing" or "servicing" a place "for prostitution."[100] It is unclear whether "giving or receiving anything of value" in the current D.C. Code definition of "prostitution" limits these offenses to sexual activity when anything of value is given or received, or if sexual activity when there is promise to give or receive anything of value in the future is sufficient.[101] There is no DCCA case law on this issue. Resolving this ambiguity, the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute uses the RCC term "commercial sex act," defined in RCC § 22E-701 as "any sexual act or sexual contact on account of which or for which anything of value is given to, promised to, or received by any person." The definition makes clear that a promise for payment is sufficient for liability. This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised statutes and removes a possible gap in liability.

Fourth, the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute clarifies that payment can be given to, received, or promised to "any person." The current D.C. Code definition of "prostitution" is "a sexual act or sexual contact with another person in exchange for giving or receiving anything of value."[102] The current D.C. Code pandering statute prohibits [96] See Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558 (2003) (concerning the right to homosexual intercourse and other nonprocreative sexual activity); Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965) (concerning marital privacy and contraceptives).

---

[97] D.C. Code § 22-2701.01(3).

[98] D.C. Code § 22-2705(a)(2)(C) ("(a) It is unlawful for any person, within the District of Columbia to . . . (2) Cause, compel, induce, entice, or procure or attempt to cause, compel, induce, entice, or procure any individual . . . (C) To engage in prostitution.").

[99] D.C. Code § 22-2707(a) ("It is unlawful for any person, within the District of Columbia, to receive any money or other valuable thing for or on account of arranging for or causing any individual to engage in prostitution or a sexual act or contact."). The other current D.C. Code procuring statutes require procuring for "sexual intercourse, prostitution, debauchery, or other immoral [purposes]." D.C. Code §§ 22-2710 (procuring for a house of prostitution); 22-2711 (procuring for a third party). Even if the current D.C. Code definition of "prostitution" excludes a promise to pay for sexual activity, that sexual activity would likely fall under the other prohibited purposes in these statutes.

[100] D.C. Code § 22-2712.

[101] The current D.C. Code house of prostitution statute prohibits providing a place "for prostitution," and appears to be satisfied if prostitution does not occur, but is the purpose of a place. In this situation, it is similarly unclear whether the D.C. Code definition of "prostitution" limits the offense to a place where sexual activity may occur and payment is only promised. D.C. Code § § 22-2712

[102] D.C. Code § 22-2701.01(3).

"causing" a person to engage in "prostitution,"[103] the current D.C. Code procuring for prostitution statute prohibits receiving anything of value for "arranging for or causing" a person to engage in "prostitution,"[104] and the current D.C. Code operating a house of prostitution statute prohibits "furnishing" or "servicing" a place "for prostitution."[105] It is unclear whether the recipient of payment for the sexual activity[106] must be the person engaging in sexual activity for payment or if a third party, such as the owner of a prostitution business, would be sufficient.[107] There is no DCCA case law on this issue. Resolving this ambiguity, the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute uses the RCC term "commercial sex act," defined in RCC § 22E-701 as "any sexual act or sexual contact on account of which or for which anything of value is given to, promised to, or received by any person." This language clarifies that the recipient or promised recipient of payment can either be the individual engaging in the sexual activity for payment or a third party. This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised statutes and removes a possible gap in liability.

Fifth, the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute requires a "knowingly" culpable mental state for the prohibited conduct in subparagraph (a)(2)(A)—receiving anything of value as a result of causing, procuring, etc., a person to engage in or submit to a commercial sex act with or for another person. The current D.C. Code pandering[108] and procuring[109] statutes do not specify any culpable mental states. However, the current D.C. Code operating a house of prostitution statute specifies a culpable mental state of [103] D.C. Code § 22-2705(a)(2)(C) ("(a) It is unlawful for any person, within the District of Columbia to . . . (2) Cause, compel, induce, entice, or procure or attempt to cause, compel, induce, entice, or procure any individual . . . (C) To engage in prostitution.").

---

[104] D.C. Code § 22-2707(a) ("It is unlawful for any person, within the District of Columbia, to receive any money or other valuable thing for or on account of arranging for or causing any individual to engage in prostitution or a sexual act or contact."). The other current D.C. Code procuring statutes require procuring for "sexual intercourse, prostitution, debauchery, or other immoral [purposes]." D.C. Code §§ 22-2710 (procuring for a house of prostitution); 22-2711 (procuring for a third party). Even if the current D.C. Code definition of "prostitution" excludes sexual activity based upon the recipient of payment, that sexual activity would likely fall under the other prohibited purposes in these statutes.

[105] D.C. Code § 22-2712.

[106] The current D.C. Code procuring statutes require that the defendant receive anything of value for causing prostitution or procuring for purposes of prostitution. D.C. Code §§ 22-2707(a) ("It is unlawful for any person, within the District of Columbia, to receive any money or other valuable thing for or on account of arranging for or causing any individual to engage in prostitution or a sexual act or contact."); 22-2710 ("Any person who, within the District of Columbia, shall pay or receive any money or other valuable thing for or on account of the procuring for, or placing in, a house of prostitution, for purposes of sexual intercourse, prostitution . . . ."); 22-2711 ("Any person who, within the District of Columbia, shall receive any money or other valuable thing for or on account of procuring and placing in the charge or custody of another person for sexual intercourse, prostitution . . . ."). However this requirement is independent of whether the sexual activity satisfies the current D.C. Code definition of "prostitution"— a sexual act or sexual contact with another person in exchange for giving or receiving anything of value."

[107] The current D.C. Code house of prostitution statute prohibits providing a place "for prostitution," and appears to be satisfied if prostitution does not occur, but is the purpose of a place. In this situation, it is similarly unclear whether the D.C. Code definition of "prostitution" limits the offense to a place where sexual activity may occur and the recipient of payment is a person other than the individual engaging in the sexual activity.

[108] D.C. Code § 22-2705.

[109] D.C. Code §§ 22-2707; 22-2710; 22-2711.

"knowingly,"[110] which is codified in paragraph (a)(3) of the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute. There is no DCCA case law interpreting the required mental states, if any, for the current D.C. Code pandering and procuring statutes. Resolving this ambiguity, the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute requires a "knowingly" culpable mental state for the prohibited conduct in subparagraph (a)(2)(A)—receiving anything of value as a result of causing, procuring, etc., a person to engage in or submit to a commercial sex act with or for another person. Requiring, at a minimum, a knowing culpable mental state for the elements of an offense that make otherwise legal conduct illegal is a generally accepted legal principle.[111] This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised statutes.

Sixth, the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute requires a "knowingly" culpable mental state for the prohibited conduct in subparagraph (a)(2)(B)—receiving anything of value as a result of providing or maintaining a location for a person to engage in or submit to a commercial sex act. The current D.C. Code keeping a disorderly house or bawdy house statute[112] ("bawdy house statute) does not specify any culpable mental states. DCCA case law for the current bawdy house statute requires that the defendant "know or should know" of the commission of the prohibited activities and "does nothing to prevent them."[113] There is no further discussion of the meaning of "know or should know" in this case law. Resolving this ambiguity, the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute requires a "knowingly" culpable mental state for the prohibited conduct in subparagraph (a)(2)(B)—receiving anything of value as a result of providing or maintaining a location for a person to engage in or submit to a commercial sex act. The "knowingly" culpable mental state as defined in RCC § 22E-206 may be a higher culpable mental state than "should know" that is sufficient under DCCA case law. However, the scope of the RCC offense is narrower—the defendant must knowingly receive anything of value "as a result" of providing the premises. The civil nuisance and abatement provisions in D.C. Code §§ 42-3101 provide a remedy when an individual merely "should know" that premises he or she owns or maintains are being used for a commercial sex act, and are discussed elsewhere in this commentary. Requiring, at a minimum, a knowing culpable mental state for the elements of an offense that make otherwise legal conduct illegal is a generally accepted legal principle.[114] This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised statutes.

---

[110] D.C. Code § 22-2712 ("Any person who, within the District of Columbia, knowingly, shall accept, receive, levy, or appropriate any money or other valuable thing, without consideration other than the furnishing of a place for prostitution or the servicing of a place for prostitution, from the proceeds or earnings of any individual engaged in prostitution shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 5 years and by a fine of not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01.").

[111] Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2010, 192 L.Ed.2d 1 (2015).

[112] D.C. Code § 22-2722.

[113] Harris v. United States, 315 A.2dc 569, 575 (D.C. 1974) (" In summary, to constitute the offense of keeping a bawdy or disorderly house under D.C. Code 1973, s 22-2722, the government must prove that acts take place on the premises that disturb the public or constitute a nuisance per se in the nature of a gambling house or bawdy house; that the premises are regularly resorted to for the commission of these acts; and, that the proprietor knows or should know of the acts and does nothing to prevent them.").

[114] Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2010, 192 L.Ed.2d 1 (2015).

Seventh, paragraph (a)(3) of the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute requires a "knowingly" culpable mental state for the prohibited conduct in paragraph (a)(3) regarding obtaining anything of value from the proceeds or earnings of a commercial sex act a person has engaged in or submitted to, without consideration or when the consideration is providing or maintaining a location for a commercial sex act. The current D.C. Code house of prostitution statute specifies a culpable mental state of "knowingly," making it unlawful to "knowingly . . . accept, receive, levy, or appropriate any money or other valuable thing, without consideration other than the furnishing of a place for prostitution or the servicing of a place for prostitution, from the proceeds or earnings of any individual engaged in prostitution."[115] It is unclear, however, if the mental state applies to all of the elements of the offense, or if it is limited to "accept, receive, levy, or appropriate any money or other valuable thing." There is no DCCA case law on this issue. Resolving this ambiguity, the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute requires a culpable mental state for all elements in paragraph (a)(3). Requiring, at a minimum, a knowing culpable mental state for the elements of an offense that make otherwise legal conduct illegal is a generally accepted legal principle.[116] This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised statutes.

Eighth, the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute does not require that the sexual activity be "with another person." The current D.C. Code pandering,[117] procuring,[118] and house of prostitution[119] statutes incorporate the current D.C. Code definition of "prostitution"—a "sexual act or contact with another person in return for

[115] D.C. Code § 22-2712.
[116] Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2010, 192 L.Ed.2d 1 (2015).
[117] D.C. Code § 22-2705(a)(2)(C) (pandering statute prohibiting causing a person to "engage in prostitution.").
[118] D.C. Code §§ 22-2707(a) ("It is unlawful for any person, within the District of Columbia, to receive any money or other valuable thing for or on account of arranging for or causing any individual to engage in prostitution or a sexual act or contact."); 22-2710 ("Any person who, within the District of Columbia, shall pay or receive any money or other valuable thing for or on account of the procuring for, or placing in, a house of prostitution, for purposes of . . . prostitution . . . ."); 22-2711 ("Any person who, within the District of Columbia, shall receive any money or other valuable thing for or on account of procuring and placing in the charge or custody of another person for . . . prostitution . . . .").
[119] D.C. Code § 22-2712 ("Any person who, within the District of Columbia, knowingly, shall accept, receive, levy, or appropriate any money or other valuable thing, without consideration other than the furnishing of a place for prostitution or the servicing of a place for prostitution, from the proceeds or earnings of any individual engaged in prostitution shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 5 years and by a fine of not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01.").

giving or receiving anything of value."[120] The current D.C. Code[121] and RCC[122] definitions of "sexual act" and "sexual contact" include masturbation. However, the current statutes' "with another person" requirement may narrow the offense to exclude a prostitute engaging in or soliciting to engage in masturbation because masturbation is not "with another person." Alternatively, the current pandering, procuring, and house of prostitution statutes could be interpreted to include a prostitute engaging in or soliciting to engage in masturbation "with another person," if the latter phrase is construed to mean "for another person to watch." To resolve this ambiguity, the revised statute does not require that the sexual activity be "with another person." Masturbation in exchange for anything of value is within the scope of the revised statute. This change improves the clarity, and may improve the proportionality, of the revised statutes.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

First, the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute does not include as a discrete basis of liability causing a person to reside in a house of prostitution or with another person for the purposes of prostitution. The current D.C. Code pandering statute prohibits placing an individual in a "house of prostitution" with intent that the individual engage in prostitution,[123] causing an individual to "reside or continue to reside in a house of prostitution,"[124] or to "reside with any other person for the purpose of prostitution."[125] Current D.C. Code § 22-2710 prohibits paying or receiving anything of value for placing a person in a "house of prostitution."[126] There is no DCCA case law interpreting these

[120] D.C. Code § 22-2701.01(3).
[121] D.C. Code §§ 22-2701.01(5), (6) (adopting the definition of "sexual act" in D.C. Code § 22-3001(8) and the definition of "sexual contact" in D.C. Code § 22-3001(9) for the prostitution or solicitation statute in D.C. Code § 22-2701); 22-3001(8) (defining "sexual act" as "(A) The penetration, however slight, of the anus or vulva of another by a penis; (B) Contact between the mouth and the penis, the mouth and the vulva, or the mouth and the anus; or (C) The penetration, however slight, of the anus or vulva by a hand or finger or by any object, with an intent to abuse, humiliate, harass, degrade, or arouse or gratify the sexual desire of any person. (D) The emission of semen is not required for the purposes of subparagraphs (A)-(C) of this paragraph."); 22-3001(9) (defining "sexual contact" as "the touching with any clothed or unclothed body part or any object, either directly or through the clothing, of the genitalia, anus, groin, breast, inner thigh, or buttocks of any person with an intent to abuse, humiliate, harass, degrade, or arouse or gratify the sexual desire of any person.").
[122] RCC § 22E-701.
[123] D.C. Code § 22-2705(a)(1) ("(a) It is unlawful for any person, within the District of Columbia to: (1) Place or cause, induce, entice, procure, or compel the placing of any individual . . . in a house of prostitution, with intent that such individual shall engage in prostitution.").
[124] D.C. Code § 22-2705(a)(2)(B) ("(a) It is unlawful for any person, within the District of Columbia to: . . . (2) Cause, compel, induce, entice, or procure or attempt to cause, compel, induce, entice, or procure any individual . . . (B) To reside or continue to reside in a house of prostitution.").
[125] D.C. Code § 22-2705(a)(2)(A) ("(a) It is unlawful for any person, within the District of Columbia to: . . . (2) Cause, compel, induce, entice, or procure or attempt to cause, compel, induce, entice, or procure any individual: (A) To reside with any other person for the purpose of prostitution.").
[126] D.C. Code § 22-2710 ("Any person who, within the District of Columbia, shall pay or receive any money or other valuable thing for or on account of the procuring for, or placing in, a house of prostitution, for purposes of sexual intercourse, prostitution, debauchery, or other immoral act, any individual, shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 5 years and by a fine of not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01.").

provisions. The RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute replaces reference to a "house of prostitution" and residing for purposes of prostitution with the conduct prohibited under paragraphs (a)(1) and (a)(2). This change improves the clarity of the revised statutes without changing current District law.

Second, the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute does not include as a discrete basis of liability causing the placement of or placing an individual in the "charge or custody" of a third person. The current D.C. Code pandering statute prohibits causing the placing of an individual in "the charge or custody of any other person" with intent that the individual engage in prostitution[127] and current D.C. Code § 22-2711 prohibits receiving anything of value for "for or on account of procuring and placing in the charge and custody of another person" for prostitution.[128] There is no DCCA case law interpreting these provisions. The RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute replaces reference to a "house of prostitution" and residing for purposes of prostitution with the conduct prohibited under paragraphs (a)(1) and (a)(2). This change improves the clarity of the revised statutes without changing current District law.

Third, the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute no longer prohibits receiving anything of value for procuring an individual to engage in a "sexual act" or "sexual contact"[129] or for purposes of "sexual intercourse."[130] This language is unnecessary given the RCC definition of "commercial sex act" in RCC § 22-701[131] and deleting it does not change current District law. This change improves the clarity of the revised statutes without changing current District law.

Fourth, the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute does not include as a discrete basis of liability paying to obtain an individual for a house of prostitution. Current D.C. Code § 22-2710 prohibits "pay[ing]" for "the procuring for, or placing in, a house of [127] D.C. Code § 22-2705(a)(1) ("(a) It is unlawful for any person, within the District of Columbia to: (1) Place or cause, induce, entice, procure, or compel the placing of any individual in the charge or custody of any other person . . . with intent that such individual shall engage in prostitution.").

[128] D.C. Code § 22-2711 ("Any person who, within the District of Columbia, shall receive any money or other valuable thing for or on account of procuring and placing in the charge or custody of another person for sexual intercourse, prostitution, debauchery, or other immoral purposes any individual shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 5 years and by a fine of not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01.").

[129] D.C. Code §§ 22-2707(a) ("It is unlawful for any person, within the District of Columbia, to receive any money or other valuable thing for or on account of arranging for or causing any individual to engage in prostitution or a sexual act or contact.").

[130] D.C. Code §§ 22-2710 ("Any person who, within the District of Columbia, shall . . . receive any money or other valuable thing for or on account of the procuring for, or placing in, a house of prostitution, for purposes of sexual intercourse, prostitution . . . ."); 22-2711 ("Any person who, within the District of Columbia, shall receive any money or other valuable thing for or on account of procuring and placing in the charge or custody of another person for sexual intercourse, prostitution . . . .").

[131] Subparagraph (a)(2)(A) of the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute prohibits receiving anything of value as a result of causing, procuring, etc., an individual to engage in or submit to a "commercial sex act." RCC § 22E-701 defines "commercial sex act" as a "sexual act or sexual contact for which anything of value is given to, promised to, or received by any person." By receiving anything of value for causing, etc., a person to engage in sexual activity, the defendant satisfies the RCC definition of "commercial sex act."

prostitution for purposes of sexual intercourse [or] prostitution . . . any individual."[132] In the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute, subparagraph (a)(1)(A) or subparagraph (a)(1)(B) would provide liability for this conduct. This change improves the clarity of the revised statutes without changing current District law.

Fifth, the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute prohibits receiving anything of value "as a result of" causing, procuring, etc., a person for a commercial sex act with or for another person, or providing or maintaining a location for this purpose. The current D.C. Code procuring for prostitution statute prohibits receiving anything of value "for or on account of" arranging for or causing an individual for prostitution.[133] There is no DCCA case law interpreting this "on account of" language. The phrase "as a result of" clarifies that there must be a nexus between the receipt of anything of value and the prohibited conduct and is not intended to change current District law.

Sixth, the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute specifically prohibits conduct that "provides" or "recruits" a person to engage in or submit to a commercial sex act. The current D.C. Code pandering statute[134] and procuring for prostitution statutes[135] appear to extend to this conduct through use of a variety of verbs, but do not specifically use the terms "provides" or "recruits." Adding the verbs "provides" and "recruits" aligns the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute with the verbs RCC human trafficking statutes in RCC Chapter 16 without substantively changing current law. This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised statutes.

Seventh, the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute does not include as a discrete means of liability conduct that "induces" a person to engage in or submit to a commercial sex act. The current D.C. Code pandering statute prohibits, in relevant part, "induc[ing]" any individual to engage in prostitution.[136] There is no DCCA case law interpreting the meaning of this "inducing" language. The RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute prohibits "causes, procures, provides, recruits, or entices" a person to engage in or submit to a commercial sex act, which includes conduct ordinarily covered by the verb "inducing." Removing the verb "induc[ing]" aligns the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute with the verbs RCC human trafficking statutes in RCC Chapter 16 without substantively changing current law. This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised statutes.

---

[132] D.C. Code §§ 22-2710 ("Any person who, within the District of Columbia, shall pay or receive any money or other valuable thing for or on account of the procuring for, or placing in, a house of prostitution, for purposes of sexual intercourse, prostitution . . . ."); 22-2711 ("Any person who, within the District of Columbia, shall receive any money or other valuable thing for or on account of procuring and placing in the charge or custody of another person for sexual intercourse, prostitution . . . .").

[133] D.C. Code § 22-2707(a).

[134] D.C. Code § 22-2705(a)(2)(C) (pandering statute prohibiting, in part, "[c]ause, compel, induce, entice, or procure" an individual to engage in prostitution).

[135] D.C. Code §§ 22-2707 (procuring statute prohibiting receiving anything of value "for or on account of arranging for or causing any individual to engage in prostitution."); 22-2710 (procuring statute prohibiting paying or receiving anything of value "for or on account of the . . . placing in, a house of prostitution . . . any individual" for purposes of prostitution); 22-2711 (procuring statute prohibiting receiving anything of value "for or on account of procuring and placing in the charge or custody of another person" for prostitution).

[136] D.C. Code § 22-2705(a)(2)(C).

Eighth, paragraph (a)(3) of the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute makes four clarificatory changes to the current D.C. Code house of prostitution statute. First, paragraph (a)(3) of the revised statute prohibits "obtains" anything of value, as opposed to "accept, receive, levy, or appropriate" anything of value in the current D.C. Code house of prostitution statute. "Obtains" is clearer language and is intended to encompass accepting, receiving, levying, and appropriating. Adding the verb "obtains" also aligns the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute with the verbs RCC human trafficking statutes in RCC Chapter 16 without substantively changing current law. Second, paragraph (a)(3) refers to "anything of value" instead of "any money or other valuable thing,"[137] consistent with the other provisions in the revised statute. Third, paragraph (a)(3) refers to "providing or maintaining" a location for a commercial sex act, as opposed to "furnishing" or "servicing."[138] "Providing" and "maintaining" are clearer language and are intended to encompass "furnishing or servicing." Adding the verbs "provides" and "maintains" also aligns the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute with the verbs RCC human trafficking statutes in RCC Chapter 16 without substantively changing current law. Fourth, paragraph (a)(3) clarifies that the proceeds or earnings must be from a commercial sex act that a person has engaged in or submitted to. The current D.C. Code house of prostitution statute refers to "from the proceeds or earnings of any individual engaged in prostitution."[139] Paragraph (a)(3) clarifies that the proceeds or earnings must be from a commercial sex act, as opposed to any earnings or money of a person that engages in prostitution, regardless of the source. These changes improve the clarity and consistency of the revised statutes.

Ninth, the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute prohibits causing, etc., a person to "engage in or submit to" a commercial sex act (subparagraphs (a)(1)(A) and (a)(2)(A)), or providing or maintaining a location for a person to "engage in or submit to" a commercial sex act (subparagraphs (a)(1)(B) or (a)(2)(B)). Similarly, subparagraph (a)(3) refers to a person who has "engaged in or submitted to" a commercial sexual act. The current D.C. Code pandering statute prohibits causing a person to "engage" in prostitution[140] and the current D.C. Code procuring statutes prohibit either causing a person to "engage" in prostitution[141] or procure "for" prostitution.[142] The use of the phrase "engage in or submit to" aligns the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute with the verbs RCC sex offense statutes in RCC Chapter 13 without substantively changing current law. This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised statutes.

---

[137] D.C. Code § 22-2712.
[138] D.C. Code § 22-2712.
[139] D.C. Code § 22-2712.
[140] D.C. Code § 22-2705(a)(2)(C).
[141] D.C. Code § 22-2707(a) ("It is unlawful for any person, within the District of Columbia, to receive any money or other valuable thing for or on account of arranging for or causing any individual to engage in prostitution or a sexual act or contact.").
[142] D.C. Code §§ 22-2710 ("Any person who, within the District of Columbia, shall pay or receive any money or other valuable thing for or on account of the procuring for, or placing in, a house of prostitution, for purposes of sexual intercourse, prostitution . . . ."); 22-2711 ("Any person who, within the District of Columbia, shall receive any money or other valuable thing for or on account of procuring and placing in the charge or custody of another person for sexual intercourse, prostitution . . . .").

Tenth, the revised trafficking in commercial sex statute replaces references to "money or other valuable thing" in the current D.C. Code procuring statutes[143] with "anything of value" through the statute's use of the RCC definition of "commercial sex act." This clarifies the revised statute without changing current District law.

Eleventh, the revised trafficking in commercial sex statute is no longer subject to the definition of "anything of value" in D.C. Code § 22-1802 that applies to the current D.C. Code pandering,[144] procuring,[145] and house of prostitution[146] statutes.[147] Current D.C. Code § 22-1802 states that "anything of value" "shall be held to include not only things possessing intrinsic value, but bank notes and other forms of paper money, and commercial paper and other writings which represent value."[148] This definition is unnecessary, and not explicitly specifying that money and commercial paper is included within "anything of value" in the revised offense is not intended to change current District law.

Twelfth, the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute deletes the requirement in the current D.C. Code pandering,[149] procuring,[150] house of prostitution,[151] and keeping a disorderly or bawdy house[152] statutes that the offense occur in the "District" or the "District of Columbia." This language is surplusage and deleting it does not change current District law.

[143] D.C. Code §§ 22-2707(a) ("It is unlawful for any person, within the District of Columbia, to receive any money or other valuable thing."); 22-2710 ("Any person who, within the District of Columbia, shall pay or receive any money or other valuable thing."); 22-2711 ("Any person who, within the District of Columbia, shall receive any money or other valuable thing.").
[144] D.C. Code § 22-2705.
[145] D.C. Code §§ 22-2707; 22-2710; 22-2711.
[146] D.C. Code § 22-2712.
[147] The current D.C. Code pandering (D.C. Code § 22-2705), procuring (D.C. Code §§ 22-2707; 22-2710; 22-2711), and house of prostitution (D.C. Code § 22-2712) statutes incorporate the current D.C. Code definition of "prostitution," which requires "anything of value." D.C. Code § 22-2701.01(a)(3).
[148] D.C. Code § 22-1802.
[149] D.C. Code § 22-2705(a).
[150] D.C. Code §§ 22-2707(a); 22-2710; 22-2711.
[151] D.C. Code § 22-2712.
[152] D.C. Code § 22-2722.

RCC § 22E-4404. Civil Forfeiture.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes civil forfeiture rules for conveyances and money that are intended to be used, or are used, in violation of the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute.[1] All seizures and forfeitures under this section shall be pursuant to D.C. Law 20-278. The revised statute replaces the current forfeiture statute applicable to prostitution and related offenses[2] and provisions for vehicle impoundment[3] and the Anti-Prostitution Vehicle Impoundment Proceeds Fund.[4]

Subsection (a) establishes the types of property that are subject to civil forfeiture under the revised statute. Paragraph (a)(1) applies to any property that is, in fact, a conveyance, including aircraft, vehicles, or vessels. "In fact" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-207 that indicates there is no culpable mental state for a given element. Here, "in fact" means that there is no culpable mental state required for the fact that the property is a conveyance. There are two alternative bases for forfeiture of a conveyance in paragraph (a)(1). The first requires that the conveyance is possessed with intent to facilitate commission of the RCC trafficking in commercial sex offense (RCC § 22E-4403). "Possess" is defined in RCC § 22E-701 as either to "hold or carry on one's person" or to "have the ability and desire to exercise control over." "Intent" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-206 that here means a person was practically certain that a conveyance would be used to facilitate commission of the RCC trafficking in commercial sex offense (RCC § 22E-4403). Per RCC § 22E-205, the object of the phrase "with intent to" is not an objective element that requires separate proof—only the person's culpable mental state must be proven regarding the object of this phrase. It is not necessary to prove that the conveyance was used to facilitate commission of an RCC human trafficking offense, just that a person believed to a practical certainty that a conveyance would be so used. Applying the RCC definition of "intent" does not change the mental state requirements for forfeiture in D.C. Law 20-278.[5]

The alternative basis for forfeiture of a conveyance in paragraph (a)(1) is a conveyance which is, "in fact," used to facilitate the commission of the RCC trafficking in commercial sex offense (RCC § 22E-4403). "In fact" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-207 that indicates there is no culpable mental state for a given element. Here, "in fact" means that there is no culpable mental state required for the fact that the conveyance was used to facilitate the commission of the RCC trafficking in commercial sex offense (RCC § 22E-4403). Applying strict liability does not change the mental state requirements for forfeiture in D.C. Law 20-278.[6]

---

[1] RCC § 22E-4403.
[2] D.C. Code § 22-2723.
[3] D.C. Code § 22-2724.
[4] D.C. Code § 22-2725.
[5] This issue is discussed in detail later in the commentary to this revised statute.
[6] See, e.g., D.C. Code § 41-302(b) ("No property shall be subject to forfeiture by reason of an act or omission committed or omitted without the actual knowledge and consent of the owner, unless the owner was willfully blind to the knowledge of the act or omission.").

Paragraph (a)(2) applies to any property that is, "in fact," money, coins, and currency. "In fact" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-207 that indicates there is no culpable mental state for a given element. Here, "in fact" means that there is no culpable mental state required for the fact that the property is money, coins, or currency. There are two alternative bases for forfeiture of money, coins, and currency in paragraph (a)(2). The first requires that the money, coins, or currency are possessed with intent to facilitate commission of the RCC trafficking in commercial sex offense (RCC § 22E-4403). "Possess" is defined in RCC § 22E-701 as either to "hold or carry on one's person" or to "have the ability and desire to exercise control over." The culpable mental state requirement of "intent" and the strict liability requirements of "in fact" are the same in paragraph (a)(2) as they are in paragraph (a)(1).

The alternative basis for forfeiture of money, coins, or currency in paragraph (a)(2) is if it is, "in fact," used to facilitate the commission of the RCC trafficking in commercial sex offense (RCC § 22E-4403). "In fact" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-207 that indicates there is no culpable mental state for a given element. Here, "in fact" means that there is no culpable mental state required for the fact that the money, coins or currency were used to facilitate the commission of the RCC trafficking in commercial sex offense (RCC § 22E-4403). Applying strict liability does not change the mental state requirements for forfeiture in D.C. Law 20-278.[7]

Paragraph (b) establishes that the seizures and forfeitures under this section shall be pursuant to the standards and procedures set forth in D.C. Law 20-278.

Subsection (c) cross-references applicable definitions located elsewhere in the RCC.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised forfeiture statute clearly changes District law in two main ways.

First, the revised prostitution forfeiture statute is limited to the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute. The current D.C. Code prostitution forfeiture provision applies to a "prostitution-related offense."[8] "Prostitution-related offenses" is defined to include all prostitution offenses in the current D.C. Code, including the misdemeanor offenses of prostitution and solicitation for prostitution.[9] In contrast, the RCC limits the prostitution forfeiture provision to the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute and no longer uses the terms "prostitution-related offense" or "prostitution-related offenses." Forfeiture of a vehicle or money used in furtherance of prostitution or solicitation is a disproportionate penalty for otherwise very low-level conduct, and in some instances may violate the Excessive Fines Clause of the U.S. Constitution as the DCCA held under an earlier version of the prostitution forfeiture statute.[10] However, a vehicle or money used to violate the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute (RCC § 22E-4403) remains subject to forfeiture under RCC § 22E-4404 because the statute targets "pimps" and owners of prostitution businesses. This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised statutes.

[7] See, e.g., D.C. Code § 41-302(b) ("No property shall be subject to forfeiture by reason of an act or omission committed or omitted without the actual knowledge and consent of the owner, unless the owner was willfully blind to the knowledge of the act or omission.").
[8] D.C. Code § 22-2723.
[9] D.C. Code § 22-2701.01(4) (defining "prostitution-related offenses" as "those crimes and offenses defined in this subchapter.").

Second, the revised prostitution forfeiture provision applies to money, coins, and currency which are used, or intended to be used, "to facilitate commission" of the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute. The current D.C. Code prostitution forfeiture statute applies to conveyances that are used, or intended to be used, "to facilitate a violation" of the current D.C. Code prostitution statutes[11] and to currency that is used, or intended to be used, "in violation" of the current D.C. Code prostitution statutes.[12] "In violation" appears to be narrower than "to facilitate a violation," but there is no DCCA case law on this issue. In contrast, the revised prostitution forfeiture provision applies to currency that is used, or intended to be used, "to facilitate the commission of" of the RCC trafficking in commercial sex statute, which is consistent with the scope of conveyances subject to forfeiture. It is inconsistent to include in forfeiture conveyances that are used, or intended to be used, "to facilitate a violation" of a prostitution offense, but to limit forfeiture of currency to currency that is used, or intended to be used "in violation" of a prostitution offense. This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statute.

Beyond these two changes to current District law, two other aspects of the revised statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the RCC definition of "intent to" applies to the revised forfeiture provision. The current D.C. Code prostitution forfeiture provision applies to conveyances and money that are "intended for use" in a prostitution offense.[13] The meaning of "intended to" is unclear and there is no DCCA case law on this issue.[14] Resolving this ambiguity, the revised prostitution forfeiture provision applies the RCC definition of "intent" in RCC § 22E-206. "Intent" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-206 that here means the actor was [10] This case, One 1995 Toyota Pick-Up Truck v. District of Columbia, 718 A.2d 558 (D.C. 1998) is discussed in detail in the commentaries to the RCC prostitution and RCC patronizing prostitution statutes.

[11] D.C. Code Ann. § 22-2723(a)(1) ("(a) The following are subject to forfeiture: (1) All conveyances, including aircraft, vehicles or vessels, which are used, or intended for use, to transport, or in any manner to facilitate a violation of a prostitution-related offense.").
[12] D.C. Code Ann. § 22-2723(a)(2) ("(a) The following are subject to forfeiture: . . . (2) All money, coins, and currency which are used, or intended for use, in violation of a prostitution-related offense.").
[13] D.C. Code § 22-2723(a)(1), (a)(2).
[14] The words "intended to" as used in the current prostitution forfeiture statute may refer to what was commonly known as "specific intent." However, even if this is the case, current District case law is unclear as to whether "specific intent" may be satisfied by mere knowledge, or if conscious desire is required. Compare, Logan v. United States, 483 A.2d 664, 671 (D.C. 1984) (""[a] specific intent to kill exists when a person acts with the purpose . . . of causing the death of another,") with Peoples v. United States, 640 A.2d 1047, 1055-56 (D.C. 1994) (proof that the appellant, who set fire to a building "knew" people inside a would suffer injuries sufficient to infer that the appellant "had the requisite specific intent to support his convictions of malicious disfigurement").

practically certain that the property would be used in a prostitution offense.[15] Applying the RCC definition of "intent" does not change the mental state requirements for forfeiture in D.C. Law 20-278.[16] This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Second, the RCC establishes that strict liability is a distinct basis for the forfeiture of property. The current D.C. Code prostitution forfeiture provision applies to conveyances and money that are "are used" in a prostitution offense.[17] It is unclear whether "are used" applies strict liability. There is no DCCA case law on this issue. Resolving this ambiguity, the revised prostitution forfeiture provision, by use of the phrase "in fact," clarifies that strict liability is a distinct basis for the forfeiture of property. Applying strict liability does not change the mental state requirements for forfeiture in D.C. Law 20-278.[18] This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

First, the revised forfeiture provision deletes the language "to transport." The current D.C. Code prostitution forfeiture provision includes "[a]ll conveyances, including aircraft, vehicles, or vessels, which are used, or intended for use, to transport, or in any manner to facilitate a violation of a prostitution-related offense." The term "conveyances" sufficiently communicates an object designed to transport. The verb "to transport" is unnecessary and deleting it improves the clarity of the revised statutes.

Second, the revised forfeiture provision deletes the language "in any manner." The current D.C. Code prostitution forfeiture provision includes "[a]ll conveyances, including aircraft, vehicles, or vessels, which are used, or intended for use, to transport, or in any

---

[15] Relying on the RCC definition of "intent" may produce an additional change in current District law. Under the RCC, the "intent" mental state may be satisfied by knowledge of a circumstance or result. The RCC also provides that knowledge of a circumstance may be imputed if a person is reckless as to whether the circumstance exists, and with the purpose of avoiding criminal liability, avoids confirming or fails to investigate whether the circumstance exists. Applied to this forfeiture provision, if an owner does not know that property is to be used to violate the trafficking in forced commercial sex offense, but was reckless as to this fact, and avoided investigating whether this circumstance exists in order to avoid criminal liability, the imputation rule may allow a fact finder to impute knowledge to the owner. It is unclear under current District law whether a similar rule of imputation would apply. Current D.C. Code § 41-306 states that "[n]o property shall be subject to forfeiture by reason of an act or omission committed or omitted without the actual knowledge and consent of the owner, unless the owner was willfully blind to the knowledge of the act or omission." However, this provision applies when an actual act or omission is the basis for forfeiture. It is unclear whether an owner's willful blindness as to intended uses of property still authorizes civil forfeiture. If this provision does apply even when property has not yet been used, the term "willfully blind" is undefined, and it is unclear how it differs from the deliberate ignorance provision under the RCC.

[16] See, e.g., D.C. Code § 41-302(b) ("No property shall be subject to forfeiture by reason of an act or omission committed or omitted without the actual knowledge and consent of the owner, unless the owner was willfully blind to the knowledge of the act or omission.").

[17] D.C. Code § 22-2723(a)(1), (a)(2).

[18] See, e.g., D.C. Code § 41-302(b) ("No property shall be subject to forfeiture by reason of an act or omission committed or omitted without the actual knowledge and consent of the owner, unless the owner was willfully blind to the knowledge of the act or omission.").

manner to facilitate a violation of a prostitution-related offense."[19] "To facilitate" is sufficiently broad to encompass all methods of facilitation, particularly since the revised statute, as is discussed above, no longer specifies "to transport." Deleting "in any manner" improves the clarity of the revised statutes.

Third, the revised forfeiture provision deletes the term "property." The current D.C. Code prostitution forfeiture provision states that "All seizures and forfeitures of property under this section shall be pursuant to the standards and procedures set forth in D.C. Law 20-278."[20] The term "property" is unnecessary because paragraphs (a)(1) and (a)(2) of the revised provision and the current forfeiture provision[21] are limited to types of property—vehicles and money. This change improves the clarity of the revised statutes.

[19] D.C. Code § 22-2723(a)(1).
[20] D.C. Code § 22-2723(b).
[21] D.C. Code § 22-2723(a)(1), (a)(2).

RCC § 22E-4601. Contributing to the Delinquency of a Minor.

Explanatory Note. The RCC contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute prohibits being an accomplice to or criminally soliciting a person under the age of 18 years of age with respect to a District offense or comparable offense in another jurisdiction. The revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute applies only to actors that are at least 18 years of age and at least four years older than the minor complainant. The revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute replaces the current contributing to the delinquency of a minor offense[1] in the current D.C. Code.

Subsection (a) specifies the prohibited conduct for the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute. Paragraph (a)(1) and paragraph (a)(2) specify the age requirements for the actor and the complainant. Paragraph (a)(1) requires that, "in fact," the actor is at least 18 years of age and at least four years older than the complainant. The phrase "in fact" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-207 that indicates there is no culpable mental state requirement as to a given element. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, "in fact" applies to all the elements in paragraph (a)(1) and there is no culpable mental state required for the age of the actor or the age gap. Paragraph (a)(2) requires that the actor is "reckless" as to the fact that the complainant is under the age of 18 years. "Reckless" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-206 that here means the actor was aware of a substantial risk that the complainant was under 18 years of age.

Paragraph (a)(3) and subparagraph (a)(3)(A) specify one means of liability for the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute—the actor, "in fact," is an accomplice to the complainant as proscribed in RCC § 22E-210 for any District offense, a violation of D.C. Code § 25-1002, or a comparable offense or comparable violation in another jurisdiction. Per the rules of construction in RCC § 22E-207, the "in fact" specified in paragraph (a)(3) applies to the requirements in subparagraph (a)(3)(A). "In fact" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-207 which here means that, beyond the culpable mental state requirements specified in RCC § 22E-210, there are no additional culpable mental state requirements as to subparagraph (a)(3)(A). There is no culpable mental state required for the fact that the conduct constitutes any District offense, a violation of D.C. Code § 25-1002, or a comparable offense or comparable violation in another jurisdiction. "Comparable offense" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-701. To clarify any ambiguity as to whether a person may be an accomplice to a complainant purchasing, possessing, or drinking an alcoholic beverage, the statute specifically includes liability for being an accomplice to a violation of D.C. Code § 25-1002.

Paragraph (a)(3) and subparagraph (a)(3)(B) specify an alternative means of liability—the actor, "in fact," engages in a criminal solicitation of the complainant as described in RCC § 22E-302 for any District offense,[2] a violation of D.C. Code § 25-1002, or a comparable offense or comparable violation in another jurisdiction. Per the rules of construction in RCC § 22E-207, the "in fact" specified in paragraph (a)(3) applies to the requirements in subparagraph (a)(3)(B). "In fact" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-207

[1] D.C. Code § 22-811.

[2] RCC § 22E-302(b) limits liability under the general RCC solicitation provision to offenses against persons in Subtitle II of this title and felony property offenses in Subtitle III of this title. However, these limitations do not apply to the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor offense.

which here means that, beyond the culpable mental state requirements specified in RCC § 22E-302, there are no additional culpable mental state requirements as to subparagraph (a)(3)(B). There is no culpable mental state required for the fact that the conduct constitutes any District offense, a violation of D.C. Code § 25-1002, or a comparable offense or comparable violation in another jurisdiction. "Comparable offense" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-701. To clarify any ambiguity as to whether a person may solicit a complainant to purchase, possess, or drink an alcoholic beverage, the statute specifically includes liability for soliciting a violation of D.C. Code § 25-1002.

Subsection (b) codifies two exclusions from liability. First, paragraph (b)(1) provides an exclusion from liability for the offense when, "in fact," during a "demonstration," the complainant's conduct constitutes, or if carried out, would constitute, a trespass under RCC § 22E-2601, a public nuisance under RCC § 22E-4202, blocking a public way under RCC § 22E-4203, an unlawful demonstration under RCC § 22E-4204, an attempt to commit such an offense, or a comparable offense in another jurisdiction. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, "in fact" applies to all the elements in subsection (b). The phrase "in fact" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-207 that indicates there is no culpable mental state requirement as to a given element, here for the fact that, during a "demonstration," the complainant's conduct constitutes, or would constitute, one of the specified RCC offenses, an attempt to commit one of the specified RCC offenses, or a comparable offense in another jurisdiction. "Comparable offense" and "demonstration" are defined terms in RCC § 22E-701.

Paragraph (b)(2) provides an exclusion from liability when, in fact, the actor satisfies the requirements in D.C. Code § 22-7-403.[3] Paragraph (b)(2) specifies "in fact," a defined term in RCC § 22E-207 that means there is no culpable mental state requirement as to a given element, here that the actor satisfies the requirements in D.C. Code § 22-7-403.

---

[3] D.C. Code § 7-403(a), (b)(5)(B):

> (a) Notwithstanding any other law, the offenses listed in subsection (b) of this section shall not be considered crimes and shall not serve as the sole basis for revoking or modifying a person's supervision status:
>
> (1) For a person who:
>
> (A) Reasonably believes that he or she is experiencing a drug or alcohol-related overdose and in good faith seeks health care for himself or herself;
>
> (B) Reasonably believes that another person is experiencing a drug or alcohol-related overdose and in good faith seeks healthcare for that person; or
>
> (C) Is reasonably believed to be experiencing a drug or alcohol-related overdose and for whom health care is sought; and
>
> (2) The offense listed in subsection (b) of this section arises from the same circumstances as the seeking of health care under paragraph (1) of this subsection.
>
> (b) The following offenses apply to subsection (a) of this section:
>
> . . .
>
> (5) Provided that the minor is at least 16 years of age and the provider is 25 years of age or younger:
>
> (B) Contributing to the delinquency of a minor with regard to possessing or consuming alcohol or, without a prescription, a controlled substance as prohibited by § 22-811(a)(2) and subject to the penalties provided in § 22-811(b)(1) . . . ."

Subsection (c) establishes that an actor may be convicted of contributing to the delinquency of a minor upon proof of the commission of the offense, even though the minor complainant has not been arrested, prosecuted, or adjudicated delinquent of an offense.[4]

Subsection (d) codifies an affirmative defense for an actor that engages in the conduct constituting the offense and meets certain requirements. The general provision in RCC § 22E-201 establishes the requirements for the burden of production and the burden of proof for all affirmative defenses in the RCC. First, per paragraph (d)(1), the actor must have the "intent" of safeguarding or promoting the welfare of the complainant. "Intent" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-206 that here means the actor was practically certain that his or her conduct would safeguard or promote the welfare of the complainant. Per RCC § 22E-205, the object of the phrase "with intent to" is not an objective element that requires separate proof—only the actor's culpable mental state must be proven regarding the object of this phrase. It is not necessary to prove that the actor's conduct safeguarded or promoted the welfare of the complainant, only that the actor believed to a practical certainty that it would. The RCC general parental defense (RCC § 22E-408) also requires intent to safeguard or promote the welfare of a minor complainant and the commentary to that section discusses this requirement in detail.[5]

Paragraph (d)(2), subparagraph (d)(2)(A), and subparagraph (d)(2)(B) specify two additional requirements for the affirmative defense. Paragraph (d)(2) specifies "in fact," a defined term in RCC § 22E-207 that indicates there is no culpable mental state requirement as to a given element. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the "in fact" specified in paragraph (d)(2) applies to all the elements in subparagraph (d)(2)(A) and (d)(2)(B) and no culpable mental state applies to the elements in these subparagraphs. Per subparagraph (d)(2)(A), "in fact" the conduct constituting the offense must be reasonable in manner and degree, under all the circumstances. The RCC general parental defense (RCC § 22E-408) also requires that the conduct be reasonable in manner and degree, under all the circumstances, and the commentary to that section discusses this requirement in detail. Per subparagraph (d)(2)(B), "in fact" the conduct constituting the offense must not create a substantial risk of, or cause, death or serious bodily injury. "Serious bodily injury" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-701. The RCC general parental defense (RCC § 22E-408) also requires that the conduct does not create a substantial risk of, or cause, death or serious bodily injury and the commentary to that section discusses this requirement in detail.

Subsection (e) specifies the penalties for the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.]

Subsection (f) cross-references applicable definitions located elsewhere in the RCC and also provides a definition of "chronic truancy" applicable to this statute.

---

[4] In addition to the language in subsection (c), RCC § 22E-216 establishes that an actor can be liable for contributing to the delinquency of a minor even if the complainant is under the age of 12 years and is not subject to criminal liability under the RCC.

[5] However, the RCC parental defense includes the prevention or punishment of misconduct in the intent to safeguard or promote welfare, and the affirmative defense in the RCC contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute does not.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute clearly changes District law in nine main ways.

First, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute eliminates as a discrete basis of liability encouraging, causing, etc., a minor to run away from home for the purpose of criminal activity. The current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute prohibits, in relevant part, encouraging, causing, etc., a minor to "[r]un away for the purpose of criminal activity from the place of abode of his or her parent, guardian, or other custodian."[6] The colloquial phrase "[r]un away" is not defined by statute. It is unclear whether this provision differs from the current statute's prohibitions on encouraging, causing, etc., a minor to violate a criminal law, a court order, or be truant from school.[7] There is no DCCA case law interpreting this provision. In contrast, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute eliminates as a discrete basis of liability encouraging, causing, etc., a minor to run away from home for the purpose of criminal activity. To the extent that this conduct overlaps with assisting, encouraging, or soliciting a minor to plan or commit a criminal offense, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute still provides liability. To the extent that the current provision prohibits conduct beyond assisting, encouraging, or soliciting a minor to plan or commit a criminal offense, there is no liability under the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute. However, an adult that is civilly responsible for the health, welfare, or supervision of a minor that encourages, causes, etc., that minor to run away from home, for any reason, may have liability under the RCC criminal abuse of a minor (RCC § 22E-1501) or RCC criminal neglect of a minor ((RCC § 22E-1502) statutes if the adult causes or creates a risk of specified physical or mental harm. This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Second, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute prohibits being an accomplice to, or soliciting, an offense in another jurisdiction that is comparable to a misdemeanor in the District. The current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute limits encouraging, causing, etc., a minor to commit a misdemeanor to District law misdemeanors.[8] For felonies, however, the current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute prohibits encouraging, causing, etc., a minor to commit both District law felonies,[9] and offenses in other jurisdictions that are comparable to

[6] D.C. Code § 22-811(a)(3).

[7] D.C. Code § 22-811(a), (a)(1), (a)(4), (a)(5), (a)(7) ("It is unlawful for an adult, being 4 or more years older than a minor, to invite, solicit, recruit, assist, support, cause, encourage, enable, induce, advise, incite, facilitate, permit, or allow the minor to: . . . (1) Be truant from school; (4) Violate a court order; (5) Violate any criminal law of the District of Columbia for which the penalty constitutes a misdemeanor, except for acts of civil disobedience . . . (7) Violate any criminal law of the District of Columbia for which the penalty constitutes a felony, or any criminal law of the United States, or the criminal law of any other jurisdiction that involves conduct that would constitute a felony if committed in the District of Columbia, except for acts of civil disobedience.").

[8] D.C. Code § 22-811(a), (a)(5) ("It is unlawful for an adult, being 4 or more years older than a minor, to invite, solicit, recruit, assist, support, cause, encourage, enable, induce, advise, incite, facilitate, permit, or allow the minor to: . . . (5) Violate any criminal law of the District of Columbia for which the penalty constitutes a misdemeanor, except for acts of civil disobedience.").

[9] D.C. Code § 22-811(a), (a)(7) ("It is unlawful for an adult, being 4 or more years older than a minor, to invite, solicit, recruit, assist, support, cause, encourage, enable, induce, advise, incite, facilitate, permit, or allow the minor to: . . . (7) Violate any criminal law of the District of Columbia for which the penalty constitutes a felony, or any criminal law of the United States, or the criminal law of any other jurisdiction

District law felonies.[10] In contrast, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute extends to being an accomplice to, or soliciting, an offense in another jurisdiction that is a comparable offense to a misdemeanor in the District. "Comparable offense" is a defined term in the RCC that requires an offense to have elements that satisfy a District offense.[11] There is no clear reason for excluding an offense in another jurisdiction simply because it is comparable to a District law misdemeanor, as opposed to a District law felony. Although felonies are generally more serious charges than misdemeanors, there is still possible or actual legal jeopardy for the minor and the commission or possible commission of a criminal offense. This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statute, and removes a gap in liability.

Third, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute does not criminalize persons other than parents, guardians and others with custody or control of a minor from assisting, encouraging, etc. the minor to be truant. The current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute prohibits, in relevant part, assisting, encouraging, etc., a minor to "[b]e truant from school."[12] The current statute does not define "truant" and there is no DCCA case law interpreting this provision. It is unclear how much school a minor must miss in order to be "truant," and more generally how the scope of the truancy prong in the current contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute differs from a violation of the District's compulsory school attendance laws—other than that the latter only applies to "the minor's parent, guardian, or other person who has custody or control of the minor."[13] In contrast, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a that involves conduct that would constitute a felony if committed in the District of Columbia, except for acts of civil disobedience.").

---

[10] D.C. Code § 22-811(a), (a)(7) ("It is unlawful for an adult, being 4 or more years older than a minor, to invite, solicit, recruit, assist, support, cause, encourage, enable, induce, advise, incite, facilitate, permit, or allow the minor to: . . . (7) Violate any criminal law of the District of Columbia for which the penalty constitutes a felony, or any criminal law of the United States, or the criminal law of any other jurisdiction that involves conduct that would constitute a felony if committed in the District of Columbia, except for acts of civil disobedience.").

[11] RCC § 22E-701 ("'Comparable offense' means a crime committed against the District of Columbia, a state, a federally-recognized Indian tribe, or the United States and its territories, with elements that would necessarily prove the elements of a corresponding District crime.").

[12] D.C. Code § 22-811(a)(1).

[13] The District's current compulsory school attendance laws state that "The parent, guardian, or other person who has custody or control of a minor covered by § 38-202(a) who is absent from school without a valid excuse shall be guilty of a misdemeanor." D.C. Code § 38-203(d). The penalty is a fine of at least $100, a maximum term of imprisonment of 5 days, or both, for "each offense," which is defined as "[e]ach unlawful absence of a minor for 2 full-day sessions or for 4 half-day sessions during a school month shall constitute a separate offense." D.C. Code § 38-203(e), (f) ("(e) Any person convicted of failure to keep a minor in regular attendance in a public, independent, private, or parochial school, or failure to provide regular private instruction acceptable to the Board may be fined not less than $100 or imprisoned for not more than 5 days, or both for each offense. (f) Each unlawful absence of a minor for 2 full-day sessions or for 4 half-day sessions during a school month shall constitute a separate offense."). A defendant may receive a deferred sentence and be placed on probation for a first offense, and for any conviction, the courts "shall" consider requiring community service as an alternative to the fine, incarceration, or both. D.C. Code § 38-203(g), (h).

Notably, this timeline for triggering criminal liability under D.C. Code § 38-203 differs from current D.C. Municipal Regulations (DCMR) which define "chronically truant" as "absent from school without a legitimate excuse for ten (10) or more days within a single school year." D.C. Mun. Regs. tit. 5-A, § 2199 (defining "chronically truant" as "A school aged child who is absent from school without a minor statute does not specifically address truancy. Instead, the revised statute only provides criminal liability for persons who are accomplices to a District offense, which includes truancy described in D.C. Code § 38-203. The revised statute's approach piggybacks on the more specific, defined District criminal statutes elsewhere in the D.C. Code to describe the elements that must be proven for liability. While it is questionable whether parents or others who encourage or assist truancy should be subject to criminal (versus civil[14]) consequences,[15] the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute does not further criminalize such conduct. Among other benefits, the revised statute may avoid or limit the potential for First Amendment challenges to applications of the statute in particular cases of speech encouraging truancy.[16] This change reduces unnecessary overlap and improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statute.

---

legitimate excuse for ten (10) or more days within a single school year."). Under the DCMR, only when a student meets this definition of "chronically truant" is a school-based intervention triggered. D.C. Mun. Regs. tit. 5-A, § 2103(4) ("A student who accumulates ten (10) unexcused absences at any time during a school year shall be considered to be chronically truant. The school-based student support team assigned to the student shall notify the school administrator within two (2) school days after the tenth (10th) unexcused absence with a plan for immediate intervention including delivery of community-based programs and any other assistance or services to identify and address the student's needs on an emergency basis.").

[14] Note that a child who is habitually truant may be found to be a "child in need of supervision" per Title 16 of the current D.C. Code. D.C. Code § 16-2301(8) (defining "child in need of supervision" as "a child who- (A)(i) subject to compulsory school attendance and habitually truant from school without justification; (ii) has committed an offense committable only by children; or (iii) is habitually disobedient of the reasonable and lawful commands of his parent, guardian, or other custodian and is ungovernable; and (B) is in need of care or rehabilitation."). Such a finding gives the Family Court jurisdiction to issue court orders to parents or caretakers to better care for the child. D.C. Code § 16–2320(c) ("If a child is found to be delinquent or in need of supervision, the Division exercising juvenile jurisdiction shall also have jurisdiction over any natural person who is a parent or caretaker of the child to secure the parent or caretaker's full cooperation and assistance in the entire rehabilitative process and may order any of the following dispositions which will be in the best interest of the child: …").

[15] The CCRC has not, at this time, reviewed or made recommendations concerning D.C. Code § 38-203 which continues to subject parents and others to criminal liability for the truancy of a minor. However, the CCRC notes that there exist serious concerns about the disparate impact and harm this offense may have on women of color in the District.

[16] Recognized exceptions to the First Amendment, particularly the "speech integral to criminal conduct" exception, may or may not apply to speech encouraging truancy. See United States v. Stevens, 559 U.S. 460, 468–69 (2010) ("'From 1791 to the present,' however, the First Amendment has 'permitted restrictions upon the content of speech in a few limited areas,' and has never 'include[d] a freedom to disregard these traditional limitations.' Id., at 382–383, 112 S.Ct. 2538. These 'historic and traditional categories long familiar to the bar,' Simon & Schuster, Inc. v. Members of N.Y. State Crime Victims Bd., 502 U.S. 105, 127, 112 S.Ct. 501, 116 L.Ed.2d 476 (1991) (KENNEDY, J., concurring in judgment)—including obscenity, Roth v. United States, 354 U.S. 476, 483, 77 S.Ct. 1304, 1 L.Ed.2d 1498 (1957), defamation, Beauharnais v. Illinois, 343 U.S. 250, 254–255, 72 S.Ct. 725, 96 L.Ed. 919 (1952), fraud, Virginia Bd. of Pharmacy v. Virginia Citizens Consumer Council, Inc., 425 U.S. 748, 771, 96 S.Ct. 1817, 48 L.Ed.2d 346 (1976), incitement, Brandenburg v. Ohio, 395 U.S. 444, 447–449, 89 S.Ct. 1827, 23 L.Ed.2d 430 (1969) (per curiam), and speech integral to criminal conduct, Giboney v. Empire Storage & Ice Co., 336 U.S. 490, 498, 69 S.Ct. 684, 93 L.Ed. 834 (1949)—are 'well-defined and narrowly limited classes of speech, the prevention and punishment of which have never been thought to raise any Constitutional problem.' Chaplinsky v. New Hampshire, 315 U.S. 568, 571–572, 62 S.Ct. 766, 86 L.Ed. 1031 (1942)."). Notably, the "speech integral to criminal conduct" exception is not limited to purely criminal conduct and includes at least some tortious activity. See Eugene Volokh, The "Speech Integral to Criminal Conduct" Exception, 101 Cornell L. Rev. 981, 1051 (2016).

Fourth, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute does not criminalize assisting, encouraging, etc. a minor to engage in a non-criminal violation of a court order. The current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute prohibits, in relevant part, assisting, encouraging, etc., a minor to "violate a court order."[17] There is no DCCA case law interpreting this provision. In contrast, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute does not specifically address violation of court orders. Instead, the revised statute only provides criminal liability for persons who are accomplices to a District offense, which includes violation of a court order that is a criminal contempt under D.C. Code § 11–741 or other contempt-type crimes (e.g., under D.C. Code § 16-1005, D.C. Code § 23–1327, D.C. Code § 23–1328, or D.C. Code § 23–1329). The revised statute's approach piggybacks on the more specific, defined District criminal statutes elsewhere in the D.C. Code to describe the elements that must be proven for liability. Among other benefits, the revised statute may avoid or limit the potential for First Amendment challenges to applications of the statute in particular cases of speech encouraging violation of a court order.[18] This change reduces unnecessary overlap and improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statute.

Fifth, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute provides an affirmative defense for an adult defendant that intends to safeguard or promote the welfare of the minor complainant. The current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute does not have any such affirmative defense, and the D.C. Code does not codify any general defenses. As a result, the current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute appears to apply to adults who, out of concern for the minor's well-being, encourage, cause, etc., a minor to engage in the prohibited conduct.[19] There is no DCCA case law on this issue. In contrast, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute has an affirmative defense for an adult defendant that

---

[17] D.C. Code § 22-811(a)(4).

[18] Recognized exceptions to the First Amendment, particularly the "speech integral to criminal conduct" exception, may or may not apply to speech encouraging violation of a court order. See United States v. Stevens, 559 U.S. 460, 468–69 (2010) ("'From 1791 to the present,' however, the First Amendment has 'permitted restrictions upon the content of speech in a few limited areas,' and has never 'include[d] a freedom to disregard these traditional limitations.' Id., at 382–383, 112 S.Ct. 2538. These 'historic and traditional categories long familiar to the bar,' Simon & Schuster, Inc. v. Members of N.Y. State Crime Victims Bd., 502 U.S. 105, 127, 112 S.Ct. 501, 116 L.Ed.2d 476 (1991) (KENNEDY, J., concurring in judgment)—including obscenity, Roth v. United States, 354 U.S. 476, 483, 77 S.Ct. 1304, 1 L.Ed.2d 1498 (1957), defamation, Beauharnais v. Illinois, 343 U.S. 250, 254–255, 72 S.Ct. 725, 96 L.Ed. 919 (1952), fraud, Virginia Bd. of Pharmacy v. Virginia Citizens Consumer Council, Inc., 425 U.S. 748, 771, 96 S.Ct. 1817, 48 L.Ed.2d 346 (1976), incitement, Brandenburg v. Ohio, 395 U.S. 444, 447–449, 89 S.Ct. 1827, 23 L.Ed.2d 430 (1969) (per curiam), and speech integral to criminal conduct, Giboney v. Empire Storage & Ice Co., 336 U.S. 490, 498, 69 S.Ct. 684, 93 L.Ed. 834 (1949)—are 'well-defined and narrowly limited classes of speech, the prevention and punishment of which have never been thought to raise any Constitutional problem.' Chaplinsky v. New Hampshire, 315 U.S. 568, 571–572, 62 S.Ct. 766, 86 L.Ed. 1031 (1942)."). Notably, the "speech integral to criminal conduct" exception is not limited to purely criminal conduct and includes at least some tortious activity. See Eugene Volokh, The "Speech Integral to Criminal Conduct" Exception, 101 Cornell L. Rev. 981, 1051 (2016).

[19] For example, if an adult neighbor is concerned for the minor's well-being and speaks to the minor before school, making the minor late for school, the adult neighbor may have caused the minor to be "truant" within the meaning of the current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute. Or, if that adult takes the minor to a doctor's appointment after school and causes the minor to miss court-ordered community service, that adult may have caused the minor to violate a court order within the meaning of the current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute.

intends to safeguard or promote the welfare of the minor complainant. The defense applies regardless of whether the adult has a duty of care to the minor. In addition to the intent requirement, the affirmative defense requires that, in fact, the actor's conduct is reasonable in manner and degree under all the circumstances and does not create a substantial risk of, or cause, death or serious bodily injury. These requirements match several of the requirements in the RCC parental defense (RCC § 22E-408) and are discussed further in the commentary to that statute. This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statute.

Sixth, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute eliminates the special recidivist penalty in the current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute. The special recidivist penalty enhancement applies to all prohibited conduct in the current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute except encouraging, causing, etc., a minor to commit a felony, and provides a maximum term of imprisonment of three years.[20] In contrast, in the RCC, the general recidivism enhancement (RCC § 22E-606) will provide enhanced punishment for recidivist contributing to the delinquency of a minor, consistent with other offenses. There is no clear basis for singling out contributing to the delinquency of a minor for a recidivist enhancement as compared to other offenses of equal seriousness. The RCC general recidivism enhancement applies to a felony conviction of the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute, but does not apply to a misdemeanor conviction because contributing to the delinquency of a minor is not an offense against persons in the RCC. However, if a defendant is convicted of certain misdemeanor offenses against persons in addition to the RCC contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute, the RCC general recidivist enhancement would apply to that misdemeanor conviction.[21] This change improves the proportionality and consistency of the revised contributing statute.

Seventh, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute eliminates the special penalties in the current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute for serious bodily injury or death. The current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute provides for a maximum term of imprisonment of five years if the prohibited conduct "results in serious bodily injury to the minor [complainant] or any other person"[22] and a maximum term of imprisonment 10 years if prohibited conduct "results in the death of the minor [complainant] or any other person."[23] The current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute does not define "serious bodily [20] D.C. Code § 22-811(b)(2) ("A person convicted of violating subsection (a)(2)-(6) of this section, having previously been convicted of an offense under subsection (a)(2)-(6) of this section or a substantially similar offense in this or any other jurisdiction, shall be fined not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01 or imprisoned for not more than 3 years, or both.").

[21] For example, if a defendant is convicted of the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute on the basis of helping the complainant commit misdemeanor assault and is also convicted of misdemeanor assault as an accomplice, the misdemeanor contributing to the delinquency of a minor conviction is not subject to the misdemeanor recidivist enhancement in RCC § 22E-606, but the assault conviction is.

[22] D.C. Code § 22-811(b)(4) ("A person convicted of violating subsection (a) of this section that results in serious bodily injury to the minor or any other person shall be fined not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01 or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both.").

[23] D.C. Code § 22-811(b)(5) ("A person convicted of violating subsection (a) of this section that results in the death of the minor or any other person shall be fined not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01 or imprisoned for not more than 10 years, or both.").

injury"[24] and there is no DCCA case law interpreting the term for this statute. In addition, it is unclear in both enhanced penalties if the prohibited conduct must cause serious bodily injury or death, or if "results in" is broader and permits enhanced penalties without causation. There is no DCCA case law on this issue. In contrast, the RCC contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute eliminates the special penalties for contributing to the delinquency of a minor that "results" in serious bodily injury or death. There is no clear basis for singling out contributing to the delinquency of a minor for these enhanced penalties as compared to other offenses of equal seriousness. In addition, the RCC assault statute provides liability for "caus[ing]" any person "bodily injury," including "serious bodily injury," as those terms are defined in RCC § 22E-701, and the RCC homicide statutes provide liability for "caus[ing]" any person death, provided that the other elements of these offenses are satisfied.[25] This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Eighth, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute does not grade being an accomplice to, or soliciting, a felony offense different from a misdemeanor offense. In the current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute, encouraging, causing, etc., the commission of a misdemeanor has a maximum term of imprisonment of 6 months if the enhanced penalties for recidivism, serious bodily injury, or death do not apply.[26] Encouraging, causing, etc., the commission of a felony is subject to a maximum term of imprisonment of 5 years if the enhanced penalties for serious bodily injury or death do not apply.[27] In contrast, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute grades being an accomplice to, or soliciting, any offense the same—regardless whether the offense is a misdemeanor or felony. The commission of a felony is generally more serious than misdemeanor offenses. The single flat penalty for all offenses

---

[24] The current D.C. Code aggravated assault statute requires "serious bodily injury," but does not statutorily define the term. D.C. Code § 22-404.01. However, "serious bodily injury" is statutorily defined for the current D.C. Code sexual abuse statutes (D.C. Code § 22-3001(7)), and the DCCA has generally applied this definition to the aggravated assault statute. Nixon v. United States, 730 A.2d 145, 150 (D.C. 1999) ("Since the definition of "serious bodily injury" which appears in . . . the District's sexual abuse statute . . . is consistent with that followed in the majority of jurisdictions, we adopt it for the purpose of determining whether the government met its burden to prove 'serious bodily injury' under the aggravated assault statute."). It is unclear whether the DCCA would similarly apply the definition of "serious bodily injury" in the current D.C. Code sexual abuse statutes to the current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute.

[25] In addition, the RCC assault statute and the RCC murder statute provide enhanced penalties if the actor is reckless as to the fact that the complainant is a "protected person," defined in RCC § 22E-701 to include a person that is under 18 years of age and at least four years younger than an actor who is 18 years of age or older. These are the same age and age gap requirements for an adult actor and a minor complainant that are in the RCC contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute.

[26] D.C. Code § 22-811(b)(1) ("Except as provided in paragraphs (2) [recidivist penalty enhancement], (4) [penalty enhancement for conduct that "results in" serious bodily injury] and (5) [penalty enhancement for conduct that "results in" death] of this subsection, a person convicted of violating subsection (a)(1)-(6) of this section shall be fined not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01, or imprisoned for not more than 6 months, or both.").

[27] D.C. Code § 22-811(b)(3) ("Except as provided in paragraphs (4) [penalty enhancement for conduct that "results in" serious bodily injury] and (5) [penalty enhancement for conduct that "results in" death] of this subsection, a person convicted of violating subsection (a)(7) of this section shall be fined not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01, or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both.").

in the revised statute effectively raises the penalty for minor misdemeanors (Classes C-E) to a Class B offense. However, where a person is an accomplice to or solicits a serious felony the actor should be charged with and subject to correspondingly higher penalties as provided under RCC § 22E-210 and RCC § 22E-302. This change improves the proportionality of the revised statute.

Ninth, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute does not purport to assign prosecutorial authority to the Attorney General for the District of Columbia (OAG), clarifying that it is an offense that the United States Attorney for the District of Columbia (USAO) prosecutes. The current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute states that OAG "shall" prosecute all violations that have a maximum term of imprisonment of six months, while USAO shall prosecute violations subject to higher sentences.[28] The legislative history for the current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor offense indicates that the Council regarded it as a new offense,[29] and the sole rationale for assignment of prosecutorial authority to OAG was the likelihood that OAG would be involved in prosecution of the underlying violations by the [28] The current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute states that "The Attorney General for the District of Columbia, or his or her assistants, shall prosecute a violation of subsection (a) of this section for which the penalty is set forth in subsection (c)(1) of this section." D.C. Code § 22-811(e). The reference to paragraph "(c)(1)" appears to be an error. There is no paragraph (c)(1) in the current statute and subsection (b) codifies the penalties. Per paragraph (b)(1), all violations of the current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute, except contributing, causing, etc., a minor to commit a felony, have a maximum term of imprisonment of 6 months, provided that the enhanced penalties for prior convictions, serious bodily injury, or death do not apply. D.C. Code § 22-811(b)(1) ("Except as provided in paragraphs (2), (4) and (5) of this subsection, a person convicted of violating subsection (a)(1)-(6) of this section shall be fined not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01, or imprisoned for not more than 6 months, or both.").

[29] See Testimony of Robert J. Spagnoletti, Attorney General for the District of Columbia, Committee on the Judiciary Report on Bill 16-247, the "Omnibus Public Safety Act of 2006" at 27 ("The District does not have a law that prohibits contributing to the delinquency of a minor."). While it is true that at the time there was no contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute, the legislative history failed to note that, in 1963, the authority to prosecute the crime of contributing to the delinquency of a minor was provided to OAG (then Corporation Council) by Congress under D.C. Code §§ 11-1583, 11-1554. Public Law 88-241, December 23, 1963. D.C. Code § 11-1554 provided that "[t]he Juvenile Court has original and exclusive jurisdiction to determine cases of persons 18 years of age or over charged with willfully contributing to, encouraging, or tending to cause by any act or omission, a condition which would bring a child under the age of 18 years within the provisions of section 11-1551." Under then D.C. Code § 11-1583 (a)(3), the Corporation Counsel of the District of Columbia or any of his assistants shall "prosecute cases arising under sections 11-1554 and 11-1556 and the sections specified by section 11-1557, in which a person 18 years of age or over is charged with an offense." The Act Reorganizing the District of Columbia Courts, however, replaced the entirety of what was Title 11 of the D.C. Code, and created a Family Division in the Superior Court, which would handle, among others, cases of juvenile delinquency, paternity, support, and intra-family offenses (civil protective orders). Public Law 91-358, July 29, 1970 ("Title 11 of the District of Columbia Code is amended to read as follows" and did not move or restate 11-1551, 11-1554, 11-1557 in any other portion of the D.C. Code). Procedures related to the Family Division in the D.C. Superior Court and in particular, juvenile matters, were moved to Title 16 of the D.C. Code. Id. (renaming 11-1551 in 16-2303). While Public Law 91-358 did not specifically state that it was repealing sections 11-1554, 11-1556, and 11-1557, it appears that Congress intended to repeal it, as those sections did not appear in either Title 11 or 16 and the table in the 1973 version of the D.C. Code stated that these provisions were repealed by the Reorganization Act.

minor.[30] However, controlling DCCA case law based on the Home Rule Act precludes Council assignment of prosecutorial authority to OAG unless the offenses falls into one of the categories in D.C. Code § 23-101(a).[31] In contrast to current law, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute does not purport to assign any prosecutorial authority to OAG because doing so is inconsistent with District case law based on the Home Rule Act. There is no evidence that the current contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute meets or was intended to meet the exceptions to USAO prosecution for a penal statute in the nature of a police or municipal regulation, or otherwise. This change improves the enforceability and consistency of the revised statutes.

Beyond these nine changes to current District law, nine other aspects of the revised statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute no longer specifically or generally prohibits permitting or allowing a minor to engage in the prohibited conduct. The current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute prohibits, in relevant part, "permit[ting]" or "allow[ing]" a minor to violate criminal laws or a court order, or be truant from school.[32] The plain language of the current D.C. Code statute allows criminal liability based upon a person's failure to act, even if the adult defendant does not have a legal duty to act. Imposing liability for an omission when there is no prior legal duty to act is generally disfavored.[33] The DCCA has not interpreted the scope of "permit" or "allow" in the current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute.[34] However, in Conley v. United States, in holding unconstitutional the [30] Id. at 28-29 ("The misdemeanor offense would be prosecuted by OAG and the felony offense would be prosecuted by the USAO. The rationale for this bifurcated system of prosecution is based on the likelihood that OAG would be involved in the criminal and/or civil prosecution of most of the underlying offenses that would give rise to a misdemeanor violation of this Act, while the USAO is better situated to prosecute the felony violations.").

[31] See, generally: In re Crawley, 978 A.2d 608 (D.C. 2009); In re Hall, 31 A.3d 453, 456 (D.C. 2011); and In re Settles, 218 A.3d 235 (D.C. 2019).

[32] D.C. Code § 22-811(a), (a)(1), (a)(4), (a)(5), (a)(7) ("(a) It is unlawful for an adult, being 4 or more years older than a minor, to . . . permit, or allow the minor to: (1) Be truant from school; (4) Violate a court order; (5) Violate any criminal law of the District of Columbia for which the penalty constitutes a misdemeanor, except for acts of civil disobedience; (7) Violate any criminal law of the District of Columbia for which the penalty constitutes a felony, or any criminal law of the United States, or the criminal law of any other jurisdiction that involves conduct that would constitute a felony if committed in the District of Columbia, except for acts of civil disobedience.").

[33] See the commentary to RCC § 22E-202(c), (d).

[34] In dicta in Joya v. United States, the DCCA noted that it "need not resolve" the scope of "permit" and "allow" in the contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute. Joya v. United States, 53 A.3d 309, 322 n. 28 (D.C. 2012). The issue in Joya v. United States was how collateral estoppel applied to a charge of contributing to the delinquency of a minor based upon a robbery for which appellant was acquitted. Joya, 53 A.3d at 311-12, 319-23. The government argued that a person could be found guilty under the contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute for "allow[ing]" or "permit[ting]" a minor to engage in felony criminal conduct. Id. at 322 n.28. Appellant argued that "allow" and "permit" "as used in the [contributing to the delinquency of a minor] statute suggest that there must be some type of special relationship between the defendant and the minor" and that "absent such an implicit requirement . . . the statute could effectively create an affirmative duty for innocent bystanders to prevent minors from committing crimes—something there is no evidence the legislature intended." Id. The DCCA stated "we need not resolve this issue now." Id.

District's former statute criminalizing presence in a motor vehicle containing a firearm, the DCCA interpreted the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Lambert v. California[35] to stand for the proposition that "it is incompatible with due process to convict a person of a crime based on the failure to take a legally required action—a crime of omission—if he had no reason to believe he had a legal duty to act, or even that his failure to act was blameworthy."[36] Resolving this ambiguity, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute no longer specifically or generally prohibits permitting or allowing a minor to engage in the prohibited conduct. Neither the current D.C. Code nor the RCC contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute requires that the adult defendant have a responsibility for the minor or a legal duty to act, and it is disproportionate to impose criminal liability for an omission. Depending on the facts of the case, an adult that has a responsibility under civil law for the health, welfare, or supervision of the minor may still have liability under the RCC criminal abuse of a minor statute (RCC § 22E-1501) or the RCC criminal neglect of a minor statute (RCC § 22E-1502) for failure to act or "permitting or allowing" the minor to engage in the conduct the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute prohibits. This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Second, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute prohibits the same conduct as the general RCC solicitation statute (RCC § 22E-302). The current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute makes it unlawful to "invite, solicit, recruit, assist, support, cause, encourage, enable, induce, advise, incite, facilitate, permit, or allow the minor" to violate criminal laws.[37] There is no DCCA case law interpreting this language and it is unclear whether "solicit" differs from other terms in the current statute, such as "invite," "recruit," "encourage," and "incite." There is no District case law interpreting the meaning of "solicit" in the current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute. Resolving this ambiguity, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute prohibits the same conduct as the general RCC solicitation statute (RCC § 22E-302)—"commands, requests, or tries to persuade" the complainant "to engage in or aid the planning or commission of specific conduct, which, if carried out," will constitute a criminal offense.[38] As in the RCC solicitation statute, solicitation under subparagraph (a)(3)(B) also requires that the defendant act with the same culpability as required by the underlying criminal offense, as stated in RCC § 22E-302(a). This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised statute.

Third, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute prohibits the same conduct as the general RCC accomplice liability statute (RCC § 22E-210). The current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute makes it unlawful to "invite, solicit, recruit, assist, support, cause, encourage, enable, induce, advise, incite, facilitate, permit, or allow the minor" to violate criminal laws.[39] There is no DCCA case law interpreting this language and it is unclear how the various types of prohibited conduct differ. Resolving this ambiguity, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor

[35] 355 U.S. 225 (1957).
[36] Conley v. United States, 79 A.3d 270, 273 (D.C. 2013).
[37] D.C. Code § 22-811(a).
[38] RCC § 22E-302(b) limits liability under the general RCC solicitation provision to offenses against persons in Subtitle II of this title and felony property offenses in Subtitle III of this title. However, these limitations do not apply to the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor offense.
[39] D.C. Code § 22-811(a).

statute prohibits the same conduct as the general RCC accomplice liability statute (RCC § 22E-210)—"assists" the complainant "with the planning or commission of conduct" or "encourages" the complainant "to engage in specific conduct" that constitutes a violation of a criminal offense, including a violation of D.C. Code § 25-1002. As in the RCC accomplice liability statute, accomplice liability under subparagraph (a)(3)(A) also requires that the defendant act with the same culpability as required by the underlying criminal offense, as stated in RCC § 22E-210(a). This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised statute.

Fourth, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute no longer separately prohibits encouraging, causing, etc., a minor to possess or consume a trace amount of a controlled substance. The current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute specifically prohibits encouraging, causing, etc., a minor to "[p]ossess or consume . . . without a valid prescription, a controlled substance as that term is defined in [D.C. Code] § 48-901.02(4)."[40] It is unclear whether this provision applies to any amount of a controlled substance or only a measurable amount and there is no DCCA case law on this issue.[41] Resolving this ambiguity, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute no longer specifically includes possessing or consuming a controlled substance as a discrete form of liability. Instead, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute prohibits being an accomplice to a crime, which includes the RCC Possession of a Controlled Substance offense (RCC § 48-904.01a). The RCC possession offense, like the current D.C. Code possession offense, requires that a person possess a "measurable amount" of a controlled substance. Assisting, encouraging, or soliciting a minor to possess or consume an unmeasurable (trace) amount of a controlled substance is insufficient for liability under the RCC contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute, although an adult with a responsibility under civil law for the health, welfare, or supervision of a minor may still have liability under the RCC criminal abuse of a minor statute (RCC § 22E-1501) or RCC criminal neglect of a minor statute (RCC § 22E-1502) if the adult causes or creates a risk of specified physical or mental harm. This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statute.

Fifth, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute requires a "reckless" culpable mental state for the age of the complainant. The current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute[42] does not specify any culpable mental states and there is no DCCA case law on this issue. Resolving this ambiguity, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute requires a "reckless" culpable mental

---

[40] D.C. Code § 22-811(a), (a)(2) ("It is unlawful for an adult, being 4 or more years older than a minor, to invite, solicit, recruit, assist, support, cause, encourage, enable, induce, advise, incite, facilitate, permit, or allow the minor to: . . . (2) Possess or consume . . . without a valid prescription, a controlled substance as that term is defined in§ 48-901.02(4).").

[41] Current D.C. Code § 48-904.01 prohibits knowingly or intentionally possessing a "controlled substance" without a valid prescription or order and grades the offense based on whether the controlled substance is phencyclidine in liquid form. D.C. Code § 48-904.01(d)(1), (d)(2). The statutory language of current D.C. Code § 48-904.01 does not require a "measurable amount" of a controlled substance, but DCCA case law interpreting the offense does. Thomas v. United States, 650 A.2d 183, 196 (D.C. 1994); see also Price v. United States, 746 A.2d 896 (D.C. 2000) (discussing means of proving that the defendant possessed a measurable quantity of a controlled substance). It is unclear whether the DCCA would similarly interpret the current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute to require a "measurable amount" of a controlled substance.

[42] D.C. Code § 22-811.

state for the age of the complainant. Applying strict liability to statutory elements that distinguish innocent from criminal behavior is strongly disfavored by courts[43] and legal experts[44] for any non-regulatory crimes. Requiring, at a minimum, a knowing culpable mental state for the elements of an offense that make otherwise legal conduct illegal is a generally accepted legal principle.[45] However, recklessness has been upheld in some cases as a minimal basis for punishing morally culpable crime.[46] A "reckless" culpable mental state in the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute is consistent with the culpable mental state required for the age of the complainant in other RCC offenses pertaining to minors, such as criminal abuse of a minor (RCC § 22E-1501), criminal neglect of a minor (RCC § 22E-1502), and enticing a minor into sexual conduct (RCC § 22E-1305). This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised offense.

Sixth, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute, by the use of the phrase "in fact," requires strict liability for the age of the actor and the required four year age gap. The current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute requires that the actor be at least 18 years of age and at least four years older than the complainant, but does not specify what culpable mental state, if any, applies to these elements.[47] There is no DCCA case law on these issues. Resolving these ambiguities, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute, by the use of the phrase "in fact," requires strict liability for the age of the actor and the required four year age gap. Requiring, at a minimum, a knowing culpable mental state for the elements of an offense that make otherwise legal conduct illegal is a generally accepted legal principle.[48] However, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute requires a culpable mental state of recklessness for the age of the minor complainant, and an actor may be held strictly liable for elements of an offense that aggravate what is already illegal conduct.[49]

---

[43] Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2010, 192 L.Ed.2d 1 (2015) ("When interpreting federal criminal statutes that are silent on the required mental state, we read into the statute 'only that mens rea which is necessary to separate wrongful conduct from 'otherwise innocent conduct.'" Carter v. United States, 530 U.S. 255, 269, 120 S.Ct. 2159, 147 L.Ed.2d 203 (2000) (quoting X–Citement Video, 513 U.S., at 72, 115 S.Ct. 464)).

[44] See § 5.5(c)Pros and cons of strict-liability crimes, 1 Subst. Crim. L. § 5.5(c) (3d ed.) ("For the most part, the commentators have been critical of strict-liability crimes. 'The consensus can be summarily stated: to punish conduct without reference to the actor's state of mind is both inefficacious and unjust. It is inefficacious because conduct unaccompanied by an awareness of the factors making it criminal does not mark the actor as one who needs to be subjected to punishment in order to deter him or others from behaving similarly in the future, nor does it single him out as a socially dangerous individual who needs to be incapacitated or reformed. It is unjust because the actor is subjected to the stigma of a criminal conviction without being morally blameworthy. Consequently, on either a preventive or retributive theory of criminal punishment, the criminal sanction is inappropriate in the absence of mens rea.'") (quoting Packer, Mens Rea and the Supreme Court, 1962 Sup.Ct.Rev. 107, 109).

[45] Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2010, 192 L.Ed.2d 1 (2015).

[46] Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2015, 192 L.Ed.2d 1 (2015) (J. Alito, concurring) ("There can be no real dispute that recklessness regarding a risk of serious harm is wrongful conduct. In a wide variety of contexts, we have described reckless conduct as morally culpable.").

[47] D.C. Code § 22-811(a), (f)(1), (f)(2) (stating "It is unlawful for an adult, being 4 or more years older than a minor . . ." and defining "adult" as "a person 18 years of age or older at the time of the offense" and "minor" as "a person under 18 years of age at the time of the offense.").

[48] Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2010, 192 L.Ed.2d 1 (2015).

[49] Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2010, 192 L.Ed.2d 1 (2015) ("When interpreting federal criminal statutes that are silent on the required mental state, we read into the statute 'only that mens rea

Strict liability for the age of the actor and the four year age gap is consistent with other RCC offenses that require this age for the actor and this age gap, such as third degree and sixth degree sexual abuse of a minor (RCC § 22E-1302), enticing a minor into sexual conduct (RCC § 22E-1305), and sexually suggestive conduct with a minor statute (RCC § 22E-1304). This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised offense.

Seventh, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute, by use of the phrase "in fact," applies strict liability to the fact that the conduct constitutes any District offense, a violation of D.C. Code § 25-1002, or a comparable offense or comparable violation in another jurisdiction. The current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute prohibits, in relevant part, encouraging, causing, etc., a minor to violate a criminal offense in the District or elsewhere.[50] The statute does not specify any culpable mental states and it is unclear whether the actor must have subjective awareness that the planned or commissioned conduct will result in a crime. There is no DCCA case law on these issues. Resolving these ambiguities, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute, by use of the phrase "in fact," applies strict liability to the fact that the conduct constitutes any District offense, a violation of D.C. Code § 25-1002, or a comparable offense or comparable violation in another jurisdiction. Requiring, at a minimum, a knowing culpable mental state for the elements of an offense that make otherwise legal conduct illegal is a generally accepted legal principle.[51] However, requiring that the defendant have subjective awareness of the fact that planned or commissioned conduct is a crime would allow a mistake of law to preclude liability for contributing to the delinquency of a minor, which is generally disfavored in the RCC and current District law.[52] Allowing a mistake of law to preclude liability is inconsistent with the requirements in the RCC accomplice liability (RCC § 22E-210) and solicitation (RCC § 22E-302) provisions, including that the adult defendant must act with the culpability, if any, required for the underlying criminal offense. This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Eighth, the revised statute codifies an exclusion from liability when, in fact, during a "demonstration," the complainant's conduct constitutes, or, if carried out, would constitute, a trespass under RCC § 22E-2601, a public nuisance under RCC § 22E-4202, blocking a public way under RCC § 22E-4203, an unlawful demonstration under RCC § 22E-4204, an attempt to commit such an offense, or a comparable offense in another jurisdiction. The current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute prohibits encouraging, causing, etc., a minor to "violate" certain criminal laws "except for which is necessary to separate wrongful conduct from 'otherwise innocent conduct.'" Carter v. United States, 530 U.S. 255, 269, 120 S.Ct. 2159, 147 L.Ed.2d 203 (2000) (quoting X–Citement Video, 513 U.S., at 72, 115 S.Ct. 464)).

---

[50] D.C. Code § 22-811(a), (a)(5), (a)(7) ("(a) It is unlawful for an adult, being 4 or more years older than a minor, to invite, solicit, recruit, assist, support, cause, encourage, enable, induce, advise, incite, facilitate, permit, or allow the minor to: . . . (5) Violate any criminal law of the District of Columbia for which the penalty constitutes a misdemeanor, except for acts of civil disobedience; (7) Violate any criminal law of the District of Columbia for which the penalty constitutes a felony, or any criminal law of the United States, or the criminal law of any other jurisdiction that involves conduct that would constitute a felony if committed in the District of Columbia, except for acts of civil disobedience.").

[51] Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2010, 192 L.Ed.2d 1 (2015).

[52] See Commentary to RCC § 22E-208.

acts of civil disobedience"[53] and does not specify what culpable mental state, if any, applies to this element. There is no case law on the scope of "acts of civil disobedience" or the applicable culpable mental state. Resolving this ambiguity, the revised statute excludes from liability when, in fact, during a "demonstration," the complainant's conduct constitutes, or, if carried out, would constitute, a trespass under RCC § 22E-2601, a public nuisance under RCC § 22E-4202, blocking a public way under RCC § 22E-4203, an unlawful demonstration under RCC § 22E-4204, an attempt to commit such an offense, or a comparable offense in another jurisdiction. While the scope of "acts of civil disobedience" in the current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute is unclear, the revised statute draws a clear line at certain acts of civil disobedience statute during a demonstration. This change improves the clarity of the revised statute.

Ninth, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute does not categorically require multiple penalties for contributing to the delinquency of a minor and a conviction for an underlying offense. The current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute states that "The penalties under this section are in addition to any other penalties permitted by law." [54] The scope of the provision, whether civil or criminal, is unclear. However the reference to "penalties" may allow or require multiple criminal punishments arising from the same course of conduct. It is also unclear whether the statutory language requires consecutive sentences for contributing to the delinquency of a minor and other offenses, or if concurrent sentences are permitted. There is no relevant legislative history or DCCA case law interpreting this provision. Resolving this ambiguity, in the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute, the RCC merger provision (RCC § 22E-214) determines whether multiple offenses from the same course of conduct merge, consistent with other RCC offenses. Given that the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute is limited to accomplice (RCC § 22E-210) or solicitation liability (RCC § 22E-302), these offenses are lesser included offenses of and would merger into the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute. This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

First, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute does not use the terms "adult" or "minor." The current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute defines an "adult" as "a person 18 years of age or older at the time of the offense"[55] and a "minor" as "a person under 18 years of age at the time of the offense."[56] The revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute codifies these requirements

[53] D.C. Code § 22-811(a), (a)(5), (a)(7) ("(a) It is unlawful for an adult, being 4 or more years older than a minor, to invite, solicit, recruit, assist, support, cause, encourage, enable, induce, advise, incite, facilitate, permit, or allow the minor to: . . . (5) Violate any criminal law of the District of Columbia for which the penalty constitutes a misdemeanor, except for acts of civil disobedience; (7) Violate any criminal law of the District of Columbia for which the penalty constitutes a felony, or any criminal law of the United States, or the criminal law of any other jurisdiction that involves conduct that would constitute a felony if committed in the District of Columbia, except for acts of civil disobedience.").
[54] D.C. Code § 22E-811.
[55] D.C. Code § 22-811(f)(1).
[56] D.C. Code § 22-811(f)(2).

directly into the offense as elements—the actor must be at least 18 years of age and the complainant must be under the age of 18 years—and separate terms and definitions are unnecessary. In addition, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute deletes as surplusage the "at the time of the offense" requirement in the definitions of "adult" and "minor" in the current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute. This change improves the clarity of the revised statute.

Second, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute no longer includes as a discrete basis of liability encouraging or causing a minor to join a criminal street gang. The current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute specifically prohibits encouraging or causing a minor to "[j]oin a criminal street gang as that term is defined in [D.C. Code] § 22-951(e)."[57] This provision overlaps with the current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute prohibition on encouraging or causing a minor to commit a misdemeanor.[58] The RCC contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute prohibits assisting, encouraging, or soliciting a minor complainant to engage in conduct that constitutes a District offense, which includes the District's current criminal street gang statute.[59] It is unnecessary to codify a provision in the revised statute that is specific to encouraging or causing[60] a minor to join a criminal street gang. This change improves the clarity of the revised statutes.

Third, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute no longer specifically includes as a discrete basis of liability encouraging or causing a minor to possess or consume alcohol. The current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a

---

[57] D.C. Code § 22-811(a), (a)(6) ("It is unlawful for an adult, being 4 or more years older than a minor, to invite, solicit, recruit, assist, support, cause, encourage, enable, induce, advise, incite, facilitate . . . the minor to: . . . (6) Join a criminal street gang as that term is defined in § 22-951(e)(1).").

[58] Under current D.C. Code § 22-951, causing a person to join a criminal street gang is a misdemeanor with a maximum term of imprisonment of 6 months. D.C. Code § 22-951(a)(1), (a)(2) ("(a)(1) It is unlawful for a person to solicit, invite, recruit, encourage, or otherwise cause, or attempt to cause, another individual to become a member of, remain in, or actively participate in what the person knows to be a criminal street gang. (2) A person convicted of a violation of this subsection shall be fined not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01 or imprisoned for not more than 6 months, or both."). Encouraging or causing a minor to join a criminal street gang violates D.C. Code § 22-951, which, in turn, violates the prohibition in the current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute on encouraging or causing a minor complainant to commit a misdemeanor. See D.C. Code § 22-811(a), (a)(5) ("It is unlawful for an adult, being 4 or more years older than a minor, to invite, solicit, recruit, assist, support, cause, encourage, enable, induce, advise, incite, facilitate . . . the minor to: . . . (5) Violate any criminal law of the District of Columbia for which the penalty constitutes a misdemeanor, except for acts of civil disobedience.").

[59] D.C. Code § 22-951(a)(1), (a)(2) ("(a)(1) It is unlawful for a person to solicit, invite, recruit, encourage, or otherwise cause, or attempt to cause, another individual to become a member of, remain in, or actively participate in what the person knows to be a criminal street gang. (2) A person convicted of a violation of this subsection shall be fined not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01 or imprisoned for not more than 6 months, or both.").

[60] The current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute specifically prohibits "permit[ting]" or "allow[ing]" a minor to join a criminal street gang. D.C. Code §§ 22-811(a), (a)(6). As is discussed elsewhere in this commentary as a possible change to current District law, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute does not include "permitting" or "allowing" any of the prohibited conduct, although there may be liability under the RCC criminal abuse of a minor (RCC § 22E-1501) or RCC criminal neglect of a minor (RCC § 22E-1502) statutes for an adult that is responsible under civil law for the health, welfare, or supervision of the minor. To the extent that the current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute prohibits "permit[ting]" or "allow[ing]" a minor to join a criminal street gang, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute does not.

minor statute specifically prohibits encouraging or causing a minor complainant to "[p]ossess or consume alcohol."[61] The revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute prohibits being an accomplice to a minor complainant to engage in conduct that constitutes "any District offense, a violation of D.C. Code § 25-1002, or a comparable offense or comparable violation in another jurisdiction." This specific reference to a violation of D.C. Code § 25-1002 ensures that there is liability under the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute for being an accomplice to a complainant if they "purchase, attempt to purchase, possess, or drink an alcoholic beverage in the District."[62] With this reference to D.C. Code § 25-1002 established, it is unnecessary to specially codify in the revised statute a provision that is specific to encouraging or causing a minor complainant to "[p]ossess or consume alcohol."[63] This change improves the clarity of the revised statutes.

Fourth, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute no longer includes as a discrete basis of liability encouraging or causing a minor to possess or consume a "measurable amount" of a controlled substance without a valid prescription. The current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute specifically prohibits encouraging or causing a minor to "[p]ossess or consume . . . without a valid prescription, a controlled substance as that term is defined in [D.C. Code] § 48-901.02(4).[64] As is discussed elsewhere in this commentary as a possible change to current District law, it is unclear whether this provision applies to any amount of a controlled substance or only a "measurable amount." To the extent that this provision applies to a "measurable amount," it overlaps with the current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute prohibition on encouraging or causing a minor to commit a misdemeanor or

---

[61] D.C. Code § 22-811(a), (a)(2) ("It is unlawful for an adult, being 4 or more years older than a minor, to invite, solicit, recruit, assist, support, cause, encourage, enable, induce, advise, incite, facilitate . . . the minor to: . . . (2) Possess or consume alcohol . . . .").

[62] Current D.C. Code § 25-1002 prohibits a person under 21 years of age from "purchas[ing], attempt[ing] to purchase, possess[ing], or drink[ing] an alcoholic beverage in the District, except as provided under subchapter IX of Chapter 7." D.C. Code § 22-1002(a). A violation of current D.C. Code § 25-1002 is a "misdemeanor," although the statute also states that "No person under the age of 21 shall be criminally charged with the offense of possession or drinking an alcoholic beverage under this section, but shall be subject to civil penalties under subsection (e) of this section." D.C. Code § 25-1002(a), (c)(4)(D). Although a minor is not subject to criminal prosecution, a violation of current D.C. Code § 25-1002(a) still appears to be an "offense," and the RCC contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute treats it as such. Assisting, encouraging, etc. a minor complainant to engage in conduct that violates current D.C. Code § 25-1002(a) is sufficient for liability under the RCC contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute.

[63] The current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute specifically prohibits "permit[ting]" or "allow[ing]" a minor to possess or consume alcohol. D.C. Code § 22-811(a), (a)(2). As is discussed elsewhere in this commentary as a possible change to current District law, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute does not include "permitting" or "allowing" any of the prohibited conduct, although there may be liability under the RCC criminal abuse of a minor (RCC § 22E-1501) or RCC criminal neglect of a minor (RCC § 22E-1502) statutes for an adult that is responsible under civil law for the health, welfare, or supervision of the minor. To the extent that the current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute prohibits "permit[ting]" or "allow[ing]" a minor to possess or consume alcohol, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute does not.

[64] D.C. Code § 22-811(a), (a)(2) ("It is unlawful for an adult, being 4 or more years older than a minor, to invite, solicit, recruit, assist, support, cause, encourage, enable, induce, advise, incite, facilitate . . . the minor to: . . . (2) Possess or consume . . . without a valid prescription, a controlled substance as that term is defined in§ 48-901.02(4).").

felony.[65] The RCC contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute prohibits assisting, encouraging, or soliciting a minor to engage in conduct that constitutes a District offense, including the RCC possession of a controlled substance offense (RCC § 48-904.01a), and it is unnecessary to codify a provision that is specific to encouraging or causing a minor to possess or consume a controlled substance.[66] This change improves the clarity of the revised statutes.

Fifth, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute does not codify a separate provision stating that "it is not a defense" that the minor complainant does not engage in the prohibited conduct or is not charged with, adjudicated delinquent for, or convicted of an offense. Subsection (d) of the current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute states that "It is not a defense to a prosecution under this section that the minor does not engage in, is not charged with, is not adjudicated delinquent for, or is not convicted as an adult, for" any of the prohibited conduct.[67] Instead, subsection (c) of the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute states that an actor "may be convicted of an offense under this section even though the complainant has not been arrested, prosecuted, convicted, or adjudicated delinquent for an offense." Subsection

---

[65] Current D.C. Code § 48-904.01 prohibits knowingly or intentionally possessing a controlled substance without a valid prescription or order and grades the offense based on whether the controlled substance is phencyclidine in liquid form. D.C. Code § 48-904.01(d)(1), (d)(2) ("It is unlawful for any person knowingly or intentionally to possess a controlled substance unless the substance was obtained directly from, or pursuant to, a valid prescription or order of a practitioner while acting in the course of his or her professional practice, or except as otherwise authorized by this chapter or Chapter 16B of Title 7, and provided in § 48-1201. Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, any person who violates this subsection is guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction may be imprisoned for not more than 180 days, fined not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01, or both. (2) Any person who violates this subsection by knowingly or intentionally possessing the abusive drug phencyclidine in liquid form is guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, may be imprisoned for not more than 3 years, fined not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01, or both."). The statutory language of current D.C. Code § 48-904.01 does not require a "measurable amount" of a controlled substance, but DCCA case law interpreting the offense does. Thomas v. United States, 650 A.2d 183, 196 (D.C. 1994); see also Price v. United States, 746 A.2d 896 (D.C. 2000) (discussing means of proving that the defendant possessed a measurable quantity of a controlled substance).
Encouraging or causing a minor to possess or consume a measurable amount of a controlled substance without a valid prescription violates D.C. Code § 48-904.01, which, in turn, violates the prohibition in the current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute on encouraging or causing a minor complainant to commit a misdemeanor or a felony. See D.C. Code § 22-811(a), (a)(5), (a)(7) ("It is unlawful for an adult, being 4 or more years older than a minor, to invite, solicit, recruit, assist, support, cause, encourage, enable, induce, advise, incite, facilitate . . . the minor to: . . . (5) Violate any criminal law of the District of Columbia for which the penalty constitutes a misdemeanor, except for acts of civil disobedience. . . . (7) Violate any criminal law of the District of Columbia for which the penalty constitutes a felony . . . .").

[66] The current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute specifically prohibits "permit[ting]" or "allow[ing]" a minor to possess or consume a controlled substance without a valid prescription. D.C. Code § 22-811(a), (a)(2). As is discussed elsewhere in this commentary as a possible change to current District law, the revised contributing statute does not include "permitting" or "allowing" any of the prohibited conduct, although there may be liability under the RCC criminal abuse of a minor (RCC § 22E-1501) or RCC criminal neglect of a minor (RCC § 22E-1502) statutes for an adult that is responsible under civil law for the health, welfare, or supervision of the minor. To the extent that the current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute prohibits "permit[ting]" or "allow[ing]" a minor to possess or consume a controlled substance without a valid prescription, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute does not.

[67] D.C. Code § 22-811(d).

(c) of the revised statute is consistent with a provision in the general RCC accomplice liability statute (RCC § 22E-210). Subsection (c) of the revised statute is substantively identical to subsection (d) of the current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute, with one exception—the revised subsection (c) does not specify that the minor "does not engage in" the prohibited conduct. This language is surplusage given the requirements of the revised statute (accomplice or solicitation liability) and deleting it is not intended to change current District law. This change improves the clarity of the revised statute.

Sixth, the revised contributing to the delinquency of a minor statute codifies an exclusion from liability when the actor satisfies the requirements in D.C. Code § 7-403. This is consistent with current law,[68] although the current D.C. Code contributing to the delinquency of a minor statue doesn't reference D.C. Code § 7-403. This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised statutes.

[68] D.C. Code § 7-403 states that contributing to the delinquency of a minor under current D.C. Code § 22-811(a)(2) and (b)(1) "shall not be considered crimes and shall not serve as the basis for revoking or modifying a person's supervision status" when healthcare is sought for an overdose:

> (a) Notwithstanding any other law, the offenses listed in subsection (b) of this section shall not be considered crimes and shall not serve as the sole basis for revoking or modifying a person's supervision status:
>
> (1) For a person who:
>
> (A) Reasonably believes that he or she is experiencing a drug or alcohol-related overdose and in good faith seeks health care for himself or herself;
>
> (B) Reasonably believes that another person is experiencing a drug or alcohol-related overdose and in good faith seeks healthcare for that person; or
>
> (C) Is reasonably believed to be experiencing a drug or alcohol-related overdose and for whom health care is sought; and
>
> (2) The offense listed in subsection (b) of this section arises from the same circumstances as the seeking of health care under paragraph (1) of this subsection.
>
> (b) The following offenses apply to subsection (a) of this section:
>
> . . .
>
> (5) Provided that the minor is at least 16 years of age and the provider is 25 years of age or younger:
>
> (B) Contributing to the delinquency of a minor with regard to possessing or consuming alcohol or, without a prescription, a controlled substance as prohibited by § 22-811(a)(2) and subject to the penalties provided in § 22-811(b)(1) . . . ."

D.C. Code § 7-403(a), (b)(5)(B).

COMMENTARY:
OFFENSES OUTSIDE TITLE 22 &
OFFENSES RECOMMENDED FOR REPEAL

RCC § 7-2502.01A. Possession of an Unregistered Firearm, Destructive Device, or Ammunition.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the possession of an unregistered firearm, destructive device, or ammunition offense and penalty gradations for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The offense proscribes possessing a firearm or ammunition without having registered a firearm under D.C. Code § 7-2502.07. The revised statute replaces the first sentence of D.C. Code § 7-2502.01(a) (concerning possession of an unregistered firearm or destructive device); 7-2506.01(a) (Persons permitted to possess ammunition); and 7-2507.06 (Penalties); and 24 DCMR § 2343.2 (Ammunition carried by licensee). This section is added to the list of excepted code provisions in D.C. Code § 7-2507.06(a).

Subsection (a) specifies the elements of first degree possession of an unregistered firearm, destructive device, or ammunition. Subsection (a) specifies that a person must knowingly possess[1] an unregistered firearm, destructive device, or restricted pistol bullet. "Knowingly" is a defined term[2] and applied here means that the person must be practically certain that they possess the firearm or destructive device. "Possesses" is a defined term and includes both actual and constructive possession.[3] Constructive possession requires intent to exercise dominion and control over an object and to guide its destiny.[4] Evidence of knowledge of an item's location is required, but not necessarily sufficient, to demonstrate constructive possession.[5]

Paragraph (a)(1) provides that a person commits first degree possession of an unregistered firearm, destructive device, or ammunition by possessing an unregistered firearm. "Firearm" is a defined term,[6] which includes inoperable weapons that may be redesigned, remade or readily converted or restored to operability[7] but excludes antiques.[8] Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, a person must know—that is be practically certain—they possess a firearm[9] or that they possess component parts that could

[1] Knowledge of a gun's presence may be inferred from surrounding circumstances; direct evidence is not required. Logan v. United States, 489 A.2d 485 (D.C. 1985); see also Matter of T.M., 577 A.2d 1149 (D.C. 1990). However, the government must show a connection between the seized weapon and the criminal venture in order to enable the jury reasonably to infer the venturer's knowledge of the weapon. Easley v. United States, 482 A.2d 779 (D.C. 1984).
[2] "Knowingly" is defined in RCC § 22E-206.
[3] RCC § 22E-701.
[4] See, e.g., In re M.I.W., 667 A.2d 573 (D.C. 1995); Guishard v. United States, 669 A.2d 1306, 1312 (D.C. 1995).
[5] See, e.g., Walker v. United States, 982 A.2d 723 (D.C. 2009) (holding while factfinder could infer that defendant knew of presence of gun, gun was inferentially in companion's sole possession throughout time police observed defendant and companion); Matter of L.A.V., 578 A.2d 708 (D.C. 1990).
[6] D.C. Code § 7-2501.01.
[7] Townsend v. United States, 559 A.2d 1319 (D.C. 1989).
[8] Unless there is evidence that the firearm is antique, the government is not required to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the firearms are not antique as an element of the offense in its case-in-chief. Toler v. United States, 198 A.3d 767 (D.C. 2018).
[9] See Campos v. United States, 617 A.2d 185, 187-88 (D.C. 1992) (explaining, that a person who has no knowledge that he or she has a pistol, despite the fact that it is located on his or her person, does not exercise direct physical control over the pistol).

be arranged to make a whole firearm.[10] Paragraph (a)(1) requires proof that the accused lacked a firearm registration certificate on the day in question.[11] Paragraph (a)(1) uses the term "in fact" to specify that there is no culpable mental state required as to whether the person has a registration certificate.[12] It is not a defense that the person was unaware of the duty to register the firearm.[13] It is not a defense that the firearm cannot be registered lawfully in the District.[14]

Paragraph (a)(2) provides that a person commits first degree possession of an unregistered firearm, destructive device, or ammunition by possessing a destructive device. The term "destructive device" is a defined[15] term that includes certain explosives and lacrimators but excludes B-B guns and flare guns. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, a person must know—that is be practically certain—they possess one of the objects that is included in the definition of "destructive device."

Paragraph (a)(3) provides that a person commits first degree possession of an unregistered firearm, destructive device, or ammunition by possessing one or more restricted pistol bullets. The term "restricted pistol bullet" is defined[16] to include several categories of pistol and rifle ammunition that are likely to pierce through bullet-resistant tactical vests. The term does not include hollow-point bullets. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, a person must know—that is be practically certain—they possess one of the objects that is included in the definition of "restricted pistol bullet."

Subsection (b) specifies the elements of second degree possession of an unregistered firearm, destructive device, or ammunition. Subsection (b) specifies that a

[10] Myers v. United States, 56 A.3d 1148 (D.C. 2012).
[11] See Herrington v. United States, 6 A.3d 1237, 1244-45 (D.C. 2010) (stating a legislature may not presume criminality from Second Amendment-protected conduct and put the burden of persuasion on the accused to prove facts necessary to establish innocence); see also Walker v. United States, 982 A.2d 723, 738 (D.C. 2009) (explaining to convict a defendant on an aiding and abetting theory, the government must show that the principal (not the aider and abettor) was not licensed) (citing Halicki v. United States, 614 A.2d 499, 503-04 (D.C.1992)); Tabaka v. Dist. of Columbia, 976 A.2d 173, 175 (D.C. 2009) (explaining that a record of no permit is testimonial, triggering the Confrontation Clause of the Sixth Amendment to the United States Constitution).
[12] RCC § 22E-207.
[13] McIntosh v. Washington, 395 A.2d 744 (D.C. 1978); Sandidge v. United States, 520 A.2d 1057 (D.C. 1987); District of Columbia v. Lewis, 136 WLR 2609 (Super. Ct. 2008).
[14] See United States v. Carmel, 548 F.3d 571, 579 (7th Cir.2008) (holding that defendant could have complied with statute prohibiting possession of unregistered firearms "simply by declining to possess…illegal machine guns," which could not be registered because they could not legally be possessed); United States v. Grier, 354 F.3d 210, 214–15 (3d Cir.2003) (same); United States v. Bournes, 339 F.3d 396, 399 (6th Cir.2003) (same); United States v. Elliott, 128 F.3d 671, 672 (8th Cir.1997) (same); Hunter v. United States, 73 F.3d 260, 261–62 (9th Cir.1996) (same); United States v. Ardoin, 19 F.3d 177, 179–80 (5th Cir.1994) (same); United States v. Jones, 976 F.2d 176, 183 (4th Cir.1992) (same); but see United States v. Dalton, 960 F.2d 121, 124 (10th Cir.1992) (reversing conviction for possession of unregistered machine gun, holding that a conviction for a crime that "ha[s] as an essential element [the defendant's] failure to do an act that he is incapable of performing" violates due process).
[15] D.C. Code § 7-2501.01.
[16] RCC § 22E-701.

person must knowingly possess a specified object.[17] "Knowingly" is a defined term[18] and applied here means that the person must be practically certain that they possess the object. "Possesses" is a defined term and includes both actual and constructive possession.[19] Constructive possession requires intent to exercise dominion and control over an object and to guide its destiny.[20] Evidence of knowledge of an item's location is required, but not necessarily sufficient, to demonstrate constructive possession.[21]

Subsection (b) provides that a person commits second degree possession of an unregistered firearm, destructive device, or ammunition by possessing ammunition without having a registered firearm of the same caliber. "Ammunition" is a defined term,[22] which means cartridge cases, shells, projectiles (including shot), primers, bullets (including restricted pistol bullets), propellant powder, or other devices or materials designed, redesigned, or intended for use in a firearm or destructive device. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, a person must know—that is be practically certain—they possess one of the objects that is included in the definition of "ammunition." Subsection (b) uses the term "in fact" to specify that there is no culpable mental state required as to whether the person lacked a firearm registration certificate on the day in question.[23] It is not a defense that the person was unaware of the duty to have a registered firearm. It is not a defense that a firearm of the same caliber cannot be registered lawfully in the District.

Subsection (c) establishes six exclusions from liability.[24] Paragraph (c)(1) excludes from liability possession of a firearm frame, receiver, muffler, or silencer.[25] Possession of a silencer is punished as possession of a prohibited weapon or accessory.[26] Paragraph (c)(1) specifies "in fact," a defined term in RCC § 22E-207 that indicates there is no culpable mental state requirement for a given element, here, that the actor possesses a firearm frame, receiver, muffler, or silencer.

---

[17] Knowledge of ammunition's presence may be inferred from surrounding circumstances; direct evidence is not required. See Ko v. United States, 722 A.2d 830 (D.C. 1998) (upholding conviction of unlawful possession of ammunition on evidence that defendant, who had purchased a restaurant, found ammunition owned by seller in office, put that ammunition in his desk drawer, and made no attempt for several months to return ammunition to the seller).

[18] "Knowingly" is defined in RCC § 22E-206.

[19] RCC § 22E-701.

[20] See, e.g., In re M.I.W., 667 A.2d 573 (D.C. 1995); Guishard v. United States, 669 A.2d 1306, 1312 (D.C. 1995).

[21] See, e.g., Walker v. United States, 982 A.2d 723 (D.C. 2009) (holding while factfinder could infer that defendant knew of presence of gun, gun was inferentially in companion's sole possession throughout time police observed defendant and companion); Matter of L.A.V., 578 A.2d 708 (D.C. 1990).

[22] RCC § 22E-701.

[23] Dorsey v. United States, 154 A.3d 106, 112 (D.C. 2017); Herrington v. United States, 6 A.3d 1237 (D.C. 2010).

[24] RCC § 22E-201(b)(1) ("If there is any evidence of a statutory exclusion from liability at trial, the government must prove the absence of at least one element of the exclusion from liability beyond a reasonable doubt.").

[25] D.C. Code § 7-2501.01 defines "firearm" to include frames, receivers, mufflers, and silencers.

[26] RCC § 22E-4101.

Paragraph (c)(2) excludes from liability possession of a lacrimator or sternutator.[27] Paragraph (c)(2) specifies "in fact," a defined term in RCC § 22E-207 that indicates there is no culpable mental state requirement for a given element, here, that the actor possesses a lacrimator or sternutator.

Paragraph (c)(3) excludes from liability possession of a firearm by a nonresident who is traveling through the District with the firearm that they have registered in another state. Paragraph (c)(3) specifies "in fact," a defined term in RCC § 22E-207 that indicates there is no culpable mental state requirement for a given element. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the "in fact" specified in paragraph (c)(3) applies to all the elements in paragraph (c)(3), subparagraph (c)(3)(A), and subparagraph (c)(3)(B) and its sub-subparagraphs and sub-sub-subparagraphs, and there is no culpable mental state for any of these requirements. Subparagraph (c)(3)(A) excludes nonresidents who are participating in a lawful recreational firearm-related activity[28] inside the District. Subparagraph (c)(3)(B) excludes non-residents who are traveling to or from a lawful recreational firearm-related activity outside the District. Subparagraph (c)(3)(B) requires that the person comply with any law enforcement officer's demand for proof that they meet the exclusion criteria. "Law enforcement officer" is a defined in RCC § 22E-701. Subparagraph (c)(3)(B) also requires that the firearm be safely transported consistent with RCC § 22E-4109.

Paragraph (c)(4) excludes from liability possession of ammunition by any person who holds an ammunition collector's certificate issued before the Firearms Control Regulation Act of 1975 became effective. Paragraph (c)(4) specifies "in fact," a defined term in RCC § 22E-207 that indicates there is no culpable mental state requirement for a given element, here, that the actor holds an ammunition collector's certificate effective on or before September 24, 1976.

Paragraph (c)(5) excludes empty cartridge casings, shells, and spent bullets from the reach of the second degree possession of an unregistered firearm, destructive device, or ammunition offense.[29] Paragraph (c)(5) specifies "in fact," a defined term in RCC § 22E-207 that indicates there is no culpable mental state requirement for a given element, here, that the actor possesses one or more empty cartridge cases, shells, or spent bullets.

Paragraph (c)(6) cross-references applicable exclusions from liability for certain weapons offenses in the RCC. Paragraph (c)(6) specifies "in fact," a defined term in RCC § 22E-207 that indicates there is no culpable mental state requirement for a given element, here the fact that the actor satisfies the criteria in RCC § 22E-4118.

Subsection (d) establishes an affirmative defense for a person who is voluntarily surrendering a weapon. The person must comply with the requirements of a District or [27] D.C. Code § 7-2501.01 defines "destructive device" to include any device containing tear gas or a chemically similar lacrimator or sternutator by whatever name known.

[28] E.g., safety training course, firing range practice, gun show, shooting competition.
[29] For example, a person who keeps a shotgun shell as a souvenir, after a day of recreational skeet shooting, does not commit a second degree possession of unregistered firearm, destructive device, or ammunition offense.

federal voluntary surrender statute or rule.[30] Per RCC § 22E-201(b), the defense has the burden of proving an affirmative defense by a preponderance of the evidence.

Subsection (e) states that the Attorney General for the District of Columbia is responsible for prosecuting violations of the statute.[31]

Subsection (f) provides the penalty for each gradation of the revised offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.] Paragraph (f)(3) provides that the Attorney General may allow a person charged with possession of an unregistered firearm, destructive device, or ammunition to resolve the charge using the District's post-and-forfeit procedure.[32]

Subsection (g) cross-references applicable definitions in the RCC and the D.C. Code.

Subsection (h) specifies that Chapters 1 – 6 the RCC's General Part apply to this Title 7 offense.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised possession of an unregistered firearm, destructive device, or ammunition offense clearly changes current District law in eight main ways.

First, the revised statute eliminates repeat offender penalty enhancements consistent with other nonviolent revised offenses. Current D.C. Code § 7-2507.06 provides two different penalties for an unregistered firearm. Subsection (a) specifies a maximum penalty of one year of incarceration, a fine of $2,500, or both.[33] Paragraph (a)(2) of D.C. Code § 7-2507.06 specifies that a second offense is punishable by a maximum penalty of five years of incarceration, a fine of $12,500, or both, unless the person is in their dwelling place, place of business, or on their land and possesses a firearm that could otherwise be registered.[34] (Subparagraph (b)(1)(A) of D.C. Code § 7-2507.06 specifically authorizes the Attorney General to offer an alternative administrative disposition without conviction, but this provision is superfluous because general authority to offer such a disposition exists in D.C. Code § 5-335.01.) In contrast, the RCC does not provide an offense-specific penalty enhancement for a second or subsequent offense. The RCC general recidivism enhancement (RCC § 22E-606) is limited to RCC offenses against persons and enhanced

[30] See, e.g., D.C. Code §§ 7-2507.05; 7-2510.07(f)(1); see also Worthy v. United States, 420 A.2d 1216, 1218 (D.C. 1980) (citing Logan v. United States, 402 A.2d 822 (D.C. 1979); Hines v. United States, 326 A.2d 247, 248 (D.C. 1974)); Stein v. United States, 532 A.2d 641, 646 (D.C. 1987); Yoon v. United States, 594 A.2d 1056 (D.C. 1991). See also RCC § 22E-502, Temporary Possession.

[31] Because provisions of statutes governing offenses of possession of an unregistered firearm (UF) and unlawful possession of ammunition (UA) are "police or municipal ordinances or regulations," prosecutorial authority lies with the Office of the Attorney General of the District of Columbia (OAG), rather than Office of the United States Attorney (USAO), irrespective of the fact that a violation of these provisions carries a maximum penalty of both a fine and imprisonment. In re Hall, 31 A.3d 453 (D.C. 2011).

[32] Although diversion would be permissible without this statutory language, codifying the Council's intent to afford a noncriminal negotiated resolution to many (or most) people charged with this offense provides better notice to the public and criminal justice system actors.

[33] D.C. Code § 22-3571.01.

[34] D.C. Code § 22-3571.01.

burglary, which requires the presence of a dangerous weapon or imitation firearm. This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised statute.

Second, the revised offense does not include liability for possession of a frame, receiver, muffler, silencer, lacrimator or sternutator. Current D.C. Code § 7-2501.01 defines "firearm" to include frames, receivers, mufflers, and silencers and defines "destructive device" to include any device containing tear gas or a chemically similar lacrimator or sternutator by whatever name known. Unlike firearms, the United States Supreme Court has not yet considered whether these parts and accessories are "bearable arms" protected by the Second Amendment.[35] With limited exceptions for military and law enforcement,[36] the RCC criminalizes mere possession of a silencer as contraband per se[37] and, because any possession is illegal, does not regulate their registration, storage, or carrying. The RCC does not criminalize possession of self-defense sprays.[38] This change improves the proportionality and logically reorganizes the revised offenses.

Third, the revised statute punishes possession of a restricted pistol bullet as possession of an unregistered firearm, destructive device, or ammunition[39] only. Current 24 DCMR § 2343.2 states, "A person issued a concealed carry license by the Chief may not carry any restricted pistol bullet as that term is defined in the Act." However, mere possession—much less actual possession or carrying—of a restricted pistol bullet by any person, including the holder of a carry license, is prohibited under other provisions in current law.[40] In contrast, the revised code effectively repeals 23 DCMR § 2343.2 as duplicative of the prohibition on restricted pistol bullets in the revised possession of a prohibited weapon or accessory offense.[41] This change improves the logical organization of the revised code and reduces unnecessary overlap between District offenses.

Fourth, the revised statute specifies that the general provisions of Chapters 1 through 6 of Subtitle I of Title 22E of the D.C. Code apply to this offense. The current D.C. Code generally does not codify consistent definitions, rules of liability, rules of interpretation, or general defenses. In contrast, Subtitle I of Title 22E sets forth broadly applicable rules and definitions relating to the basic requirements of criminal liability, inchoate liability, justification defenses, and penalty enhancements. Application of these general provisions to the possession of an unregistered firearm, destructive device, or ammunition offense may change District law in numerous ways. For more in-depth discussion of these general provisions, see commentary accompanying statutory provisions in Subtitle I of Title 22E. These changes improve the clarity, completeness, and proportionality of the revised offense.

---

[35] See United States v. Cox, 906 F.3d 1170 (10th Cir. 2018), cert. denied, 2019 WL 235139, U.S. (June 10, 2019).
[36] RCC § 22E-4118.
[37] RCC § 22E-4101, possession of a prohibited weapon or accessory.
[38] See First Draft of Report #40.
[39] RCC § 7-2502.01A(b)(2).
[40] With limited exceptions, a person who has any ammunition (defined in D.C. Code § 7-2501.01 to include restricted pistol bullets) without having a registered firearm of the same caliber, may be prosecuted under D.C. Code § 7-2506.01. A person who has a registered firearm is nevertheless prohibited from having one or more restricted pistol bullets under D.C. Code § 7-2506.01(a)(3).
[41] RCC § 22E-4101(a)(2)(F).

Fifth, the revised statute's Administrative Disposition[42] provision does not specify the factors the Attorney General must consider before offering diversion. Current D.C. Code § 7-2506.07(b) narrows prosecutorial discretion in at least one way. Paragraph (b)(1) permits an administrative disposition only, "provided, that the person is not concurrently charged with another criminal offense arising from the same event, other than an offense pursuant to § 7-2502.01 or § 7-2506.01." Paragraph (b)(2) states, "the prosecution, in the operation of its discretion, may consider, among other factors, whether at the time of his or her arrest, the person was a resident of the District of Columbia and whether the person had knowledge of § 7-2502.01, § 7-2506.01, or § 7-2507.06(a)(3)(B)." And, paragraph (b)(5) states, "The Mayor…may provide procedures and criteria to be used in determining when the prosecution, in the operation of its discretion, may offer the option of an administrative disposition pursuant to this subsection." While the provisions in paragraphs (b)(2) and (b)(5) appear to be discretionary, the provision in paragraph (b)(1) of D.C. Code § 7-2506.07 is a requirement. In contrast, the RCC does not codify the criteria to be considered for initially charging any particular offense and instead leaves the factors to be weighed in charging decisions to the discretion of the prosecutor.[43] This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised offenses.

Sixth, the revised offense punishes possession of one restricted bullet as severely as possession of two or more. Current D.C. Code § 7-2507.06(a) provides a maximum penalty of one year in jail for possession of a single restricted pistol bullet and a maximum of 10 years in prison for possession of two or more. D.C. Code § 7-2507.06(b)(1)(B) authorizes the Attorney General to offer an alternative administrative disposition without conviction for possession a single restricted pistol bullet but not for possession of two or more.[44] In contrast, the revised offense provides a single penalty gradation for possession of restricted ammunition. It is unclear why such a sharp difference in penalty is supported by possessing one bullet versus possessing two or more bullets.[45] This change improves the proportionality of the revised offense.

Seventh, the RCC codifies a single list of exclusions from liability for possessory weapons offenses that are incorporated into the revised possession of an unregistered firearm, destructive device, or ammunition offense by reference.[46] The current D.C. Code provisions list incongruent exceptions for law enforcement officers, weapons dealers, government employees, and nonresidents who possess an unregistered firearm, destructive device, or ammunition.[47] In contrast, RCC § 22E-4118 provides a single, comprehensive

---

[42] The Administrative Disposition referenced is the post-and-forfeit procedure described in D.C. Code § 5-335.01. No separate rules are intended to apply to possession of a stun gun as opposed to other post-and-forfeit eligible offenses.

[43] See American Bar Association, Criminal Justice Standards for the Prosecution Function Fourth Addition Standard 3-4.2(b), 3-4.3(a), and 3-4.4 (February 13, 2015).

[44] This provision is technically superfluous since general authority to offer such a disposition exists in D.C. Code § 5-335.01.

[45] Firearms frequently hold six rounds of ammunition or more. Ammunition is often sold in boxes of 50 rounds or more.

[46] RCC § 22E-4118.

[47] The following three examples provide an illustrative, though inexhaustive, list. First, a person who participates in a firearms training and safety class is not liable for transporting a registered firearm to or list of exclusions from liability, reconciling the exclusion circumstances described in current law. Moreover, legitimate use of weapons by law enforcement and others fall under the general provisions' justification defense for execution of public duty.[48] This change improves the clarity, consistency, and completeness of the revised code.

Eighth, the revised offense codifies a voluntary surrender affirmative defense. D.C. Code §§ 7-2507.05 and 7-2510.07(f)(1) preclude prosecution for certain possessory weapons offenses where the person is voluntarily surrendering the weapon to law enforcement. The current statutes do not address the elements or burden of proof for a defense based on one of these provisions, however District case law has explained the showing that must be made by the defense.[49] The revised statute specifies that any voluntary surrender that is made pursuant to District or federal law is an affirmative defense that must be proven by the defense by a preponderance of the evidence.[50] This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised offense.

Beyond these eight changes to current District law, three other aspects of the revised statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised statute holds an actor strictly liable as to the existence of a firearm registration certificate. Current D.C. Code §§ 22-4502.01, 22-4506.01, and 22-4507.06 do not specify a culpable mental state for any element of the unregistered firearm, destructive device, or ammunition offenses.[51] District case law has not addressed whether a reasonable or unreasonable mistake of fact as to having validly registered a firearm is a defense.[52] The revised offense makes no allowance for such a defense. A firearm owner is required to comply with all District regulations, including receiving training on the responsibilities of ownership.[53] This change clarifies the revised offense.

---

from the class and is not liable for possessing ammunition during the class, however, there is no exception in current law for possessing a firearm during a firearm training and safety class. See, e.g., D.C. Code § 22-4504.02(a); 22-4505(c); 7-2506.01(a)(5). Second, a member of the military avoids prosecution for possession of an assault weapon, machine gun, or sawed-off shotgun, however, there is no military exception for possession of a large-capacity ammunition feeding device. D.C. Code § 22-4514(a); 7-2506.01(b). Third, consistent with 18 U.S.C. 926C, D.C. Code § 22-4505(b) provides that a retired Metropolitan Police Officer who carries a registered firearm is not liable for carrying a dangerous weapon, however, D.C. Code § 22-4514(a) does not include a similar exception for possession of a prohibited weapon.

[48] RCC § 22E-402.

[49] See Worthy v. United States, 420 A.2d 1216, 1218 (D.C. 1980) (citing Logan v. United States, 402 A.2d 822 (D.C. 1979); Hines v. United States, 326 A.2d 247, 248 (D.C. 1974)); Stein v. United States, 532 A.2d 641, 646 (D.C. 1987); Yoon v. United States, 594 A.2d 1056 (D.C. 1991).

[50] See RCC § 22E-201(b); see also RCC § 22E-502, Temporary Possession.

[51] District case law requires knowledge for actual or constructive possession of any item. See, e.g., Campos v. United States, 617 A.2d 185, 187-88 (D.C. 1992); United States v. Joseph, 892 F.2d 118, 125 (D.C. Cir. 1989); Thompson v. United States, 567 A.2d 907, 908 (D.C. 1989); Easley v. United States, 482 A.2d 779, 781 (D.C. 1984).

[52] Consider, for example, a person who mistakenly believes their registration expires in July instead of June. Consider also a person who inherits a firearm believing the registration certificate was transferred to them in probate.

[53] See D.C. Code § 7-2502.03(a)(10).

Second, the RCC's exclusion for nonresidents traveling through the District, in paragraph (c)(3) of the revised offense, requires that the person exhibit proof that they meet the exclusion criteria to any "law enforcement officer" who demands it. D.C. Code § 7-2502.01(b)(3) requires that a nonresident in these circumstances comply with such a request made by a Metropolitan Police Officer "or other bona fide law enforcement officer." The term "bona fide law enforcement officer" is not defined in the statute and District case law has not interpreted its meaning. In contrast, the revised offense uses the standardized definition of "law enforcement officer" that is employed throughout the RCC.[54] The RCC definition of "law enforcement officer" includes special police officers, corrections officers, and other government actors who do not have arrest powers, which may be broader than the phrase "bona fide law enforcement officer" in current law. This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised offense and may eliminate an unnecessary gap in liability.

Third, the revised statute refers to "possession" and does not include explicit references to transferring, offering for sale, selling, giving, or delivering a destructive device. D.C. Code § 7-2502.01(a) makes it unlawful to receive, possess, control, transfer, offer for sale, sell, give, or deliver any destructive device. Such conduct is also prohibited by D.C. Code §§ 7-2504.01(b) and 7-2505.01. In contrast, the RCC's definition of possess[55] includes both actual possession and constructive possession. A person who knowingly transfers, offers, sells, gives, or delivers a destructive device appears to either violate the revised statute by having the ability and desire to exercise control over the object, or, when falsely advertising an object for sale, is engaged in conduct criminalized elsewhere.[56] This change improves the consistency of the revised statutes and reduces unnecessary overlap between offenses.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

First, the revised statute applies a standardized definition for the "knowingly" culpable mental state required for possession of an unregistered firearm, destructive device, or ammunition liability. The current statutes do not specify a requisite mental state,[57] however, District case law requires knowledge for actual or constructive possession of any item.[58] The revised statute uses the RCC's general provisions that define "knowingly" and specify that culpable mental states apply until the occurrence of a new culpable mental state in the offense.[59] These changes clarify and improve the consistency of District statutes.

---

[54] RCC § 22E-701.
[55] RCC § 22E-701.
[56] See D.C. Code § 22-1511 (Fraudulent advertising).
[57] D.C. Code §§ 7-2502.01; 7-2506.01.
[58] See, e.g., Campos v. United States, 617 A.2d 185, 187-88 (D.C. 1992); United States v. Joseph, 892 F.2d 118, 125 (D.C. Cir. 1989); Thompson v. United States, 567 A.2d 907, 908 (D.C. 1989); Easley v. United States, 482 A.2d 779, 781 (D.C. 1984).
[59] RCC § 22E-207.

Second, the revised code defines "possession" in its general part.[60] The D.C. Code does not codify a definition of possession, although it is an element of several property, drug, and weapon offenses. Instead, parties rely on District case law concerning what evidence is or is not sufficient to establish that the accused actually or constructively or jointly possessed an unlawful item.[61] The RCC definition of "possession,"[62] with the requirement in the offense that the possession be "knowing,"[63] matches the meaning of possession in current DCCA case law.[64] The RCC definition of possession improves the consistency of possessory elements throughout revised statutes.

Third, the revised offense does not specifically include a self-defense provision. Current D.C. Code § 7-2502.01(b)(4) specifies that a person will not be subject to prosecution "who temporarily possesses a firearm…while in the home or place of business of the registrant…[if] the person reasonably believes that possession of the firearm is necessary to prevent imminent death or great bodily harm to himself or herself." An offense-specific self-defense provision is duplicative in the RCC. Per subsection (h) of the revised statute, the general provisions of Chapters 1 through 6 of Subtitle I of Title 22E of the D.C. Code apply to this offense, including general provisions that preclude liability where a person acts in defense of one's self, a third person, or property.[65] This change improves the consistency of the revised offenses.

Fourth, the revised statute requires the government prove that a person who possesses ammunition does not have a registered firearm of the same caliber. Current D.C. Code § 7-2506.01(a) states that no person shall possess ammunition unless one of five circumstances is present. The current statute does not specify whether the government has the burden of proving the absence of these circumstances or whether the defense must affirmatively raise any of the circumstances as a defense. However, the District of Columbia Court of Appeals ("DCCA") has required the government to prove the circumstance described in D.C. Code § 7-2506.01(a)(3): the absence of a firearm

---

[60] RCC § 22E-701.
[61] See Criminal Jury Instructions for the District of Columbia Instruction 3.104 (2018).
[62] RCC § 22E-701.
[63] RCC § 22E-206.
[64] See United States v. Hubbard, 429 A.2d 1334, 1338 (D.C. 1981) ("Actual possession has been defined as the ability of a person to knowingly exercise direct physical custody or control over the property in question. See United States v. Spears, 145 U.S.App.D.C. 284, 293, 449 F.2d 946, 955 (1971); Spencer v. United States, 73 U.S.App.D.C. 98, 99, 116 F.2d 801, 802 (1940)."); see also Rivas v. U.S., 783 A.2d 125, 128 (D.C. 2001) (en banc) ("[I]n…constructive possession cases, there must be something more in the totality of the circumstances–a word or deed, a relationship or other probative factor–that, considered in conjunction with the evidence of proximity and knowledge, proves beyond a reasonable doubt that the passenger intended to exercise dominion or control over the drugs, and was not a mere bystander." (Emphasis in original.)); Guishard v. United States, 669 A.2d 1306, 1312 (D.C. 1995) ("To obtain a conviction based on a theory of constructive possession, the government must prove that the defendant knew of the location of the contraband, that he had the ability to exercise dominion and control over it, and that he 'intended to guide [its] destiny.' Speight v. United States, 599 A.2d 794, 796 (D.C.1991); In re T.M., 577 A.2d 1149, 1151–1152 n. 5 (D.C.1990); Bernard v. United States, 575 A.2d 1191, 1195–1196 (D.C.1990).").
[65] See RCC §§ 22E-403; 22E-404.

registration certificate.[66] The revised offense clarifies that the absence of a firearm registration certificate is an element that must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt, whereas the other exceptions[67] are not elements of the offense. Consistent with the RCC's general assignment of the burden of proof for exclusions from liability, if there is any evidence of a statutory exclusion at trial, then the government must prove the absence of at least one element of that exclusion beyond a reasonable doubt.[68] This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised offense.

Fifth, the revised statute is severed from D.C. Code § 7-2502.01 and given its own section in the revised code. This change clarifies that the exclusion, defense, penalties, and definitions do not apply to remaining provisions in D.C. Code § 7-2502.01 that are not being revised at this time. This change improves the clarity and logical organization of the revised statutes.

[66] In Logan v. United States, the District of Columbia Court of Appeals ("DCCA") construed the statute to mean that possession of ammunition is presumptively unlawful and, thus, the government does not have the burden of proving that a defendant is not a licensee, an authorized government officer, agent or employee, a registrant of firearms of the same caliber as the ammunition possessed, or a certified dealer. 489 A.2d 485, 492-93 (D.C. 1985). However, in Herrington v. United States, the DCCA held that Logan was unconstitutional as applied to a person who possesses ammunition in their own home. 6 A.3d 1237, 1241-45 (D.C. 2010). The court reasoned that, where the Second Amendment imposes substantive limits on what conduct may be defined as a crime, a legislature may not "circumvent those limits by enacting a statute that presumes criminality from constitutionally-protected conduct and puts the burden of persuasion on the accused to prove facts necessary to establish innocence." Id. at 1244. The court did not reach the question of whether the holding in Logan would be unconstitutional as applied to a person outside the home. The revised offense resolves this ambiguity.

[67] RCC §§ 7-2502.01A(c)(1); 22E-4118.

[68] RCC § 22E-201(b)(1).

RCC § 7-2502.15. Possession of a Stun Gun.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the possession of a stun gun offense for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The offense proscribes possession of a stun gun by persons under 18 and possession of a stun gun in a prohibited location. The revised offense replaces D.C. Code §§ 7-2502.15 (Possession of stun guns) and 7-2507.06(b)(1)(E) (Penalties).

Subsection (a) specifies that to commit possession of a stun gun, a person must knowingly[1] possess a stun gun. "Stun gun" is a defined term and includes weapons that inflict injury by direct contact (commonly referred to as "stun guns") and weapons that can be fired from a distance (e.g., TASERs). "Possession" is also a defined term and includes both actual and constructive possession.[2] Constructive possession requires intent to exercise dominion and control over an object and to guide its destiny.[3]

Paragraph (a)(1) prohibits knowing possession of a stun gun by any person who is under 18 years of age. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the person must know—that is, be practically certain—that he or she is under 18 years of age.

Paragraph (a)(2) prohibits possession of a stun gun by any person in a specified location. Subparagraph (a)(2)(A) specifies that the first type of location where stun guns are prohibited is a District government-occupied building, building grounds, or part of a building. The term "building" is defined in RCC § 22E-701. "Building grounds" refers to the area of land occupied by the facility and its yard and outbuildings, with a clearly identified perimeter. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the person must know—that is, be practically certain—that he or she is in a location that is occupied by the District of Columbia.

Subparagraph (a)(2)(B) specifies that the second type of location that may ban stun guns under penalty of criminal prosecution under this section is a location that is a building, building grounds, or part of a building that is occupied by a preschool, primary or secondary school, public youth center, or a children's day care center.[4] The term "building" is defined in RCC § 22E-701 and does not include open campus space. "Building grounds" refers to the area of land occupied by the facility and its yard and outbuildings, with a clearly identified perimeter. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the person must know—that is, be practically certain—that he or she is in a specified location.

Subparagraph (a)(2)(C) specifies that the third type of location that may ban stun guns under penalty of criminal prosecution under this section is one that displays signage that clearly and conspicuously indicates stun guns are not permitted there. Whether a sign is clear and conspicuous may depend on facts such as its placement, legibility, and word

[1] "Knowingly" is defined in RCC § 22E-206.
[2] RCC § 22E-701; see also Rivas v. United States, 783 A.2d 125, 128 (D.C. 2001).
[3] See, e.g., In re M.I.W., 667 A.2d 573 (D.C. 1995); Guishard v. United States, 669 A.2d 1306, 1312 (D.C. 1995).
[4] These locations include buildings that are being used for the specified purpose. They do not include, for example, an address that is used only to receive mail for an online education program.

choice.[5] Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the person must know—that is, be practically certain—that he or she is in a location where such signage is displayed.

Subsection (b) cross-references applicable exclusions from liability for certain weapons offenses in the RCC. Subsection (b) specifies "in fact," a defined term in RCC § 22E-207 that indicates there is no culpable mental state requirement for a given element, here the fact that the actor satisfies the criteria in RCC § 22E-4118.

Subsection (c) codifies an effective consent affirmative defense to the possession of a stun gun offense.[6] The effective consent defense requires either the complainant's "effective consent" to the actor's conduct or that the actor reasonably believes[7] that a person lawfully in charge of the location gives effective consent to the conduct charged to constitute the offense. Subsection (c) specifies "in fact," a defined term in RCC § 22E-207 that is used to indicate that there is no culpable mental state requirement as to a given element. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, "in fact" applies to every element of the affirmative defense in subsection (c), and no culpable mental state, as defined in RCC § 22E-205, applies to the defense. Reasonableness is an objective standard that must take into account certain characteristics of the actor but not others.[8] "Effective consent" is a defined term in RCC § 22E-701 that means "consent other than consent induced by physical force, an explicit or implicit coercive threat, or deception."

Subsection (d) states that the Attorney General for the District of Columbia is responsible for prosecuting violations of the statute.

Subsection (e) provides the penalty for the revised offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.]

Subsection (f) cross-references applicable definitions in the RCC.

Subsection (g) specifies that Chapters 1 – 6 of the RCC's General Part apply to this Title 7 offense.

---

[5] This is a more flexible standard than provided in the District's current municipal regulation of signage preventing entry onto private property with a concealed firearm. 24 DCMR § 2346 (requiring a sign at the that is at least eight (8) inches by ten (10) inches in size and contains writing in contrasting ink using not less than thirty-six (36) point type).

[6] See D.C. Code § 7-2502.15(c) ("Unless permission specific to the individual and occasion is given…").

[7] Any circumstance element or result element that is the object of the phrase "reasonably believes" need not be proven to actually exist. It is an unusual scenario where an actor actually has effective consent but mistakenly believes he or she does not, and commits a crime. However, in such a situation, there may be attempt liability for attempted possession of a stun gun under the RCC general provision for attempt in RCC § 22E-301, which includes that the actor "would have come dangerously close to completing that offense if the situation was as the [actor] perceived it to be."

[8] See, e.g., Model Penal Code § 2.02 cmt. at 241-42 (1985) (citations omitted). "…these questions are asked not in terms of what the actor's perceptions actually were, but in terms of an objective view of the situation as it actually existed. … The standard for ultimate judgement invites consideration of the 'care that a reasonable person would observe in the actor's situation.' There is an inevitable ambiguity in 'situation.' If the actor were blind or if he had just suffered a blow or experienced a heart attack, these would certainly be facts to be considered in a judgment involving criminal liability, as they would be under traditional law. But the heredity, intelligence or temperament of the actor would not be held material in judging negligence, and could not be without depriving the criterion of all of its objectivity. The Code is not intended to displace discriminations of this kind, but rather to leave the issue to the courts."

Relation to Current District Law. The revised possession of a stun gun offense clearly changes current District law in five main ways.

First, the revised offense does not separately prohibit using a stun gun. Current law provides, "No person who possesses a stun gun shall use that weapon except in the exercise of reasonable force in defense of person or property"[9] and that "brief possession [by a person under 18 years of age] for self-defense in response to an immediate threat of harm shall not be a violation of this subsection."[10] In contrast, the RCC punishes using a dangerous weapon (a defined term that includes a stun gun[11]) unlawfully against another person in a wide array of offenses against persons, such as assault,[12] or criminal threats.[13] Where a person acts in defense of one's self, a third person, or property, a general defense may apply.[14] The revised code does not criminalize using a stun gun in any other manner.[15] This change eliminates unnecessary overlap between revised offenses and improves the consistency of the revised offenses.

Second, the revised code does not specifically criminalize possession of a stun gun in a correctional facility as a weapons offense. Current law prohibits possession of a stun gun in a "penal institution, secure juvenile residential facility, or halfway house" as both possession of a stun gun[16] and as unlawful possession of contraband.[17] In contrast, the revised offense applies generally to buildings, grounds, or parts thereof occupied by the District of Columbia, which effectively reaches many correctional facilities in the District. For both District and non-District occupied correctional facilities, the RCC first degree correctional facility contraband offense[18] punishes possession of a dangerous weapon (a defined term that includes a stun gun[19]) by a person who is confined to a correctional facility or secure juvenile detention facility and also punishes bringing a dangerous weapon to a person who is confined in such a facility.[20] The RCC does not separately criminalize possession of a stun gun in a halfway house, however the Director of the Department of Corrections may suspend or revoke work release for any breach of discipline or infraction of institution regulations.[21] This change eliminates unnecessary overlap between revised offenses and improves the consistency of the revised code.

---

[9] D.C. Code § 7-2502.15(b).
[10] D.C. Code § 7-2502.15(a).
[11] RCC § 22E-701.
[12] RCC § 22E-1202.
[13] RCC § 22E-1204.
[14] See RCC §§ 22E-403; 22E-404.
[15] Consider, for example, a person who uses a stun gun to see test its operation or to inflict an injury to one's self.
[16] D.C. Code § 7-2502.15(c)(2).
[17] D.C. Code § 22-2603.02.
[18] RCC § 22E-3403(a).
[19] RCC § 22E-701.
[20] Notably, the correctional facility contraband offense does not reach persons who bring a dangerous weapon to a facility without intent to give it to someone who is confined. If a person brings a dangerous weapon to a facility with intent to use it unlawfully, that conduct is punished as possession of a dangerous weapon during a crime, under RCC § 22E-4104.
[21] D.C. Code § 24-241.05(a).

Third, the RCC separately codifies a standard list of exclusions from liability for possessory weapons offenses.[22] Current D.C. Code § 7-2502.15(c), by cross-reference to § 7-2509.01, provides an exception for police officers, special police officers, and campus police officers who carry stun guns. In contrast, RCC § 22E-4118 provides an exception for all military, law enforcement, and government employees who handle weapons, as well as civilians who are authorized to manufacture, sell, or repair weapons. Moreover, legitimate use of weapons by law enforcement falls under the general provisions' justification defense for execution of public duty.[23] This change improves the clarity, consistency, and completeness of the revised code.

Fourth, the revised statute's Administrative Disposition[24] provision does not specify the factors the Attorney General must consider before offering diversion. Current D.C. Code § 7-2506.07(b) narrows prosecutorial discretion in at least one way. Paragraph (b)(1) permits an administrative disposition only, "provided, that the person is not concurrently charged with another criminal offense arising from the same event, other than an offense pursuant to § 7-2502.01 or § 7-2506.01." Paragraph (b)(2) states, "the prosecution, in the operation of its discretion, may consider, among other factors, whether at the time of his or her arrest, the person was a resident of the District of Columbia and whether the person had knowledge of § 7-2502.01, § 7-2506.01, or § 7-2507.06(a)(3)(B)." And, paragraph (b)(5) states, "The Mayor…may provide procedures and criteria to be used in determining when the prosecution, in the operation of its discretion, may offer the option of an administrative disposition pursuant to this subsection." While the provisions in paragraphs (b)(2) and (b)(5) appear to be discretionary, the provision in paragraph (b)(1) of D.C. Code § 7-2506.07 is a requirement. In contrast, the RCC does not codify the criteria to be considered for initially charging any particular offense and instead leaves the factors to be weighed in charging decisions to the discretion of the prosecutor.[25] This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised offenses.

Fifth, the revised statute specifies that the general provisions of Chapters 1 through 6 of Subtitle I of Title 22E of the D.C. Code apply to this offense. The current D.C. Code generally does not codify consistent definitions, rules of liability, rules of interpretation, or general defenses. In contrast, Subtitle I of Title 22E sets forth broadly applicable rules and definitions relating to the basic requirements of criminal liability, inchoate liability, justification defenses, and penalty enhancements. Application of these general provisions to the possession of a stun gun offense may change District law in numerous ways. For more in-depth discussion of these general provisions, see commentary accompanying statutory provisions in Subtitle I of Title 22E. These changes improve the clarity, completeness, and proportionality of the revised offense.

---

[22] RCC § 22E-4118.
[23] RCC § 22E-402.
[24] The Administrative Disposition referenced is the post-and-forfeit procedure described in D.C. Code § 5-335.01. No separate rules are intended to apply to possession of a stun gun as opposed to other post-and-forfeit eligible offenses.
[25] See American Bar Association, Criminal Justice Standards for the Prosecution Function Fourth Addition Standard 3-4.2(b), 3-4.3(a), and 3-4.4 (February 13, 2015).

Beyond these five changes to current District law, two other aspects of the revised statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised statute specifies that knowledge the culpable mental states required for each element of the revised possession of a stun gun offense. The current statute is silent as to the applicable culpable mental state requirement, and no case law exists on point. Applying a knowledge culpable mental state requirement to statutory elements that distinguish innocent from criminal behavior is a well-established practice in American jurisprudence.[26] The revised statute requires that a person know that they possess a stun gun and that they know the nature of their location. A reading of the statute that makes a person strictly liable for would leave no margin for a reasonable mistake of fact or law by someone otherwise engaged in legal activity.[27] The revised statute does not impose criminal liability where a person exercises their constitutionally protected right to carry a stun gun[28] in a reasonably responsible manner. The revised offense applies a standardized definition for the "knowingly" culpable mental state required for possession of stun gun liability. This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statute.

Second, the revised statute codifies an effective consent affirmative defense. Current law prohibits possession of a stun gun in specified locations "Unless permission specific to the individual and occasion is given."[29] The statute does not address who must provide permission, whether permission must be freely given, whether the accused must be aware or certain of the permission, or which party has the burden of proving permission or lack of permission. Case law has not addressed these issues. To resolve these ambiguities, the revised possession of a stun gun statute details the meaning, burden of proof, and limitations of an effective consent defense to the revised possession of a stun gun offense. This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised offense.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

---

[26] There is a presumption that the legislature intends to require a defendant to possess a degree of knowledge sufficient to "mak[e] a person legally responsible for the consequences of his or her act or omission" regarding "each of the statutory elements that criminalize otherwise innocent conduct," even when the legislature does not specify any scienter in the statutory text. Rehaif v. United States, 17-9560, 2019 WL 2552487, at *3 (U.S. June 21, 2019) (citing United States v. X-Citement Video, Inc., 513 U. S. 64, 72 (1994); Morissette v. United States, 342 U. S. 246, 256–258 (1952); Staples v. United States, 511 U. S. 600, 606 (1994); Black's Law Dictionary 1547 (10th ed. 2014)); see also Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2009 (2015) ("[O]ur cases have explained that a defendant generally must 'know the facts that make his conduct fit the definition of the offense,' even if he does not know that those facts give rise to a crime." (Internal citation omitted)).

[27] Consider, for example, a person who carries a stun gun for self-defense and enters a coffeehouse in a government building that they mistakenly—but understandably—believe to be a private office building. Consider also, a person who cannot read English, who brushes past a large sign stating, "No stun guns allowed," to ask a security staff person whether stun guns are permitted.

[28] Caetano v. Massachusetts, 136 S. Ct. 1027 (2016).

[29] D.C. Code § 7-2502.15(c).

First, the revised statute requires signage that clearly and conspicuously indicates stun guns are not permitted. Current law criminalizes possession of a stun gun in "Any building or grounds clearly posted by the owner or occupant to prohibit the carrying of a stun gun."[30] The revised statute's language is substantively the same as the current statute, but phrased so as to be consistent with other RCC offenses. This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised offenses.

Second, the revised code defines "possession" in its general part.[31] The D.C. Code does not codify a definition of possession, although it is an element of several property, drug, and weapon offenses. Instead, parties rely on District case law concerning what evidence is or is not sufficient to establish that the accused actually or constructively or jointly possessed an unlawful item.[32] The RCC definition of "possession,"[33] with the requirement in the offense that the possession be "knowing,"[34] matches the meaning of possession in current DCCA case law.[35] The RCC definition of possession improves the consistency of possessory elements throughout revised statutes.

Third, the revised statute replaces the phrase "A building or office occupied by the District of Columbia, its agencies, or instrumentalities"[36] with the simpler "A building, building grounds, or part of a building, occupied by the District of Columbia" in subparagraph (a)(1)(A). The word "instrumentalities" as used in D.C. Code § 7-2502.15 is not defined in the statute and case law has not interpreted its meaning. Broadly construed, "instrumentalities" may include every person and business contracted to work on behalf of the District government, which would capture many locations that do not have heightened security concerns.[37]

Fourth, the revised statute clarifies the list of prohibited locations related to children. Current D.C. Code § 7-2502.15(c)(3) disallows stun guns in "[a] building or portion thereof, occupied by a children's facility, preschool, or public or private elementary or secondary school." The revised offense eliminates the superfluous reference to "public

---

[30] D.C. Code § 7-2502.15(c)(4).
[31] RCC § 22E-202.
[32] See Criminal Jury Instructions for the District of Columbia Instruction 3.104 (2018).
[33] RCC § 22E-701.
[34] RCC § 22E-206.
[35] See United States v. Hubbard, 429 A.2d 1334, 1338 (D.C. 1981) ("Actual possession has been defined as the ability of a person to knowingly exercise direct physical custody or control over the property in question. See United States v. Spears, 145 U.S.App.D.C. 284, 293, 449 F.2d 946, 955 (1971); Spencer v. United States, 73 U.S.App.D.C. 98, 99, 116 F.2d 801, 802 (1940)."); see also Rivas v. U.S., 783 A.2d 125, 128 (D.C. 2001) (en banc) ("[I]n…constructive possession cases, there must be something more in the totality of the circumstances–a word or deed, a relationship or other probative factor–that, considered in conjunction with the evidence of proximity and knowledge, proves beyond a reasonable doubt that the passenger intended to exercise dominion or control over the drugs, and was not a mere bystander." (Emphasis in original.)); Guishard v. United States, 669 A.2d 1306, 1312 (D.C. 1995) ("To obtain a conviction based on a theory of constructive possession, the government must prove that the defendant knew of the location of the contraband, that he had the ability to exercise dominion and control over it, and that he 'intended to guide [its] destiny.' Speight v. United States, 599 A.2d 794, 796 (D.C.1991); In re T.M., 577 A.2d 1149, 1151–1152 n. 5 (D.C.1990); Bernard v. United States, 575 A.2d 1191, 1195–1196 (D.C.1990).").
[36] D.C. Code § 7-2502.15(c)(1).
[37] Consider, for example, a restaurant that provides catering services to a District government event.

or private" and substitutes for the vague reference to "children's facility" the terms "public recreation center" and "children's day care center." The latter terms are locations similarly protected from firearms[38] and drug activity[39] under the revised code.

Fifth, the revised statute replaces the phrases "A building or office occupied by…" and "A building or portion thereof, occupied by"[40] with the simpler "A building, building grounds, or part of a building…" This clarifies that a person does not commit an offense by entering another part of the building that is not occupied by a District government office or children's facility and improves the consistency of the revised offense.[41]

[38] RCC § 22E-4102.
[39] See RCC § 48-904.01b(g)(7)(C)(i).
[40] D.C. Code § 7-2502.15(c)(3).
[41] Consider, for example, two locations of the same chain of grocery stores, one occupying the ground floor of a District office building and the other occupying the ground floor of a privately-owned building. Each store has its own private entrance. In such an instance, the revised offense treats these locations alike and prohibits possession of a stun gun only if the store displays clear and conspicuous signage.

RCC § 7-2502.17. Carrying an Air or Spring Gun.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the carrying an air or spring gun offense for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The offense proscribes carrying an air- or spring-operated gun outside. The revised offense replaces 24 DCMR § 2301 (Possession of Weapons).

Paragraph (a)(1) specifies that to commit carrying an air or spring gun, a person must knowingly[1] possess an air rifle, air gun, air pistol, B-B gun, spring gun, blowgun, or bowgun. "Possesses" is a defined term and includes both actual and constructive possession.[2] Constructive possession requires intent to exercise dominion and control over an object and to guide its destiny.[3]

Paragraph (a)(2) specifies that a person must carry the air or spring gun outside a building. The term "building" is defined in RCC § 22E-701. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the person must know—that is, be practically certain—that the location is not inside a building.

Paragraph (a)(3) specifies that a person must carry the air or spring gun in a manner that it is both conveniently accessible and within reach.[4] Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the person must know—that is, be practically certain—that the air or spring gun is conveniently accessible and within reach.

Paragraph (b)(1) excludes three categories of conduct from criminal liability under this section. Paragraph (b)(1) specifies "in fact," a defined term in RCC § 22E-207 that indicates there is no culpable mental state requirement for a given element. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the "in fact" specified in paragraph (b)(1) applies to all the elements in subparagraphs (b)(1)(A), (b)(1)(B), and (b)(1)(C), and there is no culpable mental state for any of these requirements. First, a person is not liable under this statute[5] for using an air or spring gun outside as part of a lawful[6] theatrical performance,[7] athletic contest,[8] or athletic or cultural presentation.[9] Second, a person is not liable for using an air or spring gun in a licensed firing range.[10] Third, a person is not liable for using

[1] "Knowingly" is defined in RCC § 22E-206.
[2] RCC § 22E-701.
[3] See, e.g., In re M.I.W., 667 A.2d 573 (D.C. 1995); Guishard v. United States, 669 A.2d 1306, 1312 (D.C. 1995).
[4] For example, where there is an obstacle to a person's access to a weapon, such as a locked trunk, the person has not carried a weapon under the revised statute. See, e.g., Henderson v. United States, 687 A.2d 918, 922 (D.C. 1996); Porter v. United States, 282 A.2d 559, 560 (D.C. 1971).
[5] However, if the use of the air or spring gun in a public place causes any person present to reasonably believe that he or she is likely to suffer immediate criminal harm involving bodily injury, taking of property, or damage to property, it may amount to disorderly conduct per RCC § 22E-4201.
[6] For example, a person who orchestrates a B-B gun shooting contest on public property or private property without permission may commit a Trespass. See RCC § 22E-2601.
[7] For example, an actor in a play may use an air or spring gun to simulate a firearm in a shooting scene.
[8] For example, a referee may use an air or spring gun to signal the start of a race.
[9] For example, a person may have a blowgun while giving an educational presentation at the National Museum of the American Indian.
[10] Notably, although training at a firearms range is required to obtain and maintain a license to carry a pistol, the District does not currently have any firing ranges or a process to apply to open one.

an air or spring gun in a location where use of the gun is permitted by the Metropolitan Police Department ("MPD"). MPD may permit the use of an air or spring gun in a particular location at a specified time or at all times.

Paragraph (b)(2) provides an exception for responsibly transporting an air or spring gun. Paragraph (b)(2) specifies "in fact," a defined term in RCC § 22E-207 that indicates there is no culpable mental state requirement for a given element. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the "in fact" specified in paragraph (b)(2) applies to all the elements in subparagraphs (b)(2)(A) and (b)(2)(B), and there is no culpable mental state for any of these requirements. Subparagraph (b)(2)(A) limits the exception to persons over 18 years of age. Subparagraph (b)(2)(B) requires that the air or spring gun be both unloaded and securely wrapped.

Paragraph (b)(3) cross-references applicable exclusions from liability for certain weapons offenses in the RCC. Paragraph (b)(3) specifies "in fact," a defined term in RCC § 22E-207 that indicates there is no culpable mental state requirement for a given element, here the fact that the actor satisfies the criteria in RCC § 22E-4118.

Subsection (c) states that the Attorney General for the District of Columbia is responsible for prosecuting violations of the statute.

Subsection (d) provides the penalty for the revised offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.]

Subsection (e) cross-references applicable definitions in the RCC.

Subsection (f) specifies that Chapters 1 – 6 of the RCC's General Part apply to this Title 7 offense.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised carrying an air or spring gun statute clearly changes current District law in three main ways.

First, the revised statute does not specifically criminalize possession by a person under 18 of a "bean shooter, sling, projectile, [or] dart" in a public place. Current 24 DCMR § 2301.1 prohibits any person under 18 years of age from carrying in public "any gun, pistol, rifle, bean shooter, sling, projectile, dart, or other dangerous weapon of any character." The terms "bean shooter," "sling," "projectile," and "dart" are not defined in the DCMR or in District case law. It is unclear whether these terms would reach objects with commonplace recreational uses, such as a ball, a frisbee, or toys that launch foam or plastic rockets or other objects.[11] In contrast, the revised carrying an air or spring gun statute does not cover a "bean shooter, sling, projectile, [or] dart" by a person under 18 in public. Such behavior may, in some instances be punishable in the RCC as carrying a dangerous weapon[12] or possession of a dangerous weapon with intent to commit crime.[13] This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised offenses and reduces unnecessary overlap.

[11] Notably, the D.C. Code separately regulates the any projectile or dart that is explosive, incendiary, or poisonous. See D.C. Code §§ 7-2501.01 and 7-2502.01.
[12] RCC § 22E-4102.
[13] RCC § 22E-4103.

Second, the RCC separately codifies a list of exclusions from liability for possessory weapons offenses.[14] Current 24 DCMR § 2301.2 states, "Nothing in this section shall be construed as to prohibit a member of a duly authorized military organization from the proper use of the guns and other equipment used as a member of the organization." In contrast, RCC § 22E-4118 provides an exception for all military, law enforcement, and government employees who handle weapons, as well as civilians who are authorized to manufacture, sell, or repair weapons. Moreover, legitimate use of weapons by law enforcement and others fall under the general provisions' justification defense for execution of public duty.[15] This change improves the clarity, consistency, and completeness of the revised code.

Third, the revised statute specifies that the general provisions of Chapters 1 through 6 of Subtitle I of Title 22E of the D.C. Code apply to this offense. The current D.C. Code generally does not codify consistent definitions, rules of liability, rules of interpretation, or general defenses. In contrast, Subtitle I of Title 22E sets forth broadly applicable rules and definitions relating to the basic requirements of criminal liability, inchoate liability, justification defenses, and penalty enhancements. Application of these general provisions to the carrying an air or spring gun offense may change District law in numerous ways. For more in-depth discussion of these general provisions, see commentary accompanying statutory provisions in Subtitle I of Title 22E. These changes improve the clarity, completeness, and proportionality of the revised offense.

Beyond these three changes to current District law, three other aspects of the revised statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised statute requires that the accused act knowingly with respect to each element of the offense. The current statute is silent as to the applicable culpable mental state requirement, and no case law exists on point. Applying a knowledge culpable mental state requirement to statutory elements that distinguish innocent from criminal behavior is a well-established practice in American jurisprudence.[16] This change clarifies the revised statute.

Second, the revised offense requires that the air or spring gun be "conveniently accessible and within reach" and "outside a building." Current 24 DCMR § 2301.3 makes it unlawful for a person to "to carry or have in his or her possession outside any building…an air rifle, air gun, air pistol, B-B gun, spring gun, blowgun, bowgun, or any similar type gun." It is unclear whether the phrase "outside any building" applies to both carrying and possessing or to possession only. District case law has not interpreted its meaning. To resolve this ambiguity, the revised offense criminalizes possession only if the weapon is conveniently accessible and within reach and outside a building.[17] This change aligns the elements of the revised offense with the elements of other carrying offenses, such as carrying a dangerous weapon,[18] which improves the consistency of the revised code.

[14] RCC § 22E-4118.
[15] RCC § 22E-402.
[16] There is a presumption that the legislature intends to require a defendant to possess a degree of knowledge sufficient to "mak[e] a person legally responsible for the consequences of his or her act or omission" regarding "each of the statutory elements that criminalize otherwise innocent conduct," even when the legislature does not specify any scienter in the statutory text. Rehaif v. United States, 17-9560, 2019 WL 2552487, at *3 (U.S. June 21, 2019) (citing United States v. X-Citement Video, Inc., 513 U. S. 64, 72 (1994); Morissette v. United States, 342 U. S. 246, 256–258 (1952); Staples v. United States, 511 U. S. 600, 606 (1994); Black's Law Dictionary 1547 (10th ed. 2014)); see also Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2009 (2015) ("[O]ur cases have explained that a defendant generally must 'know the facts that make his conduct fit the definition of the offense,' even if he does not know that those facts give rise to a crime." (Internal citation omitted)).

Third, the revised offense excludes from liability possession of an air or spring gun if it occurs with the permission of the Metropolitan Police Department ("MPD"). Current 24 DCMR § 2301.5(c) permits the use of an air or spring gun "at other locations where the use of the guns is authorized by the Chief of Police" (emphasis added). The word "use" is not defined in the statute and District case law has not clarified whether MPD must authorize both the possession and the firing of air and spring guns. In contrast, the revised statute clarifies that MPD has the flexibility to authorize possession of an air or spring gun in a specific area, without permitting shooting in the same location.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

First, the revised code defines "possession" in its general part.[19] The D.C. Code does not codify a definition of possession, although it is an element of several property, drug, and weapon offenses. Instead, parties rely on District case law concerning what evidence is or is not sufficient to establish that the accused actually or constructively or jointly possessed an unlawful item.[20] In contrast, the RCC codifies a definition to be used uniformly for all possessory elements throughout the code.

Second, the revised code uses a consistent definition for the term "building," which appears in multiple offenses. The term building is not defined in Title 24, Chapter 23 of the DCMR. In contrast, the RCC codifies a definition to be used uniformly throughout the code.

Third, the revised offense uses the phrase "firing range" instead of "shooting gallery." Current 24 DCMR § 2301.5(b) permits adults to use an air or spring gun at "a licensed shooting gallery." This term is not defined in the DCMR or in District case law. The firearms regulations in the D.C. Code do not refer to "shooting galleries," but do refer to "firing ranges."[21] The revised offense uses the Title 7 terminology to avoid confusion.[22]

---

[17] For example, a person does not commit carrying an air or spring gun by constructively possessing a B-B gun that is not nearby or carrying a B-B gun in his or her own home.

[18] RCC § 22E-4102; see also Wilson v. United States, 198 F.2d 299, 300 (D.C. Cir. 1952) (explaining the phrase "on or about their person," in current law, is intended to mean "in such proximity to the person as to be convenient of access and within reach").

[19] RCC § 22E-701.

[20] See Criminal Jury Instructions for the District of Columbia Instruction 3.104 (2018).

[21] D.C. Code § 7-2507.03.

[22] Additionally, Merriam Webster defines "shooting gallery" to include "a building (usually abandoned) where drug addicts buy and use heroin." See Merriam-Webster Online Dictionary at https://www.webster-dictionary.org/definition/shooting%20gallery.

Fourth, the revised offense does not include the phrase "or similar type gun." The specified types of air and spring gun are already broad, undefined terms. The inclusion of a broader catchall is eliminated as duplicative and potentially confusing.

Fifth, the revised offense excludes liability for possession of an air or spring gun during an educational or cultural presentation. Current 24 DCMR 2301.5(a) excludes liability for possession during a "theatrical performance," however, the regulation does not define the term and District case law has not addressed its meaning. The revised statute clarifies that an educational or cultural presentation is included, even if it does not occur in a theater as part of dramatic performance.

RCC § 7-2507.02A. Unlawful Storage of a Firearm.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the unlawful storage of a firearm offense for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The offense requires firearm owners to store firearms securely and responsibly. The revised offense replaces D.C. Code §§ 7-2507.02(b)-(d) (Responsibilities regarding storage of firearms) and 24 DCMR § 2348.1 (Safe storage of firearms at a place of business).

Paragraph (a)(1) specifies that to commit unlawful storage of a firearm, a person must knowingly possess a firearm. "Knowingly" is a defined term that here requires the person to be practically certain that they possess the firearm.[1] "Firearm" is a defined term,[2] which includes inoperable weapons that may be redesigned, remade or readily converted or restored to operability[3] but excludes antiques.[4]

Subparagraphs (a)(1)(A) – (C) specify three ways a firearm owner can store a firearm to avoid prosecution under this section. Subparagraph (a)(1)(A) provides that there is no liability if a person possesses the firearm in a place that is conveniently accessible and within reach. Subparagraphs (a)(1)(B) and (a)(1)(C) provide that there is no liability if a person stores a firearm in a securely locked container or in a location that a reasonable person would believe to be secure. The words "securely" and "secure" mean secure from access by people other than the firearm owner.

Paragraph (a)(2) specifies that to commit unlawful storage of a firearm, a registrant must act at least negligently with respect to who might access the firearm.[5] That is, the person should be aware of a substantial risk that that a minor or an unauthorized person will be able to access the firearm. Negligence also requires that the risk is of such a nature and degree that, considering the nature of and motivation for the person's conduct and the circumstances the person is aware of, the person's failure to perceive that risk is a gross deviation from the ordinary standard of care.[6]

Paragraph (a)(2) specifies two impermissible risks that will trigger criminal liability.

Subparagraph (a)(2)(A) prohibits storage in a location where a minor is able to access the firearm without the permission of a parent or guardian. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the person must be negligent as to the other person being a minor and as to the minor being able to access the weapon without permission.

---

[1] RCC § 22E-206.
[2] RCC § 22E-701.
[3] Townsend v. United States, 559 A.2d 1319 (D.C. 1989).
[4] Unless there is evidence that the firearm is antique, the government is not required to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the firearms are not antique as an element of the offense in its case-in-chief. Toler v. United States, 198 A.3d 767 (D.C. 2018).
[5] "Negligently" is defined in RCC § 22E-206.
[6] RCC § 22E-206.

Subparagraph (a)(2)(B) prohibits storage in a location where a person who is barred under District law from having a firearm[7] is able to access the firearm. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the person must be negligent as to the other person being unauthorized to possess a firearm under District law and as to the other person being able to access the weapon.

Subsection (b) states that the Attorney General for the District of Columbia is responsible for prosecuting violations of the statute.

Subsection (c) provides the penalty for the revised offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.] Paragraph (c)(2) allows a sentence increase if it is a proven beyond a reasonable doubt that a person under 18 years of age used the firearm to cause a bodily injury to himself or herself or to cause a criminal harm[8] involving a bodily injury. The term "bodily injury" is defined in RCC § 22E-701 to mean physical pain, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.

Subsection (d) cross-references applicable definitions in the RCC.

Subsection (e) specifies that Chapters 1 – 6 of the RCC's General Part apply to this Title 7 offense.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised unlawful storage of a firearm offense clearly changes current District law in eight main ways.

First, the revised statute includes two penalty gradations for unlawful storage of a firearm. Current D.C. Code § 7-2507.02 paragraph (c)(1) specifies a maximum penalty of 180 days of incarceration and fine of $1,000. Paragraph (c)(2) allows a maximum penalty of 5 years of incarceration and fine of $5,000, if the negligence results in a minor causing an injury to any person. A violation of 24 DCMR § 2348.1 is subject to a fine of $300 and is not punishable by jail time.[9] In contrast, the revised statute provides a single offense gradation plus an enhancement of one penalty class if a minor causes an injury. This change logically reorders and improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Second, the revised statute makes a possible basis of liability negligence that a person prohibited from possessing a firearm under District law, generally, is able to access the firearm.[10] Current 24 DCMR § 2348.1 prohibits storing a firearm where a person "reasonably should know that…a person prohibited from possessing a firearm under D.C. Official Code § 22-4503 can gain access to the firearm." In contrast, the revised statute refers broadly to persons prohibited from possessing a firearm under District law generally (not just persons referred to in D.C. Code § 22-4503). However, given other changes to [7] RCC § 22E-4105 bars several categories of people from having a firearm, including people with a recent conviction for a felony, weapons offense, or intrafamily offense, as well as people who are fugitives from justice or subject to a court order prohibiting possession of firearms.

[8] The penalty enhancement does not apply where a minor's use of a firearm is legally justified or excused. See generally Chapter 4 and Chapter 5 of this title.
[9] 24 DCMR § 100.6.
[10] RCC § 22E-4105.

firearm possession offenses in the RCC, the revised offense is in some ways broader[11] and in other ways narrower[12] than current law. This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised offenses.

Third, the revised offense requires that a minor or an unauthorized person is able to access the firearm. Current D.C. Code § 7-2507.02(b) requires a risk that a minor is likely to gain access to the firearm. Current 24 DCMR § 2348.1 requires only a risk that a minor or unauthorized person can gain access to the firearm. The revised statute incorporates the marginally broader language in Title 7. This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised offense.

Fourth, the revised offense specifies that storage in a manner permitting access by a minor is unlawful only if the minor lacks permission from a parent or guardian to access the weapon. Current D.C. Code § 7-2507.02(b) requires that a person "reasonably should know that a minor is likely to gain access to the firearm without the permission of the parent or guardian" (emphasis added). However, current 24 DCMR § 2348.1 includes no such qualifying language. The revised statute incorporates the marginally narrower language in Title 7. This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised offense.

Fifth, the revised offense specifies that a person does not commit unlawful storage of a firearm if the weapon is in a secure container or other reasonably secure location. Current D.C. Code § 7-2507.02(b)(1) provides an exception where a person "[k]eeps the firearm in a securely locked box, secured container, or in a location which a reasonable person would believe to be secure." However, current 24 DCMR § 2348.1 includes no such qualifying language. The revised statute incorporates the marginally narrower language in Title 7. This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised offense.

Sixth, the revised offense is not limited to lawful registrants. D.C. Code § 7-2507.02(b) provides that "[n]o person" shall store a firearm irresponsibly,[13] whereas 24 DCMR § 2348.1 states "[n]o registrant." The revised statute incorporates the broader language in Title 7. This change reduces an unnecessary gap in liability.

Seventh, the revised statute does not regulate storage of a muffler or silencer but does regulate the storage of an antique pistol. Current D.C. Code § 7-2501.01 defines "firearm" to include frames, receivers, mufflers, and silencers, and consequently the storage of these items is within the scope of D.C. Code § 7-2507.02(b). Unlike firearms, the United States Supreme Court has not yet considered whether these parts and accessories are "bearable arms" protected by the Second Amendment.[14] In contrast, the revised unlawful storage of a firearm statute, by use of the definition of "firearm" in RCC § 22E-701, does not cover frames, receivers, mufflers, or silencers, but does cover antique pistols.[15] With limited exceptions for military and law enforcement,[16] the RCC criminalizes mere possession of a silencer as contraband per se[17] and, because any possession is illegal, does not regulate their registration, storage, or carrying. This change improves the proportionality and logically reorganizes the revised offenses.

[11] For example, RCC § 22-4105 (Possession of a Firearm by an Unauthorized Person) replaces D.C. Code § 22-4503 (Unlawful possession of a firearm) and bars people with a conviction for a violent intrafamily offense within the last 10 years, as compared to a 5-year ban under current law.

[12] For example, RCC § 22-4105 (Possession of a Firearm by an Unauthorized Person) replaces D.C. Code § 22-4503 (Unlawful possession of a firearm) and limits prior convictions incurred in another jurisdiction to offenses that are comparable to a felony, weapons offense, or violent intrafamily offense under District law.

[13] This section was enacted shortly after the United States Supreme Court held the District's prohibition against rendering any lawful firearm in the home operable for purpose of immediate self-defense violated the Second Amendment to the United States Constitution. District of Columbia v. Heller, 554 U.S. 570 (2008).

Eighth, the revised statute specifies that the general provisions of Chapters 1 through 6 of Subtitle I of Title 22E of the D.C. Code apply to this offense. The current D.C. Code generally does not codify consistent definitions, rules of liability, rules of interpretation, or general defenses. In contrast, Subtitle I of Title 22E sets forth broadly applicable rules and definitions relating to the basic requirements of criminal liability, inchoate liability, justification defenses, and penalty enhancements. Application of these general provisions to the unlawful storage of a firearm offense may change District law in numerous ways. For more in-depth discussion of these general provisions, see commentary accompanying statutory provisions in Subtitle I of Title 22E. These changes improve the clarity, completeness, and proportionality of the revised offense.

Beyond these eight changes to current District law, three other aspects of the revised statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised offense specifies that a person does not commit unlawful storage of a firearm if the weapon is "conveniently accessible and within reach." Current D.C. Code § 7-2507.02(b)(2) provides an exception where a person "[c]arries the firearm on his person or within such close proximity that he can readily retrieve and use it as if he carried it on his person." However, current 24 DCMR § 2348.1 includes no such qualifying language. It is not immediately clear how a person can both "store" a firearm and "carry" it and District case law has not addressed the issue. In contrast, the revised offense specifies that there is no unlawful storage liability if the weapon is conveniently accessible and within reach. This change aligns the elements of the revised offense with the elements of other carrying offenses, such as carrying a dangerous weapon,[18] and improves the consistency of the revised code.

Second, the revised offense authorizes a distinct penalty enhancement if a person under age 18 uses the firearm to cause a criminal harm involving bodily injury or to cause a bodily injury to himself or herself. Current D.C. Code § 7-2507.02(c)(2) provides that if "the minor causes injury or death to himself or another" the maximum penalty increases from 180 days of incarceration and a $1,000 fine to 5 years of incarceration and a $5,000 fine. D.C. Code § 7-2507.02(c)(3) provides that the penalty enhancement does not apply

[14] See United States v. Cox, 906 F.3d 1170 (10th Cir. 2018), cert. denied, 2019 WL 235139, U.S. (June 10, 2019).
[15] The definition of "firearm" in D.C. Code § 7-2501.01 excludes antique pistols.
[16] RCC § 22E-4118.
[17] RCC § 22E-4101, possession of a prohibited weapon or accessory.
[18] RCC § 22E-4102.

"if the minor obtains the firearm as a result of an unlawful entry or burglary to any premises by any person." Neither statute explicitly provides for general justification defenses that may nevertheless exist at common law. There is no District case law on point, and no relevant legislative history on the meaning of the exception for burglary or unlawful entry. In contrast, the revised offense authorizes a penalty enhancement only if the use of the firearm causes a criminal harm involving bodily injury or results in an intentional or accidental self-inflicted bodily injury to the minor, and no special exceptions for unlawful entry or burglary apply. "Bodily injury" is a defined term in the RCC.[19] The degree of the enhancement corresponds to the classification schedule inRCC § 22E-601 and, like other revised offenses,[20] is limited to a severity increase of one class. No special exception for unlawful entry or burglary is provided as such a provision is either unnecessary given the offense elements or irrelevant to the harm of negligent storage.[21] This change improves the consistency and proportionality of District statutes.

Third, the revised code applies a "knowingly" culpable mental state to most offense elements and defines knowledge and negligence consistent with other revised offenses. The current statutes require that a person "knows or reasonably should know" of a risk that an unauthorized person will be able to access the firearm.[22] The current statutes do not specify a culpable mental state for other elements, such as the weapon being a firearm. However, the revised statute applies the standard culpable mental state definitions used throughout the RCC.[23] Applying a knowledge culpable mental state requirement to statutory elements that distinguish innocent from criminal behavior is a well-established practice in American jurisprudence.[24] This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised offense.

---

[19] RCC § 22E-701.

[20] E.g., RCC §§ 22E-1101 (Murder); 22E-1206 (Stalking); 22E-1301 (Sexual Assault); 22E-1602 (Forced Commercial Sex); 22E-1603 (Trafficking in Labor or Services); 22E-1604 (Trafficking in Commercial Sex); 22E-1605 (Sex Trafficking of a Minor or Adult Incapable of Consenting).

[21] The meaning of the current D.C. Code § 7-2507.02(c)(3) exception "if the minor obtains the firearm as a result of an unlawful entry or burglary to any premises by any person" is unclear. If the exception is meant to exclude liability for minors who gain access to the firearm by unlawful entry or burglary, such an exception is unnecessary as a firearm possessor would not be negligent as to the possibility that a minor would gain access by such criminal acts. If the exception is meant to exclude liability for minors who gain access to the firearm for use in self-defense while experiencing a burglary or unlawful entry, such an exception is irrelevant to the fact that there was negligent storage (e.g., a parent left the weapon on a table).

[22] D.C. Code § 7-2507.02 and 24 DCMR § 2348.1.

[23] RCC § 22E-206.

[24] There is a presumption that the legislature intends to require a defendant to possess a degree of knowledge sufficient to "mak[e] a person legally responsible for the consequences of his or her act or omission" regarding "each of the statutory elements that criminalize otherwise innocent conduct," even when the legislature does not specify any scienter in the statutory text. Rehaif v. United States, 17-9560, 2019 WL 2552487, lsat *3 (U.S. June 21, 2019) (citing United States v. X-Citement Video, Inc., 513 U. S. 64, 72 (1994); Morissette v. United States, 342 U. S. 246, 256–258 (1952); Staples v. United States, 511 U. S. 600, 606 (1994); Black's Law Dictionary 1547 (10th ed. 2014)); see also Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2009 (2015) ("[O]ur cases have explained that a defendant generally must 'know the facts that make his conduct fit the definition of the offense,' even if he does not know that those facts give rise to a crime." (Internal citation omitted)).

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

First, the revised code defines "possession" in its general part.[25] The D.C. Code does not codify a definition of possession, although it is an element of several property, drug, and weapon offenses. Instead, parties rely on District case law concerning what evidence is or is not sufficient to establish that the accused actually or constructively or jointly possessed an unlawful item.[26] In contrast, the RCC codifies a definition to be used uniformly for all possessory elements throughout the code.

Second, the revised statute does not specially codify a policy statement for the unlawful storage of a firearm offense. Current D.C. Code § 7-2507.02(a) states, "It shall be the policy of the District of Columbia that each registrant should keep any firearm in his or her possession unloaded and either disassembled or secured by a trigger lock, gun safe, locked box, or other secure device." However, the remainder of the statute does not require that a firearm be unloaded or disassembled. Nor does the statute require that a firearm be locked away or secured, unless it is readily apparent that an unauthorized person is likely to be able to access the weapon. The policy statement also is not referenced elsewhere in the D.C. Code. The revised unlawful storage of a firearm statute eliminates this language as potentially confusing or misleading as to the extent of criminal liability.[27] This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised statutes.

Third, the revised statute is severed from D.C. Code § 7-2507.02 and given its own section in the revised code. This change clarifies that the penalties and definitions do not apply to subsection (a) of D.C. Code § 7-2507.02, which is not being revised at this time. This change improves the clarity and logical organization of the revised statutes.

[25] RCC § 22E-202.
[26] See Criminal Jury Instructions for the District of Columbia Instruction 3.104 (2018).
[27] The D.C. Council Office of General Counsel Legislative Drafting Manual at 7.1.1 specifies that "findings" and "purposes" sections are strongly discouraged because they may create confusion or ambiguity in the law.

RCC § 7-2509.06A. Carrying a Pistol in an Unlawful Manner.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the carrying a pistol in an unlawful manner offense for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The offense prohibits ways of carrying a pistol that may result in an accidentally discharge, pose a risk to public safety, or cause a breach of peace. The revised offense replaces 24 DCMR §§ 2343.1 (Ammunition carried by licensee) and 2344 (Pistol carry methods).

Paragraph (a)(1) specifies that to commit carrying a pistol in an unlawful manner, a person must knowingly[1] possess a pistol. "Pistol" is a defined term,[2] which includes inoperable weapons that may be redesigned, remade or readily converted or restored to operability[3] but excludes antiques.[4] "Possesses" is a defined term and includes both actual and constructive possession.[5] However, paragraphs (a)(2) and (a)(3) limit the offense applies to places outside the person's home or place of business and require that the pistol is conveniently accessible and within reach. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the actor must know—that is, be practically certain—that he or she possesses a pistol in such a location.[6]

Paragraph (a)(2) establishes four means of carrying a pistol unlawfully. A person carries a pistol unlawfully if they are outside their home or business and have conveniently accessible and within reach more ammunition than will fully load the pistol twice or if they have more than 20 rounds of ammunition, whichever is least.[7] A person also carries a pistol unlawfully if they know that any part of it is visible to the public.[8] This provision applies equally to a person who is in a public place or inside a motor vehicle.[9] Lastly, a person carries a pistol unlawfully if they know that they have failed to use a holster to firmly secure it.[10] The firearm must be holstered so as to reasonably prevent loss, theft, or accidentally discharge.[11] Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the person must know—that is, be practically certain—that they have excess ammunition, the pistol isn't entirely hidden from public view, or the pistol is not holstered.

Subsection (b) cross-references applicable exclusions from liability for certain weapons offenses in the RCC. Subsection (b) specifies "in fact," a defined term in RCC §

---

[1] RCC § 22E-206.
[2] RCC § 22E-701.
[3] Townsend v. United States, 559 A.2d 1319 (D.C. 1989).
[4] Unless there is evidence that the firearm is antique, the government is not required to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the firearms are not antique as an element of the offense in its case-in-chief. Toler v. United States, 198 A.3d 767 (D.C. 2018).
[5] RCC § 22E-701 (stating that: "'Possess,' and other parts of speech, including 'possesses,' 'possessing,' and 'possession' means: (A) Hold or carry on one's person; or (B) Have the ability and desire to exercise control over.").
[6] See Campos v. United States, 617 A.2d 185, 187-88 (D.C. 1992) (explaining, that a person who has no knowledge that he or she has a pistol, despite the fact that it is located on his or her person, does not exercise direct physical control over the pistol).
[7] See RCC § 7-2509.06A(a)(1) - (a)(2); 24 DCMR § 2343.1.
[8] RCC § 7-2509.06A(a)(3).
[9] See 24 DCMR § 2344.1.
[10] RCC § 7-2509.06A(a)(4).
[11] See 24 DCMR § 2344.2.

22E-207 that indicates there is no culpable mental state requirement for a given element, here the fact that the actor satisfies the criteria in RCC § 22E-4118.

Subsection (c) states that the Attorney General for the District of Columbia is responsible for prosecuting violations of the statute.

Subsection (d) provides the penalty for the revised offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.]

Subsection (e) cross-references applicable definitions in the RCC.

Subsection (f) specifies that Chapters 1 – 6 of the RCC's General Part apply to this Title 7 offense.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised carrying a pistol in an unlawful manner offense clearly changes current District law in two main ways.

First, the revised offense is not limited to licensed pistols. 24 DCMR §§ 2343.1 and 2344 apply only to "[a] person issued a concealed carry license by the Chief" and "[a] licensee." The revised offense applies to people who possess a firearm without a license to carry. The unlawful carry method poses the same danger whether the person is licensed or not. This change reduces an unnecessary gap in liability.

Second, the revised statute specifies that the general provisions of Chapters 1 through 6 of Subtitle I of Title 22E of the D.C. Code apply to this offense. The current D.C. Code generally does not codify consistent definitions, rules of liability, rules of interpretation, or general defenses. In contrast, Subtitle I of Title 22E sets forth broadly applicable rules and definitions relating to the basic requirements of criminal liability, inchoate liability, justification defenses, and penalty enhancements. Application of these general provisions to the carrying a pistol in an unlawful manner offense may change District law in numerous ways. For more in-depth discussion of these general provisions, see commentary accompanying statutory provisions in Subtitle I of Title 22E. These changes improve the clarity, completeness, and proportionality of the revised offense.

Beyond these two changes to current District law, three other aspects of the revised statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised statute requires that the accused act knowingly with respect to each element of the offense. The current statutes[12] are silent as to the applicable culpable mental state requirement, and no case law exists on point. Applying a knowledge culpable mental state requirement to statutory elements that distinguish innocent from criminal behavior is a well-established practice in American jurisprudence.[13] This change clarifies the revised statute.

---

[12] 24 DCMR §§ 2343 – 2344.

[13] There is a presumption that the legislature intends to require a defendant to possess a degree of knowledge sufficient to "mak[e] a person legally responsible for the consequences of his or her act or omission" regarding "each of the statutory elements that criminalize otherwise innocent conduct," even when the legislature does not specify any scienter in the statutory text. Rehaif v. United States, 17-9560, 2019 WL 2552487, at *3 (U.S. June 21, 2019) (citing United States v. X-Citement Video, Inc., 513 U. S. 64, 72 (1994); Morissette v. United States, 342 U. S. 246, 256–258 (1952); Staples v. United States, 511 U. S. 600, 606 (1994); Black's Law Dictionary 1547 (10th ed. 2014)); see also Elonis v. United States, 135 S.

Second, the revised statute criminalizes possession of a pistol in a location that is conveniently accessible and within reach.[14] Current 24 DCMR § 2343.1 refers to conduct "while carrying the pistol," 24 DCMR § 2344.1 refers to "carry any pistol in a manner that it is entirely hidden from view of the public when carried on or about a person, or when in a vehicle," and 24 DCMR § 2344.2 refers to "carry any pistol." The term "carry" in these regulations is not defined by the DCMR and there is no District case law on point. To resolve this ambiguity as to the meaning of "carry," the revised statute requires that the pistol be "in a location that is accessible and within reach." This plain language formulation is consistent with the definition of "carrying" as construed by the DCCA for other offenses. This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised offense.

Third, the RCC codifies a list of exclusions from liability for possessory weapons offenses.[15] Current 24 DCMR §§ 2343 – 2344 do not include any exceptions for law enforcement officers, weapons dealers, or others who routinely need to carry a firearm outside of a holster or in public view. Likewise, current 24 DCMR §§ 2343 – 2344 do not exclude from liability methods of carrying or storing a pistol in one's home or place of business.[16] In contrast, RCC § 22E-4118 provides a comprehensive list of exclusions from liability, accounting for these and other legitimate circumstances. Moreover, legitimate use of weapons by law enforcement and others fall under the general provisions' justification defense for execution of public duty.[17] This change improves the clarity, consistency, and completeness of the revised code.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

The revised statute is severed from D.C. Code § 7-2509.06 and given its own section in the revised code. This change clarifies that the revised statute does not replace D.C. Code § 7-2509.06, which is not being revised at this time. This change improves the clarity and logical organization of the revised statutes.

Ct. 2001, 2009 (2015) ("[O]ur cases have explained that a defendant generally must 'know the facts that make his conduct fit the definition of the offense,' even if he does not know that those facts give rise to a crime." (Internal citation omitted)).

[14] RCC § 22E-202.

[15] RCC § 22E-4118.

[16] The lack of any exception for homes or businesses may lead to some absurd consequences, such as providing liability for any transfer, storage, cleaning, etc. of a firearm in a home or business because such activities would necessarily involve unholstering the weapon (contra 24 DCMR § 2344.2).

[17] RCC § 22E-402.

D.C. Code § 16-705. Jury trial; trial by court.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the jury or nonjury trial provision for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC) and other D.C. Code provisions. The revised statute replaces D.C. Code § 16-705 (Jury trial; trial by court). The revised D.C. Code § 16-705 concerns the extension of a statutory right to a jury trial in multiple circumstances. The revised statute changes the numbering, but does not alter the language of, current D.C. Code § 16-705 regarding jury size.

Subsection (a) states that the provisions in the subsection are only in effect until midnight on a date three years from the date of enactment of the RCC. After that time, subsection (b) is in effect. The subsection applies to any criminal case in Superior Court.

Paragraph (a)(1) of the revised statute provides that a trial for an offense shall be by jury under all the conditions in the following 7 subparagraphs, except as specified in paragraph (a)(2).

Subparagraph (a)(1)(A) of the revised statute permits a defendant to demand a jury trial when, according to constitutional standards, the defendant is entitled to a jury for the offense.

Subparagraph (a)(1)(B) of the revised statute permits a criminal defendant to demand a jury trial when charged with an offense punishable by a fine or penalty of more than $1,000, by imprisonment for more than 60 days, or by more than six months in the case of contempt of court.

Subparagraph (a)(1)(C) of the revised statute permits a defendant to demand a jury trial when charged with an inchoate form of an offense—i.e. attempt, solicitation, or conspiracy—that would be punishable by a fine or penalty of more than $1,000, by imprisonment for more than 60 days, or by more than six months in the case of contempt of court.

Subparagraph (a)(1)(D) of the revised statute permits a jury demand for a charge under Chapter 12 of Title 22E, including robbery, assault, criminal threats, and offensive physical contact, if the person who is alleged to have been subjected to the criminal offense [1] is a law enforcement officer as defined in § 22E-701.

Subparagraph (a)(1)(E) of the revised statute provides a right to a jury trial to a charge for a "registration offense" as defined under the District's sex offender registration statutes.

Subparagraph (a)(1)(F) of the revised statute extends a right to a jury for any charge[2] which, as a matter of law, could result in deportation of the defendant or denial of naturalization to the defendant under federal immigration law, were the defendant convicted of the crime and proven to be a non-citizen. This provision does not require any proof or assertion that the defendant is, in fact, a non-citizen or that federal authorities, in fact, would deport the defendant if convicted. The question under subparagraph (a)(1)(F) is purely a question of law—whether the charged offense could result in deportation under federal immigration law if the defendant were a non-citizen.

[1] The term "complainant" is defined in RCC § 22E-701 as a "person who is alleged to have been subjected to the criminal offense," such that the phrasing here is identical to "complainant" in RCC § 22E-701.
[2] The application of federal immigration law to District statutes is complex and constantly evolving. Establishing a definitive list of the District's deportable misdemeanor offenses would be an immense and likely fruitless undertaking. Consequently, the revised statute codifies a clear, flexible standard that courts can evaluate as needed as federal law changes.

Subparagraph (a)(1)(G) of the revised statute provides a jury trial right to a criminal defendant charged with two or more offenses with a combined possibility of imprisonment of more than 60 days or more than $1,000.[3]

Paragraph (a)(2) specifies that a trial shall be by a single judge whose verdict has the same force and effect as that of a jury when either of two conditions describe in sub-paragraphs (a)(2)(A) and (a)(2)(B) are met.

Sub-paragraph (a)(2)(A) includes for a trial by the court any case not specified in the preceding paragraphs (a)(1)(A) – (a)(1)(G).

Sub-paragraph (a)(2)(B) includes for a trial by the court any case specified in the preceding paragraphs (a)(1)(A) – (a)(1)(G) when the defendant, in open court, expressly waives trial by jury and requests trial by the court more than 10 days before the scheduled trial or, with the consent of the court, within 10 days of the scheduled trial.

Subsection (b) states that the provisions in the subsection are only in effect after midnight on a date three years from the date of enactment of the RCC. Prior to that time, subsection (a) is in effect. The subsection applies to any criminal case in Superior Court.

Paragraph (b)(1) of the revised statute provides that a trial for an offense shall be by jury under all the conditions in the following 3 subparagraphs, except as specified in paragraph (b)(2).

Subparagraph (b)(1)(A) of the revised statute permits a defendant to demand a jury trial when, according to constitutional standards, the defendant is entitled to a jury for the offense.

Subparagraph (b)(1)(B) of the revised statute permits a defendant to demand a jury trial when charged with any offense punishable by a fine or penalty of more than $250, by imprisonment for any length of time, or by more than six months in the case of contempt of court.

Subparagraph (b)(1)(C) of the revised statute provides a jury trial right to a criminal defendant charged with two or more offenses with a combined possibility of a fine or penalty of more than $250.[4]

Paragraph (b)(2) specifies that a trial shall be by a single judge whose verdict has the same force and effect as that of a jury when either of two conditions describe in sub-paragraphs (b)(2)(A) and (b)(2)(B) are met.

Sub-paragraph (b)(2)(A) includes for a trial by the court any case not specified in the preceding paragraphs (b)(1)(A) – (b)(1)(C).

Sub-paragraph (b)(2)(B) includes for a trial by the court any case specified in the preceding paragraphs (b)(1)(A) – (b)(1)(C) when the defendant, in open court, expressly

[3] See D.C. Code §§ 4-516 (Assessments for crime victims assistance and compensation); 16-711 (Restitution or reparation).
[4] See D.C. Code §§ 4-516 (Assessments for crime victims assistance and compensation); 16-711 (Restitution or reparation).

waives trial by jury and requests trial by the court more than 10 days before the scheduled trial or, with the consent of the court, within 10 days of the scheduled trial.

Subsection (c) states that if a criminal case includes 2 or more charges and at least one offense is jury demandable, the trial for all offenses charged against that defendant shall be by jury unless the defendant in open court expressly waives trial by jury and requests trial by the court. If there is such a request, then the trial shall be by a single judge, whose verdict shall have the same force and effect as that of a jury.

Subsection (d) of the revised statute is identical to the current D.C. Code except for the numbering change.

Relation to Current District Law. Revised D.C. Code § 16-705 changes current District law primarily by extending the offenses and circumstances under which a defendant is entitled to a jury trial. The revised statute also changes the ability of the prosecution or court to deny consent to a defendant's waiver of a jury or demand for a jury.

In general, current D.C. Code § 16-705 establishes the circumstances under which a criminal defendant is entitled to a jury trial,[5] the process for waiving a jury trial,[6] the procedure for adjudicating cases in which a defendant is not entitled to a jury trial or a jury trial is waived,[7] and the procedure for jury trials.[8] Under current D.C. Code § 16-705, a criminal defendant is entitled to a jury trial in six instances: (1) where a jury trial is guaranteed by the United States Constitution;[9] (2) where the defendant is charged with an offense punishable by a fine over $1,000;[10] (3) where a defendant is charged with two or more offenses punishable by a cumulative fine of over $4,000;[11] (4) where a defendant faces imprisonment for more than 6 months for contempt of court;[12] (5) where a defendant is charged with an offense punishable by more than 180 days imprisonment;[13] and (6) where a defendant is charged with two or more offenses punishable by imprisonment for more than two years.[14] The current statute also clarifies that when a defendant is charged

[5] D.C. Code §§ 16-705(a)-(b-1).
[6] D.C. Code § 16-705(a); D.C. Code § 16-705(b)(2); D.C. Code § 16-705(b-1).
[7] D.C. Code §§ 16-705(a)-(b-1).
[8] D.C. Code § 16-705(c).
[9] D.C. Code § 16-705(a). According to the United States Supreme Court, a criminal defendant is entitled to a jury trial under the United States Constitution when charged with a "serious" offense, but not when charged with a "petty" offense. Duncan v. Louisiana, 391 U.S. 145, 157-62 (1968). The Supreme Court has identified the maximum authorized penalty as the most relevant objective criteria by which to judge an offense's severity and has held then no offense may be deemed "petty" if it is punishable by more than six months imprisonment. Baldwin v. New York, 399 U.S. 66, 68-69 (1970). Offenses punishable by six months imprisonment or less are presumptively "petty," but that presumption may be overcome if a defendant shows that additional statutory penalties, viewed in conjunction with the maximum period of incarceration, are so severe that they clearly reflect a legislative determination that the offense is "serious." Blanton v. City of North Las Vegas, 489 U.S. 538, 543 (1989).
[10] D.C. Code § 16-705(b)(1)(A).
[11] D.C. Code § 16-705(b)(1)(B).
[12] D.C. Code § 16-705(b)(1)(A).
[13] D.C. Code § 16-705(b)(1)(A).
[14] D.C. Code § 16-705(b)(1)(B).

with two or more offenses, if one of the offenses is jury demandable, all offenses shall be tried by jury unless waived.[15]

In contrast, the revised statute changes D.C. Code § 16-705 to expand the right of a criminal defendant to demand a jury trial in several ways. The statute takes a bifurcated approach to change, providing one set of rules for expanded access to jury demandability when the RCC is enacted into law, and a second set of rules three years after enactment. This bifurcated approach provides an immediate expansion of jury rights that still excludes many misdemeanors and stops well short of what most states provide. During this interim three year period, government agencies and practitioners may engage in training necessary for a broader expansion of jury rights to meet the national norm. The ultimate goal of the recommendation is to ensure jury demandability for all crimes bearing imprisonment time or significant financial penalties.

Subsection (a) provides many immediate changes to current law. First, in contrast to the current standard of more than 180 days,[16] subparagraph (a)(1)(B) of the revised statute sets the baseline right to a jury of one's peers for a non-contempt of court charge that carries a maximum imprisonment penalty of more than 60 days, or a fine of more than $1,000. Second, in contrast to current law which makes no distinction as to whether a charge is an attempt or other inchoate form of an offense that is jury demandable, subparagraph (a)(1)(C) of the revised statute treats inchoate forms of a specified jury-demandable offense as jury demandable, regardless whether their imprisonment penalty is 60 days or less. Third, the revised statute creates entirely new statutory rights to a jury for any charge which, under subparagraph (a)(1)(D) or subparagraph (a)(1)(E) is an offense in Chapter 12 (Robbery, Assault, and Threats) of Title 22E in which the person who is alleged to have been subjected to the criminal offense is a "law enforcement officer" as defined in § 22E-701,[17] or a charge for a "registration offense" as defined in § 22-4001(8). Fourth, the revised statute, in subparagraph (a)(1)(F), codifies a statutory right to a jury for a charge that, as a matter of law, could result in deportation or denial of naturalization were the defendant proven to be a non-citizen and convicted of the crime. This change appears to expand D.C. Court of Appeals (DCCA) case law that provides a right to a jury on constitutional grounds for a non-citizen defendant who is subject to possible deportation if [17] At the time of writing, legislation was currently pending Council approval that would amend D.C. Code § 16-705(b)(1) in a narrower but consistent manner than the RCC recommendation, to provide a right to a jury under circumstances where the alleged victim of an assault is a law enforcement officer in a new subparagraph (C). See Comprehensive Policing And Justice Reform Second Temporary Amendment Act Of 2020, 2020 District of Columbia Laws 23-151 (Act 23-399). (""(C)(i) The defendant is charged with an offense under: "(I) Section 806(a)(1) of An Act To establish a code of law for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1901 (31 Stat. 1322; D.C. Official Code § 22–404(a)(1)); "(II) Section 432a of the Revised Statutes of the District of Columbia (D.C. Official Code § 22–405.01); or "(III) Section 2 of An Act To confer concurrent jurisdiction on the police court of the District of Columbia in certain cases, approved July 16, 1912 (37 Stat. 193; D.C. Official Code § 22–407); and "(ii) The person who is alleged to have been the victim of the offense is a law enforcement officer, as that term is defined in section 432(a) of the Revised Statutes of the District of Columbia (D.C. Official Code § 22–405(a)); and").

[15] D.C. Code § 16-705(b-1).
[16] D.C. Code § 16-705(b)(1)(A).

convicted of the offense.[18] Finally, subparagraph (a)(1)(G) of the revised statute reduces from two years to 60 days the cumulative term of imprisonment that a defendant must be subject to under two or more charges in order to demand a jury.

Subsection (b) provides more far-reaching changes to current law. First, in contrast to the current standard of more than 180 days,[19] subparagraph (b)(1)(B) of the revised statute sets the baseline right to a jury of one's peers for a non-contempt of court charge that carries any imprisonment penalty, or a fine of more than $250. Similarly, under subparagraph (b)(1)(C) the revised statute reduces from $1,000 to $250 the cumulative fine or penalty that a defendant must be subject to under two or more charges in order to demand a jury.

The CCRC also recommends deletion of current D.C. Code language requiring judicial and prosecutorial consent either to a defendant's waiver of a jury trial, (except that, if the waiver occurs within 10 days of a scheduled trial the court must consent to a waiver of a jury trial), or to invoke a right to a jury trial that is not required by the Constitution. Under current D.C. Code § 16-705(a), the plain language of the statute requires that a jury trial be held for offenses to which a defendant has a right to a jury under the Constitution, unless the defendant requests trial by the court "and the court and the prosecuting officer consent thereto."[20] This language appears to allow the court or a prosecutor, by withholding their consent to a defendant's request for a trial by court, to require a defendant to have a jury trial where the Constitution provides a jury trial right. Also, under current D.C. Code § 16-705(b)(2), the plain language of the statute requires that a trial by the court be held for offenses to which a defendant does not have a right to a jury under the Constitution, unless the defendant requests trial by jury "and the court and the prosecuting officer consent thereto."[21] This language appears to allow the court or a prosecutor, by [18] Bado v. United States, 186 A.3d 1243, 1246-47 (D.C. 2018) (en banc) ("We hold that the penalty of deportation, when viewed together with a maximum period of incarceration that does not exceed six months, overcomes the presumption that the offense is petty and triggers the Sixth Amendment right to a trial by jury."). The Bado decision does not explicitly state that a defendant must prove that he or she is a non-citizen in order to avail themselves of the right to a jury for a deportable offense, although this appears to be implicit in the Bado decision's reliance on Supreme Court precedent in Blanton v. City of N. Las Vegas, 489 U.S. 538 (1989) and repeated emphasis that the Blanton court relied on the consequences to a particular defendant. See also Miller v. United States, 209 A.3d 75, 79 (D.C. 2019)("Although the trial record did not reveal that Ms. Miller is not a citizen, the United States has not relied on that circumstance to argue that the error in this case was not obvious for purposes of the plain-error standard. We therefore do not address that issue. … Second, the United States's proposed reading of Bado appears to rest on the premise that a defendant has a constitutional right to a jury trial only if conviction would in a practical sense make the defendant's situation worse than it otherwise would be. Bado, however, repeatedly states that the relevant inquiry is whether the defendant "faces" or "is exposed" to the penalty at issue, or alternatively whether the penalty "could be" imposed, if the defendant is convicted. E.g., 186 A.3d at 1246, 1249-50, 1252, 1253, 1256, 1257, 1261.").

---

[19] D.C. Code § 16-705(b)(1)(A).

[20] D.C. Code § 16-705(a) ("In a criminal case tried in the Superior Court in which, according to the Constitution of the United States, the defendant is entitled to a jury trial, the trial shall be by jury, unless the defendant in open court expressly waives trial by jury and requests trial by the court, and the court and the prosecuting officer consent thereto. In the case of a trial without a jury, the trial shall be by a single judge, whose verdict shall have the same force and effect as that of a jury.").

[21] D.C. Code § 16-705 ("(b) In any case where the defendant is not under the Constitution of the United States entitled to a trial by jury, the trial shall be by a single judge without a jury, except that if –(1)(A) The withholding their consent to a defendant's request for a jury trial, to require a defendant to have a trial by the court trial where the Constitution does not provide a jury trial right. It is unclear how requiring prosecutorial and court consent to demand a jury under D.C. Code § 16-705(b)(2) may limit jury demandability for offenses in the D.C. Code with a penalty of 6 months which are presumptively "petty," non-jury demandable offenses under the Constitution.[22] There is confusion in at some legislative history as to the Council's intent in categorizing some offenses as 180 day versus 6 month offenses to demarcate jury-demandability,[23] and there no case law on point.

In contrast, the RCC codifies a right to a jury as a personal right and does not allow a court or prosecutor either to require a jury trial when the defendant timely wishes to waive their right to a jury trial, or to require a trial by court when the defendant wishes to exercise their right to a jury trial for an offense that is not required to be jury demandable under the Constitution. Jurisdictions have taken a range of views on this matter, some treating a defendant's waiver of a jury as a personal right as in the RCC, some treating a defendant's waiver of a jury as subject only to court consent, and others treating a defendant's waiver of a jury as subject to both court and prosecutorial consent.[24] The revised statute resolves defendant is charged with an offense which is punishable by a fine or penalty of more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for more than 180 days (or for more than six months in the case of the offense of contempt of court); or (B) The defendant is charged with 2 or more offenses which are punishable by a cumulative fine or penalty of more than $4,000 or a cumulative term of imprisonment of more than 2 years; and (2) The defendant demands a trial by jury, the trial shall be by jury, unless the defendant in open court expressly waives trial by jury and requests trial by the court, and the court and the prosecuting officer consent thereto. In the case of a trial by the court, the judge's verdict shall have the same force and effect as that of a jury.").

---

[22] According to the United States Supreme Court, a criminal defendant is entitled to a jury trial under the United States Constitution when charged with a "serious" offense, but not when charged with a "petty" offense. Duncan v. Louisiana, 391 U.S. 145, 157-62 (1968). The Supreme Court has identified the maximum authorized penalty as the most relevant objective criteria by which to judge an offense's severity and has held then no offense may be deemed "petty" if it is punishable by more than six months imprisonment. Baldwin v. New York, 399 U.S. 66, 68-69 (1970). Offenses punishable by six months imprisonment or less are presumptively "petty," but that presumption may be overcome if a defendant shows that additional statutory penalties, viewed in conjunction with the maximum period of incarceration, are so severe that they clearly reflect a legislative determination that the offense is "serious." Blanton v. City of North Las Vegas, 489 U.S. 538, 543 (1989).

As a District offense with a 6 month penalty is presumptively a "petty" offense under Blanton, such an offense would appear to fall under D.C. Code § 16-705(b) and by default be subject to a trial by the court unless the defendant requests a trial by jury and the prosecutor consents. It is unclear if more recent legislative decisions setting a 6 month penalty for certain offenses were made with knowledge that prosecutorial discretion could still be exercised to deny jury demands for offenses with a 6 month penalty.

[23] The Council's earliest post-Blanton legislation changing dozens of penalties to 180 day maximum imprisonment misstated the Blanton holding, with the apparent assumption that a 6 month penalty would be jury demandable under Blanton even though the Court holding was that offenses 6 months or less were presumptively petty. See Committee on the Judiciary, Report on Bill 10-98, the "Omnibus Criminal Justice Reform Amendment Act of 1994," (Jan. 26, 1994) at 3 ("Under Blanton v. City of Las Vegas, the Supreme Court indicated that it would presume that offenses punishable by less than 6 months imprisonment are "petty offenses" and not subject to 6th amendment guarantees for trial by Jury.").

[24] See Waiver of Jury Trials, 0030 SURVEYS 24 (Westlaw); People v. Dist. Court of Colorado's Seventeenth Judicial Dist., 843 P.2d 6, 11 (Colo. 1992) (en banc). Notably, Maryland specifically provides that, "The State does not have the right to elect a trial by jury." Md. Rule 4-246.

.

significant ambiguity under the current D.C. Code as to the status of offenses subject to a 6 month penalty by clarifying that all offenses specifically described in the revised statute are jury demandable and shall be by jury unless the defendant waives the right. The revised statute also addresses possible administrative concerns by requiring court consent to waiver of a jury trial within 10 days of a scheduled trial. These changes improve the clarity and proportionality of the revised statutes.

***

The rationale for limiting a right to a jury to offenses punishable by 180 days or less is rooted in a specific factual context that no longer exists in the District.

For most of the past century, the District has provided a more expansive jury trial right than it does today.[25] Between 1926 and 1993, criminal defendants were entitled to a jury trial in all cases punishable by a fine or penalty of $300 or more, or by imprisonment for more than 90 days.[26] In 1992, however, the D.C. Council passed the Criminal and Juvenile Justice Reform Amendment Act, increasing the penalty threshold for a jury trial more than threefold and doubling the imprisonment threshold.[27] Although this was a dramatic change to the substantive jury trial right, its impact on the actual number of jury trials in the District was minimal. As Fred B. Ugast, then Chief Judge of D.C. Superior Court subsequently explained, because the vast majority of charged misdemeanors at the time had maximum penalties of one year, the amendment did not result in a significant change in jury trial rates.[28] However, the year after the Criminal and Juvenile Justice Reform Amendment Act went into effect, the Council passed the Omnibus Criminal Justice Reform Amendment Act of 1994.[29] The legislation reduced the penalties of more than forty misdemeanor offenses to remove criminal defendants' rights to demand a jury trial.[30] Today, jury trial rates in misdemeanor cases remain well below 1%.[31]

---

[25] See Act of June 17, 1870, 41st Cong., (1870) (16 Stat. 153) (providing right to trial by jury de novo on appeal from all actions in Police Court); Act of March 3, 1891, 51st Cong., (1891) (26 Stat. 848) (providing right to trial by jury in Police Court for all cases punishable by penalty $50 or more or imprisonment for thirty days or more); Act of March 3, 1925, 68th Cong., (1925) (43 Stat. 1119) (providing right to trial by jury in Police Court for all cases punishable by penalty of $300 or more or by imprisonment for more than ninety days).

[26] Act of March 3, 1925, 68th Cong., (1925) (43 Stat. 1119).

[27] Criminal and Juvenile Justice Reform Amendment Act of 1992, D.C. Law 9-272.

[28] Committee on the Judiciary Report on Bill 10-98, the "Omnibus Criminal Justice Reform Amendment Act of 1994" attached "Copy of letter dated September 20, 1993 from Chief Judge Fred B. Ugast of the Superior Court ("Last year, the Council passed an amendment to D.C. Code §16-705(b)(1) providing for the right to a trial by jury in criminal cases where the maximum penalty exceeds 180 days incarceration or a fine of $1000 (up from 90 days and $300). Because the vast majority of charged misdemeanors currently have maximum penalties of one year, the amendment has not significantly reduced the number of jury trials in misdemeanor cases.").

[29] Omnibus Criminal Justice Reform Amendment Act of 1994, D.C. Law 10-151.

[30] Omnibus Criminal Justice Reform Amendment Act of 1994, D.C. Law 10-151.

[31] Compiled from District of Columbia Courts Annual Reports, showing misdemeanor jury trials as a percentage of misdemeanor dispositions at: 0.13% in 2003, 0.15% in 2004, 0.16% in 2005, 0.10% in 2006, 0.27% in 2007, 0.18% in 2008, 0.11% in 2009, 0.10% in 2010, 0.13% in 2011, 0.23% in 2012, 0.21% in 2013, 0.09% in 2014, 0.20% in 2015, 0.07% in 2016, 0.08% in 2017, and 0.07% in 2018.

Both the Criminal and Juvenile Justice Reform Amendment Act of 1992 and the Omnibus Criminal Justice Reform Amendment Act of 1994 were passed at a time when responding to violent crime was the Council's priority as part of a conscious effort to promote expediency in the criminal process. Although there was no claim that the legislation would result in cost savings, the stated aim of the legislation was to promote judicial efficiency:

> Title V reduces the penalty of more than 40 crimes to 180 days, presumptively making them non-jury demandable. Both the Superior Court and the U.S. Attorney support this change to allow for efficiencies in the judicial process. While there would be no actual monetary savings, this change will relieve pressure on current misdemeanor calendars, allow for more cases to be heard by hearing commissioners, and allow more felony trials to be scheduled at an earlier date.[32]

In 1993, the year the Criminal and Juvenile Justice Reform Amendment Act went into effect and the year the Omnibus Criminal Justice Reform Amendment Act was introduced, violent crime in the District had reached an all-time high. According to the FBI's Uniform Crime Reporting Program, rates of violent crime in the District peaked in 1993 at 2,922 per 100,000 people.[33] The D.C. Council was reaching for all available options to respond. As noted in the committee report for the Omnibus Criminal Justice Reform Amendment Act of 1994:

> Over the past few years, the Council has passed much legislation in an attempt to curtail the crime and violence in the District of Columbia. However, crime and violence continues to hold the District of Columbia within its grip. . . .
>
> . . . The Council in its continued fight, must look at all options to increase public safety, including redefining crimes, reviewing management, and reallocating resources.[34]

Yet, overall violent crime in the District has been in steady decline since 1993.[35] In 2018, violent crime in the District reached 996 per 100,000 people, a 66% decrease from

[32] Committee on the Judiciary Report on Bill 10-98, the "Omnibus Criminal Justice Reform Amendment Act of 1994" at 4.
[33] Federal Bureau of Investigation, Crime Data Explorer, Crime Rates in the District of Columbia, 1985-2018, https://crime-data-explorer.fr.cloud.gov/explorer/state/district-of-columbia/crime.
[34] Committee on the Judiciary Report on Bill 10-98, the "Omnibus Criminal Justice Reform Amendment Act of 1994" at 2.
[35] Federal Bureau of Investigation, Crime Data Explorer, Crime Rates in the District of Columbia, 1985-2018, https://crime-data-explorer.fr.cloud.gov/explorer/state/district-of-columbia/crime.

1993,[36] and the lowest since the 1967.[37] This decrease in violent crime rates in the District in recent decades undermines the primary rationale for prioritizing judicial expediency over due process.

In addition, the impact of expanding jury demandability on judicial resources is unclear. Assuming that both judicial and prosecutorial resources are relatively constant and inelastic in the near future, and that jury trials require greater resources than bench trials, the result of expanding jury demandability may be an increase in non-trial dispositions (plea, diversion, or dismissal) for lower level cases. This is because any judicial impact depends on prosecutorial charging decisions which are highly discretionary, dynamic, and likely to change with resource pressure.

Expansion of the jury trial right would almost certainly increase to some degree the number of misdemeanor jury trials held annually. While the overall rate of jury trials has been variable, it has been at historic lows in recent years. The rate of jury trials has steadily declined for decades across the United States, with jury trials making up only a small fraction of overall dispositions.[38] In the District, felony jury trial rates averaged 7% over the past 15 years,[39] with the vast majority of charges resulting in either dismissal (36%)[40] or a guilty plea (52%).[41] Similarly, the vast majority of misdemeanor cases in the District

[36] Federal Bureau of Investigation, Crime Data Explorer, Crime Rates in the District of Columbia, 1985-2018, https://crime-data-explorer.fr.cloud.gov/explorer/state/district-of-columbia/crime.
[37] Federal Bureau of Investigation, UCR Data Tool, Violent Crime Rates in the District of Columbia, 1960-2014, https://www.ucrdatatool.gov/Search/Crime/State/RunCrimeStatebyState.cfm.
[38] See generally Marc Galanter, The Vanishing Trial: An Examination of Trials and Related Matters in Federal and State Courts, 1 J. Emp. L. Stud. 459 (2004); Brian J. Ostrom, Shauna M. Strickland, and Paula L. Hannaford-Agor, "Examining Trial Trends in State Courts: 1976-2002," Journal of Empirical Legal Studies 1, no. 3 (November 2004): 755-782.
[39] Compiled from District of Columbia Courts Annual Reports, showing felony jury trials as a percentage of felony dispositions at: 5% in 2003, 5% in 2004, 4% in 2005, 5% in 2006, 7% in 2007, 8% in 2008, 8% in 2009, 10% in 2010, 9% in 2011, 9% in 2012, 10% in 2013, 10% in 2014, 9% in 2015, 6% in 2016, 5% in 2017, and 4% in 2018.
[40] Compiled from District of Columbia Courts Annual Reports, showing felony dismissals (including no papered, nolle prosequi, dismissed with plea, and dismissal plea agreements) as a percentage of felony dispositions at: 46% in 2003, 44% in 2004, 40% in 2005, 31% in 2006, 33% in 2007, 34% in 2008, 31% in 2009, 27% in 2010, 27% in 2011, 27% in 2012, 25% in 2013, 29% in 2014, 32% in 2015, 38% in 2016, 43% in 2017, and 41% in 2018.
[41] Compiled from District of Columbia Courts Annual Reports, showing felony guilty pleas as a percentage of felony dispositions at: 34% in 2003, 35% in 2004, 28% in 2005, 62% in 2006, 59% in 2007, 58% in 2008, 60% in 2009, 63% in 2010, 63% in 2011, 62% in 2012, 64% in 2013, 59% in 2014, 58% in 2015, 56% in 2016, 51% in 2017, and 54% in 2018.

resolve through dismissal (42%),[42] a plea (30%),[43] or diversion (14%).[44] Misdemeanor bench trial rates have remained low, averaging 5% of all misdemeanor dispositions.[45] There is no reason to think that an expansion of the misdemeanor jury trial right would create a significant shift in these numbers beyond converting bench trials to jury trials.

Further cutting against the judicial efficiency argument is the fact that the vast majority of states successfully provide full jury trial rights to their citizens. Thirty-five states currently provide the right to a jury trial in virtually all criminal prosecutions in the first instance.[46] Another three states require bench trials for some minor criminal offenses, but provide a jury trial right de novo on appeal, effectively guaranteeing a jury trial right in every case.[47] Another three states have developed systems that stop short of a full jury trial right, but are more expansive than the constitutional minimum.[48] Only nine other jurisdictions have jury trial rights that, like the District's, set jury demandability at the constitutional minimum.[49]

---

[42] Compiled from District of Columbia Courts Annual Reports, showing misdemeanor dismissals (including no papered, nolle prosequi, dismissed with plea, and dismissal plea agreements) as a percentage of misdemeanor dispositions at: 46% in 2003, 41% in 2004, 39% in 2005, 36% in 2006, 40% in 2007, 39% in 2008, 44% in 2009, 40% in 2010, 43% in 2011, 39% in 2012, 36% in 2013, 40% in 2014, 43% in 2015, 49% in 2016, 47% in 2017, and 51% in 2018.

[43] Compiled from District of Columbia Courts Annual Reports, showing misdemeanor guilty pleas as a percentage of misdemeanor dispositions at: 21% in 2003, 23% in 2004, 26% in 2005, 41% in 2006, 36% in 2007, 34% in 2008, 31% in 2009, 36% in 2010, 32% in 2011, 29% in 2012, 31% in 2013, 30% in 2014, 28% in 2015, 27% in 2016, 28% in 2017, and 27% in 2018.

[44] Compiled from District of Columbia Courts Annual Reports, showing misdemeanor diversion as a percentage of misdemeanor dispositions at: 8% in 2003, 9% in 2004, 5% in 2005, 10% in 2006, 11% in 2007, 14% in 2008, 15% in 2009, 14% in 2010, 17% in 2011, 23% in 2012, 25% in 2013, 21% in 2014, 20% in 2015, 18% in 2016, 18% in 2017, and 16% in 2018.

[45] Compiled from District of Columbia Courts Annual Reports, showing misdemeanor bench trials as a percentage of misdemeanor dispositions at: 3% in 2003, 4% in 2004, 4% in 2005, 5% in 2006, 5% in 2007, 5% in 2008, 6% in 2009, 8% in 2010, 6% in 2011, 7% in 2012, 6% in 2013, 7% in 2014, 7% in 2015, 5% in 2016, 5% in 2017, and 5% in 2018.

[46] The following thirty-five states ensure the right to a jury trial in the first instance for virtually all criminal offenses: Alabama, Alaska, California, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Vermont, Washington, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and Wyoming. See Advisory Group Memo #31 – Supplementary Materials to the First Draft of Report #51 for further details. Some states provide this right by judicial interpretation of state constitutional provisions while others have legislatively enacted it.

[47] Arkansas, North Carolina, and Virginia. See Advisory Group Memo #31 – Supplementary Materials to the First Draft of Report #51 for further details.

[48] Hawaii (adopting a three-part test to determine an offense's severity), New Mexico (providing a jury trial right for all offenses punishable by more than ninety days), and New York (providing a full jury trial right throughout the state, but only for offenses punishable by six months in New York City). See Advisory Group Memo #31 – Supplementary Materials to the First Draft of Report #51 for further details.

[49] Arizona, Connecticut, Delaware, Louisiana, Mississippi, Nevada, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Rhode Island. See Advisory Group Memo #31 – Supplementary Materials to the First Draft of Report #51 for further details.

Yet, even if the rationale of judicial efficiency or financial[50] cost still holds for the District today, for several reasons, it is not clear that these considerations should outweigh a right to a jury of one's peers.

First, the right to a jury is a foundational right of the American legal system. It is one of the only rights enumerated in the original, unamended Constitution[51] and is given additional protection in the Sixth Amendment.[52] The constitutional language itself is unequivocal, ensuring the right to a jury trial for "all Crimes"[53] and in "all criminal prosecutions."[54] As many historians, legal scholars, and Supreme Court Justices have pointed out, the jury trial serves a score of critical democratic functions.[55] It ensures that community standards are represented in local courtrooms.[56]

Second, the Council itself, in considering legislation impacting the jury trial right in the District, has repeatedly discussed and considered numerous circumstances in which the jury serves a particularly important role in weighing the outcome of a case. This includes cases where civil liberties are at stake,[57] cases where subjectivity plays a large role in demarcating criminal conduct,[58] and cases where law enforcement officers' credibility

[50] Considering that the 1994 reduction in jury-demandable offenses had no anticipated monetary impact, it is likewise unlikely that the reverse process, an expansion of jury-demandable offenses, would result in additional cost. Committee on the Judiciary Report on Bill 10-98, the "Omnibus Criminal Justice Reform Amendment Act of 1994" at 4 (indicating no monetary savings as a result of the amendment).
[51] U.S. Const. art. III, § 2, cl. 1 (The Trial of all Crimes, except in Cases of Impeachment, shall be by Jury).
[52] U.S. Const. amend. VI, cl. 1 (In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed).
[53] U.S. Const. art. III, § 2, cl. 1.
[54] U.S. Const. amend. VI, cl. 1.
[55] See, e.g., Colleen P. Murphy, The Narrowing of the Entitlement to Criminal Jury Trial, 1997 Wisc. L. R. 133, 136-37 (1997); Duncan v. Louisiana, 391 U.S. 145, 155-56 (1968); Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466, 4776 (2000).
[56] Duncan v. Louisiana, 391 U.S. 145, 155-56 (1968); Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466, 4776 (2000).
[57] See Committee on the Judiciary Report on Bill 16-247, the "Omnibus Public Safety Act of 2006," at 7 ("Generally, the committee print provides for jury demandable offenses where there is a possible conflict between law and civil liberties. For instances, the status offense of gang membership (no criminal activity required other than mere membership) is such that the extra layer protection for the liberty of the accused individual, —that is, allowing for a jury trial—is reasonable. Similarly, the penalty for unlawful entry currently is jury demandable. Because this charge is often brought against demonstrators, the protection of trial by jury seems prudent. The newly created prostitution free zones will permit law enforcement against otherwise permitted activity—freedom of association, for instance—and thus the bill permits trial by jury.").
[58] See Committee on the Judiciary Report on Bill 16-247, the "Omnibus Public Safety Act of 2006," at 7 ("Another concern is whether the elements of the crime are somewhat subjective. In such cases the defendant should be able to present his or her case to representatives of the community (i.e. a jury) to answer the question whether there is guilt beyond a reasonable doubt."); Committee on the Judiciary Report on Bill 18-151, the "Omnibus Public Safety and Justice Amendment Act of 2009," at 33 ("A key change recommended by the Committee has to do ensuring a defendant's right to a jury trial. The primary factor in the Committee's decision to ensure this right relates to the subjective nature of stalking. It seems highly appropriate that a jury of peers would be best equipped to judge whether the behavior is acceptable or outside the norm and indicative of escalating problems. As stated by PDS, '[s]talking is an offense for which the community, not a single judge, should sit in judgment. Community norms should inform decisions about whether behavior is criminal or excusable.'").

is at issue.[59] While these Council statements have been made in the context of specific offenses, these rationales apply much more broadly across misdemeanors.[60]

Third, rights-based arguments aside, the limitations on jury demandability produce two main problems in specific cases.

First, the existence of a divide between jury-demandable and non-jury demandable cases in which the former require greater prosecutorial and judicial resources than the latter distorts charging practices by incentivizing the prosecution of lower charges that do not fully account for the facts of a case. Prosecutors enjoy wide discretion in charging decisions and the overlap between the scope of conduct covered by particular offenses (to a lesser degree under the RCC than the current D.C. Code) gives prosecutors multiple options as to which crimes to charge in a given case. If a prosecutor wishes to avoid a jury trial for any reason—and to the extent that added time is required for a jury trial or a conviction is less likely,[61] a prosecutor may be incentivized to do so—he or she often can simply opt to charge a non-jury demandable offense. The extent to which prosecutors make their charging decisions based on whether the crime is jury demandable is difficult to measure because charging discretion may be based on so many different reasons and there is no record as to the reason for choosing one charge over another.[62] However, there are two examples that indicate the impact of this practice.

One example of how restriction of jury demandability distorts charging is the use of attempt charges to avoid jury trials in threat cases. D.C. Code § 22-407 criminalizes

---

[59] See Committee on the Judiciary Report on Bill 360, the "Neighborhood Engagement Achieves Results Amendment Act of 2016," at 16-17 (emphasizing the importance of the jury in moderating prosecutorial charging decisions and the importance of removing the judge from having to make officer credibility findings as support for making assault on police officer offenses jury demandable).

[60] For example, for a charge of current D.C. Code § 22–1307, Crowding, obstructing, or incommoding (a 90 day offense) or other misdemeanor public order offenses the complainant of record and sole witness may be a law enforcement officer. Arguably, as with assault on a police officer, the same rationale of removing the judge from having to make officer credibility findings in a case would support making this offense jury demandable.

[61] Joshua Kaplan, D.C. Laws Strip Thousands of Criminal Defendants of Their Right to a Jury Trial. One D.C. Judge Has Suggested That Should Change, Washington City Paper (September 12, 2019) ("But while the Council's goal may have been efficiency, the effect on imprisonment rates was immediate and monumental. At the time, according to a report by the Court's executive officer, Superior Court judges were almost twice as likely as a jury to decide that someone was guilty—so reducing jury trials made the conviction rate skyrocket. For misdemeanors, the year prior to the MSA, only 46 percent of cases ended with a guilty verdict or a guilty plea. The year after, that number jumped to 64 percent. This wasn't exactly an unexpected consequence. Several councilmembers were sure to clarify that despite reducing criminal penalties, the MSA was tough on crime. Even though the maximum sentence for most of these crimes used to be one year, the actual sentence was already generally less than 180 days. Thus, explained Harold Brazil—then-Ward 6 councilmember and one of the Act's co-sponsors—the MSA would mean 'misdemeanants would actually do more time.' 'Crime in our society…[is] out of control,' Brazil argued at a Council hearing on April 12, 1994. 'Years and years of leniency and looking the other way and letting the criminal go has gotten us into this predicament.'").

[62] But, see Joshua Kaplan, D.C. Laws Strip Thousands of Criminal Defendants of Their Right to a Jury Trial. One D.C. Judge Has Suggested That Should Change, Washington City Paper (September 12, 2019) ("Reviewing more than 500 cases from 2019, City Paper found that over the course of one month, prosecutors dodged jury trials more than 24 times a week by taking a crime that is jury-demandable and charging it as another, counterintuitive crime that's not.").

threats to do bodily harm.[63] Because the authorized maximum penalty for threats to do bodily harm is six months, a criminal defendant charged with the offense is entitled to a jury trial.[64] The District's attempt statute, however, has a maximum authorized penalty of 180 days for non-crime of violence offenses, making an attempted threat to do bodily harm non-jury demandable.[65] Although it is legally possible to attempt a threat without actually completing a threat, the likelihood of this factual scenario both occurring and resulting in prosecution is exceedingly low.[66] Nonetheless, of the 6,556 charges brought under D.C. Code § 22-407 between 2009 and 2018, 56% were for attempted threats rather than completed threats.[67] As there is no practical difference in the authorized imprisonment penalty between the attempt and completed offense (the difference between 6 months and 180 days), such a high percentage of charges for attempted threats of bodily injury suggests charging decisions may be based on jury demandability rather than how the facts fit the law.

Another example of example of how restriction of jury demandability distorts charging is evidenced by the shift in the number of charges brought under D.C. Code § 22-405(b)—assault on a police officer (APO)—before and after the offense became jury demandable. In 2016, the D.C. Council passed the Neighborhood Engagement Achieves Results (NEAR) Act, which split the existing 180 day, non-jury demandable APO offense into a new APO offense and a resisting arrest offenses and increased the penalty for both to six months.[68] The apparent legislative purpose of this shift was to make sure that these offenses were decided by juries rather than judges.[69] But charging data suggests that this has not been the effect of the law. The number of charges for violations of D.C. Code § 22-405(b) remained relatively consistent within the range of 1,592 and 1,712 for every two-year period between 2009 and 2016.[70] However, after the NEAR Act, for the period of [63] D.C. Code § 22-407 ("Whoever is convicted in the District of threats to do bodily harm shall be fined not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01 or imprisoned not more than 6 months, or both, and, in addition thereto, or in lieu thereof, may be required to give bond to keep the peace for a period not exceeding 1 year.").

[64] D.C. Code § 22-407; D.C. Code § 16-705.
[65] D.C. Code § 22-1803; D.C. Code § 16-705.
[66] See Evans v. United States, 779 A.2d 891, 894 (D.C. 2001) (holding that "if a threat fortuitously goes unheard, the person who utters it is guilty of an attempt, not the completed offense" but recognizing that "[a]s a practical matter, such unconsummated threats may be unprovable").
[67] CCRC Advisory Group Memorandum #28 - Statistics on District Adult Criminal Charges and Convictions. Also, of the 1,869 convictions under D.C. Code § 22-407 between 2009 and 2018, 72% were for attempted threats rather than completed threats. Id.
[68] Neighborhood Engagement Achieves Results Amendment Act of 2016 (effective June 30, 2016), D.C. Law 21-125.
[69] See Joshua Kaplan, D.C. Laws Strip Thousands of Criminal Defendants of Their Right to a Jury Trial. One D.C. Judge Has Suggested That Should Change, Washington City Paper (September 12, 2019) ("Ward 5 Councilmember Kenyan McDuffie, who wrote the NEAR Act, tells City Paper that the goal was the make the crime jury-demandable."); Committee on the Judiciary Report on Bill 360, the "Neighborhood Engagement Achieves Results Amendment Act of 2016," at 16-17.
[70] CCRC Advisory Group Memorandum #28 - Statistics on District Adult Criminal Charges and Convictions. Specifically, the numbers were: 1,712 in 2009-2010, 1,592 in 2011-2012, 1,659 in 2013-2014, 1,697 in 2015-2016. Id.

2017 to 2018, the combined number of charges for APO[71] and resisting arrest[72] dropped by about a thousand charges to a mere 529[73] This represents a more than 66% decrease in charging from the previous years. However, the number of charges brought for violations of D.C. Code § 22-404(a)—simple assault—saw a corresponding uptick with the passage of the NEAR Act. For two-year periods between 2009 and 2016 simple assault charges were in the range of 3,221 to 3,865, but rose about a thousand charges to 5,282 for the period of 2017 to 2018.[74] The elements of the simple assault offense are identical to the prior APO offense, except that the complainant's status as a law enforcement officer need not be proven. And the NEAR Act did not explicitly preclude prosecutors from using their discretion to charge what previously had been an APO case as a simple assault. As there is no practical difference in the authorized imprisonment penalty between the revised offenses (revised APO and resisting arrest) and simple assault (the difference between 6 months and 180 days), the shift in charges so simple assault suggests these charging decisions may be based on jury demandability rather than how the facts fit the law.

The second main problem caused by the limitation of the right to a jury is that the maximum term of imprisonment is sometimes an inaccurate proxy for the real seriousness of a criminal charge to a particular person. Some offenses carry severe consequences for those charged despite having relatively low terms of incarceration yet are not afforded a jury trial.

One example of how an imprisonment penalty misrepresents the seriousness of a criminal charge is D.C. Code § 22-3010.01—misdemeanor sexual abuse of a child or minor—a 180-day offense that currently is not entitled to a jury trial.[75] But the offense is a "registration offense" under D.C. Code § 22-4001(8)(A).[76] Because of this, a person convicted of misdemeanor sexual abuse of a child or minor is subject to mandatory sex offender reporting requirements for ten years following their conviction or release.[77] The collateral consequences of sex offender registration—including burdensome restrictions on residency, internet usage, and access to public housing have been extensively documented.[78] The long-term and public nature of reporting requirements, the increased exposure to criminal liability for failures to report, and the additional social and structural [71] The 2017-2018 charges for the unrevised and revised APO, D.C. Code § 22-405, were 355, with 80 convictions (a 23% conviction rate). CCRC Advisory Group Memorandum #28 - Statistics on District Adult Criminal Charges and Convictions.

[72] The 2017-2018 charges for D.C. Code § 22-405.01 were 174, with 25 convictions (a 14% conviction rate). CCRC Advisory Group Memorandum #28 - Statistics on District Adult Criminal Charges and Convictions.
[73] CCRC Advisory Group Memorandum #28 - Statistics on District Adult Criminal Charges and Convictions.
[74] The charges for D.C. Code § 22-404(a) were: 3,221 in 2009-2010, 3,506 in 2011-2012, 3,432 in 2013-2014, 3,865 in 2015-2016, and 5,282 in 2017-2018.
[75] D.C. Code § 22-3010.01. See also misdemeanor sexual abuse, D.C. Code § 22–3006, carrying a 180 day (non-jury demandable) maximum imprisonment penalty.
[76] D.C. Code § 22-4001(8)(A).
[77] D.C. Code § 22-4003.
[78] See, e.g., Richard Tewksbury, Exile at Home: The Unintended Collateral Consequences of Sex Offender Residency Restrictions, 42 Harv. C.R.-C.L. L. Rev. 531, 532-539 (2007); Human Rights Watch, No Easy Answers: Sex Offender Laws in the US (September 2007).

consequences that accompany sex offender registration indicate that the seriousness of a misdemeanor sexual abuse or other charge involving sex offender registration may warrant elevated due process rights as a matter of policy.[79]

A second example of how imprisonment penalties do not accurately represent the seriousness of a criminal charge is when that charge could result in deportation. In 2018, an en banc decision of the D.C. Court of Appeals in Bado v. United States first held that a criminal defendant is entitled to a jury trial under the United States Constitution if charged with an offense that could result in deportation.[80] Although this decision addressed the fundamental issue of severe consequences resulting from juryless convictions, it has also produced its own set of challenges. As Senior Judge Washington noted in his concurring opinion, the court's decision created an odd dichotomy in which non-citizens are now entitled to more due process in the District's Superior Court than citizens for the exact same offense.[81] While the Bado decision extends jury demandability to relevant crimes for non-citizens, these non-citizens are in the difficult position of having to reveal their immigration status in open court in order to claim a constitutional right.[82]

The partial restoration of a jury right may have significant benefits to public safety insofar as this change in District law helps to restore community support for the criminal justice system.[83] In his concurring opinion to the Bado decision, Judge Washington urged the D.C. Council to adopt a full jury trial right and stating:

> Restoring the right to a jury trial in misdemeanor cases could have the salutary effect of elevating the public's trust and confidence that the government is more concerned with courts protecting individual rights and freedoms than in ensuring that courts are as efficient as possible in bringing defendants to trial.[84]

---

[79] The DCCA has previously held that, as a matter of law, a right to a jury does not exist for a charge of misdemeanor child sexual abuse under current law. Thomas v. United States, 942 A.2d 1180, 1186 (D.C. 2008).

[80] Bado v. United States, 186 A.3d 1243, 1246-47 (D.C. 2018) (en banc) ("We hold that the penalty of deportation, when viewed together with a maximum period of incarceration that does not exceed six months, overcomes the presumption that the offense is petty and triggers the Sixth Amendment right to a trial by jury.")

[81] Bado v. United States, 186 A.3d 1243, 1262 (D.C. 2018) (en banc) ("I write separately because I am concerned that our decision today, while faithful to the dictates of Blanton, creates a disparity between the jury trial rights of citizens and noncitizens that lay persons might not readily understand. That disparity is one that the legislature could, and in my opinion, should address. The failure to do so could undermine the public's trust and confidence in our courts to resolve criminal cases fairly.").

[82] This point previously has been raised the Public Defender Service for the District of Columbia, a CCRC Advisory Group Member. See CCRC Comments on First Draft of Report #41 Ordinal Ranking of Maximum Imprisonment Penalties, 2 (November 15, 2019).

[83] Tom R. Tyler et al., The Impact of Psychological Science on Policing in the United States: Procedural Justice, Legitimacy, and Effective Law Enforcement, Psychological Science in the Public Interest, 16, 75-109. (Available at http://dx.doi.org/10.1177/1529100615617791.)

[84] Bado v. United States, 186 A.3d 1243, 1264 (D.C. 2018) (en banc).

However, the revised statute does not address all rights-based and other problems with restriction of jury-demandability. As long as the right to a jury trial is restricted for some charges and the prosecution of those charges require fewer resources or are more likely to result in a conviction, there will continue to be incentives to base charging decisions on jury demandability rather than what charge best fits the facts of the case at hand. In addition, as noted above, the revised statute's codification of the Bado holding requires non-citizen defendants to disclose their citizenship status in court in order to avail themselves of jury demandability. Finally, there may be significant judicial efficiency costs that arise from litigation over the right to a jury for specific charges and individual defendants—efficiency costs that would not exist if the District followed the majority of states in extending a right to a jury in every criminal case carrying an imprisonment penalty.

The revised statute is a compromise solution to restore jury demandability that mitigates the potential impact on judicial efficiency. The revised statute, however, should not be construed as a permanent judgment as to the appropriate balance between judicial efficiency and the right to a jury of one's peers. A future expansion of jury-demandability to all criminal offenses may be feasible and warranted in the near future.

RCC § 16-1005A. Criminal Contempt for Violation of a Civil Protection Order.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the criminal contempt for violation of a civil protection order provision for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The offense prohibits violating a temporary or final protection order issued in any jurisdiction. It replaces subsections (f), (g),[1] (g-1), (h), and (i) of D.C. Code § 16-1005, Hearing, evidence, protection order.

Paragraph (a)(1) requires that the person knows that they are subject to a temporary or final civil protection order issued in the District or a valid foreign protection order. The term "knows" is defined in RCC § 22E-206 and here requires that the person is practically certain that they are subject to a protection order.[2] Under RCC § 22E-208(d), knowledge may be imputed if the person is reckless as to whether the circumstance exists and, with the purpose of avoiding criminal liability, avoids confirming or fails to investigate whether the circumstance exists.[3]

Subparagraph (a)(1)(A) specifies that there are three types of protection orders that cannot be violated. The phrase "in fact" indicates that the accused is strictly liable[4] with respect to whether the order was a temporary protection order, final protection order, or valid foreign protection order. Invalidity of the order is not a defense.[5] The reference to temporary civil protection orders includes both orders issued outside of court business hours (termed emergency temporary protection orders) and those issued during regular business hours. A respondent is not subject to a temporary order until they are properly served with a notice of the hearing and an order to appear, a copy of the petition, and the temporary protection order.[6] The reference to final civil protection orders includes orders entered by consent without admission of guilt.[7] The term "valid foreign protection order" is a defined term with the meaning specified in D.C. Code § 16-1041.

Subparagraphs (a)(1)(B) – (a)(1)(D) require that the release order is in writing,[8] advises the person of the consequences for violating the order, and is sufficiently clear and

---

[1] The District of Columbia Court of Appeals has held that the elements of the offense are the same whether charged under § 16-1005(f) (violation of CPO as contempt) or § 16-1005(g) (violation of CPO as independent offense). Ba v. U.S., 809 A.2d 1178, 1182 n.6 (D.C. 2002).

[2] Consider, for example, a person who is unable to read or understand the protection order due to illiteracy or a language barrier. That person may not be practically certain that they are now subject to a protection order.

[3] Consider, for example, a person who is handed a protection order and angrily tears it up and throws it in the garbage before reading it. That person may be said to know that they were subject to the order, even though they were not practically certain of it.

[4] RCC § 22E-207.

[5] A person is not entitled to attack the validity of a court order in a contempt proceeding. See, e.g., Shewarega v. Yegzaw, 947 A.2d 47, 51 (D.C. 2008) (respondent not entitled to attack validity of a CPO in contempt proceeding; he was obligated to obey the court order unless and until it was reversed or vacated). "Compliance with court orders is required until they are reversed on appeal or are later modified." Baker, 891 A.2d at 212 (quoting Kammerman v. Kammerman, 543 A.2d 794, 798–99 (D.C. 1988)). See also Thomas v. U.S., 934 A.2d 389, 391 (D.C. 2007).

[6] See D.C. Code § 16-1004(d), requiring compliance with notice and service rules of the Superior Court of the District of Columbia.

[7] See D.C. Code § 16-1005(i).

[8] See D.C. Code §§ 16-1004 and 1005 requiring that protection orders be made in writing.

specific to serve as a guide for the person's conduct.[9] Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, a person is strictly liable as to whether the order is compliant with these requirements.

Paragraph (a)(2) requires that the person fail to comply[10] with the protection order. Paragraph (a)(2) specifies that the person must act knowingly, a term defined in RCC § 22E-206, which here means the person must be practically certain that they failed to comply with one or more provisions in the order. Under RCC § 22E-203, the person's conduct must be voluntary.[11] A person must be afforded a reasonable opportunity to comply with the condition.[12]

Subsection (b) specifies that a person does not commit an offense when they have the effective consent of a judicial officer to be excused from the provision of the order that is the subject of the charged offense.[13] "Effective consent" is a defined term and excludes consent that was obtained by the application of physical force, an explicit or implicit coercive threat, or deception.[14] "Consent" is also defined in RCC § 22E-701. The term

---

[9] Hector v. U.S., 883 A.2d 129, 131 (D.C. 2005) (explaining "A defendant cannot be convicted of criminal contempt where he or she is not put on notice of the specific conditions of the [CPO] order."); Smith v. U.S., 677 A.2d 1022, 1031 (D.C. 1996) (reversing contempt for violating CPO where no evidence that defendant was informed by court that "no contact" order meant no contact through writing as well as no physical contact); In re Jones, 898 A.2d 916, 920 (D.C. 2006) (stating, the order must be "specific and definite, or clear and unambiguous.").

[10] The failure must be to comply with a mandatory condition. For example, if the order permits, but does not require, parental visitation, a person does not violate the order by declining to visit.

[11] A person does not commit an offense if the act or omission was not subject to the person's control. For example, a person does not violate a condition to attend a domestic violence intervention program if they are incarcerated, hospitalized, or stranded. See, e.g., Evans v. United States, 133 A.3d 988, 993 (D.C. App. 2016) (explaining, "The evidence of appellant's chronic or recurring memory problems also was evidence that, if credited by the trial judge, might be deemed relevant to the court's assessment of whether appellant's failure to appear was willful. As another example, appellant testified that he 'had so much stuff going on' while his underlying marijuana-possession case was pending, including financial difficulties and housing challenges—circumstances that the trial court, if it credits appellant's testimony, may also deem relevant on the issue of willfulness."); Foster v. United States, 699 A.2d 1113, 1115 (D.C. App. 1997) (reversing a conviction under a similar statute where the defendant's employer unexpectedly canceled his return trip to the District); see also Fearwell v. U.S., 886 A.2d 95, 101 (D.C. 2005) (holding "[I]f there is evidence—however weak—to support it, a defendant is entitled to a requested instruction that he has presented evidence of special circumstances which prevented him from appearing in court on the scheduled date and time, and that if the jury credits that evidence, this may create a reasonable doubt concerning whether the government has proven willfulness beyond a reasonable doubt."); but see Grant v. U.S., 734 A.2d 174, 177 (D.C. 1999) (holding that "[a]ddiction to heroin [does] not constitute a defense to the charge of contempt based upon violating a condition of pretrial release not to use drugs.").

[12] For example, a person does not violate a condition to stay away from a complainant where the complainant is physically chasing after the person and the person makes reasonable efforts to distance themselves. See RCC § 22E-203 (requiring physical capacity to perform a required legal duty); Conley v. United States, 79 A.3d 270, 292-293 (D.C. 2013) (explaining voluntariness requires a reasonable opportunity to comply with a legal duty); Lambert v. People of the State of California, 355 U.S. 225, 229 (1957) (reversing a conviction where, on first becoming aware of her duty, the appellant had no opportunity to comply with the law and avoid its penalty).

[13] Consider, for example, a judge in one case orders a person to complete a domestic violence intervention program and a judge in another case orders the person to complete an inpatient drug rehabilitation program. Consider also a judge who – temporarily or permanently – loosens the requirements of a written order by making an oral pronouncement.

[14] RCC § 22E-701.

"in fact" indicates that the accused is strictly liable with respect to whether effective consent was given.[15]

Subsection (c) establishes jurisdiction where a person communicates to a person located in the District from a location outside the District.[16]

Subsection (d) specifies the penalty for the revised offense.[17] [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.] In some cases, the conduct criminalized under this section may also constitute criminal contempt under D.C. Code §§ 11-741 or 11-944[18] or failure to appear in violation of a court order under RCC § 23-1327[19] and, in that situation, convictions for the offenses must merge under RCC § 22E-214(a)(4).[20]

Subsection (e) cross-references applicable definitions in the RCC and D.C. Code.

Subsection (f) specifies that Chapters 1 – 6 the RCC's General Part apply to this Title 16 offense.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised criminal contempt for violation of a civil protection order statute clearly changes current District law in two main ways.

First, the revised statute does not criminalize failure to appear for a hearing on a civil protection order as criminal contempt. Current D.C. Code § 16-1005(f) states, "respondent's failure to appear as required by subsection (a) of this section, shall be punishable as [criminal] contempt." In contrast, the revised statute does not distinctly punish such conduct as criminal contempt. Unlike failure to appear as a defendant in a criminal case, which is punished under RCC § 22E-1327, failure to appear in a civil case or quasi-civil case does not frustrate the court's ability to proceed.[21] Accordingly, for violation of a civil protection order a default judgment and civil contempt may be more appropriate sanctions,[22] although criminal contempt also remains available under D.C. Code § 11-944. This change reduces unnecessary overlap and improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised statutes.

---

[15] RCC § 22E-207.

[16] See 16-1005(h).

[17] This section operates independently of and in addition to statute eliminating limitation on length of sentence for criminal contempt, thus the sentencing limit effectively does not apply. Caldwell v. U.S., 1991, 595 A.2d 961 (D.C. 1991).

[18] See Caldwell v. U.S., 595 A.2d 961, 965–66 (D.C. 1991); Vest v. United States, 834 A.2d 908 (D.C. App. 2003).

[19] See, e.g., Swisher v. U.S., 572 A.2d 85, 89 (D.C. 1990).

[20] "Multiple convictions for 2 or more offenses arising from the same course of conduct merge when…[o]ne offense reasonably accounts for the other offense, given the harm or wrong, culpability, and penalty proscribed by each."

[21] Due process and procedural rules may require a defendant's presence in a criminal case. See, e.g., FRCrP 43. However, in a civil case, the court can proceed in the defendant or respondent's absence and grant the plaintiff or petitioner relief by default. D.C. Code § 16-1004(3) authorizes the entry of a final civil protection order by default, if a respondent fails to appear. This is a particularly robust sanction because, unlike a default or default judgment in a purely civil case, a civil protection order appears in a criminal records search, triggering a multitude of collateral consequences for the respondent.

[22] See, e.g., D.C. Code § 16-2325.01(c) (authorizing civil contempt instead of criminal contempt for failure to appear as a participant in a delinquency or neglect proceeding).

Second, the revised statute specifies that the general provisions of Chapters 1 through 6 of Subtitle I of Title 22E of the D.C. Code apply to this offense. The current D.C. Code generally does not codify consistent definitions, rules of liability, rules of interpretation, or general defenses. In contrast, Subtitle I of Title 22E sets forth broadly applicable rules and definitions relating to the basic requirements of criminal liability, inchoate liability, justification defenses, and penalty enhancements. Application of these general provisions to the revised offense may change District law in numerous ways. For more in-depth discussion of these general provisions, see commentary accompanying statutory provisions in Subtitle I of Title 22E. These changes improve the clarity, consistency, completeness, and proportionality of the revised offense.

Beyond these two changes to current District law, three other aspects of the revised statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised statute applies standardized definitions for the culpable mental states required for criminal liability. Current D.C. Code §§ 16-1005(f) and (g) do not specify a culpable mental state requirement. District case law has held that a person must act "willfully, i.e. that he had a 'wrongful state of mind.'"[23] However, case law does not provide a clear definition of "willfully." Resolving this ambiguity, the revised statute uses the RCC's general provisions that define "knowingly"[24] and "in fact,"[25] applying the former to the actor's failure to comply with the order and the latter to the nature and issuance of the order. In addition, under RCC § 22E-208(d), knowledge may be imputed when a person consciously disregards a substantial risk that that they are subject to a protection order, and, to avoid liability, avoids confirming or fails to investigate whether they are subject to a protection order. These changes clarify and improve the consistency of District statutes.

Second, the revised statute includes a defense where the accused acts with the effective consent[26] of a judicial officer. Current D.C. Code § 16-1005(f) – (i) are silent as to whether a person may be excused from complying with an order with the consent of a judicial officer.[27] Resolving this ambiguity, the revised statute makes clear that the court is empowered to excuse the accused from complying. This change improves the clarity and proportionality of the revised offense.

Third, the revised statute requires that the release order be in writing,[28] advise the person of the consequences for violating the order, and be clear and specific. Current D.C. Code § 16-1005 is silent as to whether or how a person's conditions of release be specified

[23] See Davis v. U.S., 834 A.2d 861, 867 (D.C. 2003) (reversing a conviction where a defendant was removed from a required 22-week program "willfully.")
[24] RCC § 22E-206.
[25] RCC § 22E-207.
[26] "Effective consent" is defined in RCC § 22E-701 to exclude consent obtained by means other than the application of physical force, an explicit or implicit coercive threat, or deception.
[27] Consider, for example, a judge who in one case orders a person to complete a domestic violence intervention program and a judge in another case who orders the person to complete an inpatient drug rehabilitation program. Consider also a judge who – temporarily or permanently – loosens the requirements of a written order by making an oral pronouncement.
[28] See D.C. Code §§ 16-1004 and 1005 requiring that protection orders be made in writing.

in an order. District case law has held that evidence of contempt is insufficient where the civil protection order is not sufficiently clear and specific to serve as a guide to defendant's conduct.[29] However, case law has not addressed whether other criteria, such as notice of the potential penalties for failure to comply, must also be satisfied. To resolve this ambiguity, the revised statute codifies this point and requires notice similar to what is required for criminal contempt for violation of a release condition under RCC § 22E-1329A. This change clarifies and improves the consistency of District statutes.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

First, the revised statute does not specify that children must be prosecuted as children. Current D.C. Code § 16-1005(g-1) states, "Enforcement proceedings under subsections (f) and (g) of this section in which the respondent is a child as defined by § 16-2301(3) shall be governed by subchapter I of Chapter 23 of this title." This language appears to be superfluous and potentially confusing, as no other criminal offense definition includes a similar cross-reference. This change clarifies the revised statute and does not change District law.

Second, the revised statute does not specify that final civil protection orders include orders entered by consent without admission. Current D.C. Code § 16-1005(i) states, "Orders entered with the consent of the respondent but without an admission that the conduct occurred shall be punishable under subsection (f), (g), or (g-1) of this section." This language appears to be superfluous, however, the Explanatory Note makes clear that a court order includes a consent order. This change clarifies the revised statute and does not change District law.

Third, the revised statute is severed from D.C. Code § 16-1005 and given its own section in the revised code. This change clarifies that the defense, penalties, and definitions do not apply to subsections (a) – (e) of current D.C. Code § 16-1005, which are not being revised at this time. This change improves the clarity and logical organization of the revised statutes.

[29] Hector v. U.S., 883 A.2d 129, 131 (D.C. 2005) (explaining "A defendant cannot be convicted of criminal contempt where he or she is not put on notice of the specific conditions of the [CPO] order."); Smith v. U.S., 677 A.2d 1022, 1031 (D.C. 1996) (reversing contempt for violating CPO where no evidence that defendant was informed by court that "no contact" order meant no contact through writing as well as no physical contact); In re Jones, 898 A.2d 916, 920 (D.C. 2006) (stating, the order must be "specific and definite, or clear and unambiguous.").

RCC § 16-1021. Parental Kidnapping Definitions.

Explanatory Note. This section defines relevant terms for Subchapter II of Chapter 10 of Title 16. This section replaces current D.C. Code § 16-1021.

The revised section defines terms as used in Subchapter II of Chapter 10 of Title 16. Paragraph (1) defines the term "child" as a person under the age of 16. Paragraph (2) defines the term "lawful custodian" to mean a person who is authorized to have custody under District law, or by an order of the Superior Court of the District of Columbia or a court of competent jurisdiction of any state, or a person designated by the lawful custodian temporarily to care for the child. This term is intended to include persons who are authorized to have custody under District law, whether or not that authority is pursuant to a court order. Paragraph (3) defines the term "relative" to mean a parent, other ancestor, brother, sister, uncle, or aunt, or one who has been lawful custodian at some prior time.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised statute makes one change that constitutes a substantive change to current District law.

The revised definition of "lawful custodian" includes any person who is authorized to have custody over a child under District law. Under the current D.C. Code definition, "lawful custodian" only includes persons who have custody "by an order of the Superior Court of the District of Columbia or a court of competent jurisdiction of any state, or a person designated by the lawful custodian temporarily to care for the child."[1] Under the plain language of the current definition, parents who have lawful custody of their children other than pursuant to a court order[2] are not "lawful custodians," so taking a child from such a parent would not constitute parental kidnapping under current law. There is no case law on point. By contrast, under the revised definition of "lawful custodian," any parent who has custodial rights under District law constitutes is included in the definition of "lawful custodian." This change improves eliminates a gap in liability and improves the proportionality of the revised offense.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

The revised definition section does not define the term "District." Omitting this term is not intended to change current District law. The term "District" as used in this subchapter is still intended to refer to the District of Columbia.

[1] D.C. Code § 16-1021(3).
[2] For example, children with their birth parents who have not been through court proceedings.

RCC § 16-1022. Parental Kidnapping.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the parental kidnapping offense, and replaces the current parental kidnapping statute in the D.C. Code. The offense criminalizes taking, concealing, or detaining a child who has another lawful custodian, with intent to prevent a lawful custodian from exercising rights to custody. The offense only applies to relatives of the child or persons acting at the direction of a relative of the child. The revised statute also incorporates statutes that define relevant terms; establish defenses to prosecution; specify that the offense is continuous; specify payment of expenses; specify prosecutorial authority; and establish procedures for expungement. This revised parental kidnapping statute replaces current D.C. Code §§ 16-1022, 1024, and 1025; and portions of D.C. Code § 16-1023 relating to defenses, parental kidnapping as a continuous offense, and reimbursement of expenses.

Subsection (a) specifies the elements of first degree parental kidnapping. Paragraph (a)(1) requires that the actor must have committed fourth degree parental kidnapping. Paragraph (a)(2) requires that the actor knowingly takes, conceals, or detains the child outside of the District for more than 24 hours. This paragraph specifies that a "knowingly" culpable mental state applies, a term defined at RCC § 22E-206 to mean that the actor must have been practically certain that he would take, conceal, or detain the child outside of the District for more than 24 hours. Paragraph (a)(3) requires that the child was, in fact, outside the custody of the lawful custodian for more than 30 days. The term "in fact" is defined in RCC § 22E-207, and specifies that there is no culpable mental state required as to whether the child was outside of the custody of a lawful custodian for more than 30 days.

Subsection (b) specifies the elements of second degree parental kidnapping. Paragraph (b)(1) requires that the actor must have committed fourth degree parental kidnapping. Paragraph (b)(2) requires that the actor knowingly takes, conceals, or detains the child outside of the District for more than 24 hours. This paragraph specifies that a "knowingly" culpable mental state applies, a term defined at RCC § 22E-206 to mean that the actor must have been practically certain that he would take, conceal, or detain the child outside of the District for more than 24 hours. Paragraph (b)(3) requires that the actor did not release the child without injury in a safe place prior to arrest. This element is satisfied if the child is not released at all prior to arrest, or if the child is released prior to arrest in a place that creates a risk of harm or injury.

Subsection (c) specifies the elements of third degree parental kidnapping. Paragraph (c)(1) requires that the actor must have committed fourth degree parental kidnapping. Paragraph (c)(2) requires that the actor knowingly takes, conceals, or detains the child outside of the District for more than 24 hours. This paragraph also specifies that a "knowingly" culpable mental state applies, a term defined at RCC § 22E-206 to mean that the actor must have been practically certain that he would take, conceal, or detain the child outside of the District.

Subsection (d) specifies the elements of fourth degree parental kidnapping. Paragraph (d)(1) requires that the actor knowingly takes, conceals, or detains a person who has another lawful custodian. The term "lawful custodian" is defined D.C. Code § 16-

1021. Paragraph (d)(1) specifies a culpable mental state of "knowledge," a term defined in RCC § 22E-206 to mean the actor must be practically certainty that he would take, conceal, or detain a person. The actor must also be practically certain the person has another lawful custodian.

Paragraph (d)(2) requires that the actor takes, conceals, or detains a person with intent to prevent a lawful custodian from exercising rights to custody of the child. "Intent" is a term defined in RCC § 22E-206 that here means that the actor was practically certain that he would prevent a lawful custodian from exercising rights to custody of the child. Per RCC § 22E-205, the object of the phrase "with intent to" is not an objective element that requires separate proof—only the actor's culpable mental state must be proven regarding the object of this phrase. It is not necessary to prove that the actor actually interfered with another lawful custodian's right to custody, only that the actor believed to a practical certainty that he would interfere with a right to custody. A right to custody need not be permanent; intent to interfere with limited rights to custody or temporary visitation rights would suffice under this subparagraph.

Paragraph (d)(3) requires that the person taken, concealed, or detained, in fact, is under the age of 16. The term "in fact" is defined in RCC § 22E-207, and specifies that there is no culpable mental state as to the person's age.

Paragraph (d)(4) requires that the actor is a relative of the child, or a person who believes he or she is acting pursuant to direction of a relative of the child. This element may be satisfied even if the actor unreasonably believes that he or she is acting that direction of a relative. Per the rule of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the term "in fact" in paragraph (d)(4) also applies to this paragraph. There is no culpable mental state required as to whether the actor is a relative of the child, or person who believes he or she is acting pursuant to direction of a relative of the child.[1]

The term "in fact" is defined in RCC § 22E-207, and specifies that there is no culpable mental state as to whether the actor is a relative of the child, or believes he or she is acting pursuant to direction of a relative.

Subsection (e) establishes three exclusions to liability. Paragraph (e)(1) establishes that a parent who reasonably believes[2] he or she is fleeing from imminent physical harm to the parent is not liable under this section. Reasonableness is an objective standard that must take into account certain characteristics of the actor but not others.[3] Paragraph (e)(2)

[1] Although no culpable mental state as defined in RCC § 22E-205 is required, paragraph (d)(4) still requires that the actor subjectively believed that he or she was acting at the direction of a relative.

[2] Any circumstance element or result element that is the object of the phrase "reasonably believes" need not be proven to actually exist.

[3] See, e.g., Model Penal Code § 2.02 cmt. at 241-42 (1985) (citations omitted). "…these questions are asked not in terms of what the actor's perceptions actually were, but in terms of an objective view of the situation as it actually existed. … The standard for ultimate judgement invites consideration of the 'care that a reasonable person would observe in the actor's situation.' There is an inevitable ambiguity in 'situation.' If the actor were blind or if he had just suffered a blow or experienced a heart attack, these would certainly be facts to be considered in a judgment involving criminal liability, as they would be under traditional law. But the heredity, intelligence or temperament of the actor would not be held material in judging negligence, and could not be without depriving the criterion of all of its objectivity. The Code is not intended to displace discriminations of this kind, but rather to leave the issue to the courts."

establishes that an actor is not liable under this section if the other parent effectively consented to the act constituting the offense. The term "effective consent" is defined in RCC § 22E-701, and requires that the consent was obtained other than by deception or coercive threat. Paragraph (e)(3) establishes that an actor is not liable under this section if he or she acted to protect the child from imminent physical harm.

Subsection (f) establishes a defense to prosecution under this section. Under paragraph (f)(1), the actor may file a petition that states that at the time the act was done, a failure to do the act would have resulted in a clear and present danger to the health, safety, or welfare of the child; and seeks to establish custody, to transfer custody, or to revise or to clarify an existing custody order. If the actor files a petition with the Superior Court of the District of Columbia within 5 business days of the acts constituting the offense, a court finding that at the time the act was done, a failure to do the act would have resulted in a clear and present danger to the health, safety, or welfare of the child shall be a defense to prosecution under this section.

Subsection (g) specifies that parental kidnapping is a continuous offense that continues long as the child is concealed, detained, or otherwise unlawfully physically removed from the lawful custodian.

Subsection (h) specifies relevant penalties for parental kidnapping. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.] Paragraph (h)(5) specifies that expenses incurred by the District in returning the child shall be reimbursed to the District by any person convicted of a violation of this section, and reasonable costs incurred by the lawful custodian or child victim shall be reimbursed to the lawful custodian. Paragraph (h)(6) specifies that notwithstanding the authorized maximum penalties, first and second degree parental kidnapping are designated as felonies[4] for purposes of D.C. Code 23-563.[5]

Subsection (i) cross references terms defined elsewhere in the subchapter, and in the RCC.

Subsection (j) specifies that that the general provisions of Chapters 1 through 6 of Subtitle I of Title 22 of the D.C. Code apply to this offense.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised parental kidnapping statute makes three substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised parental kidnapping offense no longer provides liability for a parent concealing the child from another parent, absent additional intent. Under the current statute, parental kidnapping includes a parent concealing a child from the child's other parent, even if there is no additional intent to interfere with the other parent's custodial rights. The plain language would appear to criminalize a parent with custody at a given time refusing to give the child's whereabouts to another parent who does not have custody

[4] Designating the parental kidnapping offense as a felony is an exception to the general definition of "felony" under RCC 22E-701, which defines "felony" as "an offense punishable by a term of imprisonment that is more than one year" or "in other jurisdictions, an offense punishable by death."

[5] D.C. Code § 23-563 states that a warrant or summons for a felony under § 16-1022 issued by the Superior Court of the District of Columbia may be served at any place within the jurisdiction of the United States.

at that time. There is no case law on point. By contrast, the revised parental kidnapping statute requires that the actor had intent to interfere with a lawful custodian's custodial rights. This change improves the proportionality of the revised offense.

Second, the revised definition of "lawful custodian" under D.C. Code § 16-1021 includes any parent who is authorized to have custody over a child under District law. Under the current definition, "lawful custodian" only includes persons who have custody "by an order of the Superior Court of the District of Columbia or a court of competent jurisdiction of any state, or a person designated by the lawful custodian temporarily to care for the child."[6] Under the plain language of the current definition, parents who have lawful custody of their children other than pursuant to a court order[7] are not "lawful custodians," so taking a child from such a parent would not constitute parental kidnapping under current law. There is no case law on point. By contrast, under the revised definition of "lawful custodian," taking a child from any parent who has custodial rights under District law constitutes parental kidnapping, even if the custodial rights are not pursuant to a court order. This change improves eliminates a gap in liability and improves the proportionality of the revised offense.

Third, the revised parental kidnapping statute's penalty grades that are predicated on taking, concealing, or detaining a person outside of the District require that the actor did so for more than 24 hours. Under current law, penalty gradations based on taking, concealing, or detaining a child outside of the District does not include any minimum time duration.[8] By contrast, first, second, and third degree parental kidnapping require that the person was taken, concealed, or detained outside of the District for more than 24 hours. This revision prevents disproportionately severe penalties when an actor briefly takes a child over the border. This change improves the proportionality of the revised offense.

Beyond these three substantive changes to current District law, nine other aspects of the revised parental kidnapping statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised statute requires that the actor "knowingly" takes, conceals, or detains the complainant. The current parental kidnapping statute does not specify a culpable mental state. The current parental kidnapping statute references acting "with the intent to prevent a lawful custodian from exercising rights to custody," "with intent to harbor, secrete, detain, or conceal the child" or "with intent to deprive the other person of the right of limited custody or visitation,"[9] but it is not clear whether these culpable mental states apply to other elements of the offense, and the phrases "with intent" and "with the intent" are not defined in the statute. There is no case law on point. Resolving this ambiguity, the revised parental kidnapping statute specifies that a "knowingly" culpable mental state applies to the element of taking, concealing, or detaining the complainant. Applying a knowledge requirement to statutory elements that distinguish innocent from

[6] D.C. Code § 16-1021 (3).
[7] For example, children with their birth parents who have not been through court proceedings.
[8] D.C. Code § 16-1024.
[9] D.C. Code § 16-1022.

criminal behavior is a well-established practice in American jurisprudence.[10] Specifying a culpable mental state for the offense improves the clarity of the revised offense and is consistent with requirements for most other offenses.

Second, the revised statute does not explicitly include taking a child outside of the District for the purpose of depriving a lawful custodian of physical custody of the child after having been served with process in an action affecting the family but prior to the issuance of a temporary or final order determining custody rights. It is unclear whether this prong of parental kidnapping includes taking a child who does not yet have another lawful custodian, in expectation that another person may obtain custodial rights to the child, or whether this prong of the current statute requires that the child has another "lawful custodian" who already has custodial rights. There is no DCCA case law on point. Resolving this ambiguity, the revised parental kidnapping offense requires that the actor intended to interfere with a lawful custodian's pre-existing right to custody. This change improves the clarity of the revised offense.

Third, the revised statute specifies that the actor must take the child "to another location." The current statute merely states that the actor must "take" a child, but does not define the term, and there is no relevant DCCA case law. Resolving this ambiguity, the revised statute specifies that the child must be moved to a different location. Merely seizing a child without any movement is insufficient under the revised statute.[11] This change improves the clarity of the revised offense.

Fourth, the revised statute specifies that there is no culpable mental state as to the age of the complainant. The current statute requires that the complaining witness is a "child," which is defined as a "person under the age 16 years of age."[12] The current statute does not specify whether the actor must be aware that the complainant is under 16 years of age. There is no DCCA case law on point. Resolving this ambiguity, the revised statute specifies that there is no culpable mental state requirement as to the age of the complainant. This change improves the clarity of the revised offense.

Fifth, the offense requires that the actor is either a relative or a person who believes he or she is acting pursuant to directions of a relative. The current statute requires that the actor is either a relative of the complainant, or is acting pursuant to directions of a relative. However, the current statute does not specify whether the offense includes a person who incorrectly believes he or she is acting at the direction of a relative. There is no DCCA case law on point. Resolving this ambiguity, the revised statute requires that the actor believed he or she was acting at the direction of a relative. This change improves the clarity of the revised offense.

Sixth, the exclusion to liability under paragraph (e)(2) requires that the other parent gave effective consent to the conduct constituting the offense. Under current law, it is a

---

[10] See Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2009 (2015) ("[O]ur cases have explained that a defendant generally must 'know the facts that make his conduct fit the definition of the offense,' even if he does not know that those facts give rise to a crime. (Internal citation omitted)")

[11] Attempt liability may still apply in these cases, provided the requirements for attempt liability under RCC § 22E-301 are satisfied.

[12] D.C. Code § 16-1021 (1).

defense to prosecution that the action constituting the offense was "consented to by the other parent[.]"[13] The term "consent" is not defined in the statute, and there is no relevant DCCA case law. It is unclear if the defense would apply if the consent were induced by physical force, coercive threats, or deception. Resolving this ambiguity, the revised statute provides the defense only if the other parent gave "effective consent," as defined in RCC § 22E-701[14] to the conduct constituting the offense. This requires that the consent was not obtained by physical force, coercive threat, or deception. This change improves the clarity and proportionality of the revised statute.

Seventh, the jurisdiction provision in current D.C. Code § 16-1023 (h) is omitted. The current statute states that "Any violation of this subchapter is punishable in the District, whether the intent to commit the offense is formed within or without the District, if the child was a resident of the District, present in the District at the time of the taking, or is later found in the District." This language apparently is intended to ensure that District courts have jurisdiction over parental kidnappings that do not entirely occur within the District of Columbia. However, the DCCA has generally held that District courts have jurisdiction over alleged offenses if "one of several constituent elements to the complete offense" occurs within the District, "even though the remaining elements occurred outside of the District."[15] Consequently, although the DCCA has not applied this rule to parental kidnapping cases, it appears that even without any statutory language in the revised statute on jurisdiction District courts would have jurisdiction over any case in which a child was present in the District at the time of the taking, or was later found in the District. It is unclear, however, whether the current jurisdiction provision would extend jurisdiction to cases where the child is a District resident, but none of the acts constituting the offense occurs within the District. There is no relevant DCCA case law. Resolving this ambiguity, the revised statute applies jurisdictional principles the same as for other crimes, eliminating the offense-specific jurisdiction provision. This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised offense.

Eighth, the revised statute specifies that the general provisions of Chapters 1 through 6 of Subtitle I of Title 22 of the D.C. Code apply to this offense. The current D.C. Code generally does not codify consistent definitions, rules of liability, rules of interpretation, or general defenses. In contrast, Subtitle I of Title 22E sets forth broadly applicable rules and definitions relating to the basic requirements of criminal liability, inchoate liability, justification defenses, and penalty enhancements. Application of these general provisions to the parental kidnaping offense may change District law in numerous ways. For more in depth discussion of these general provisions, see commentary accompanying statutory provisions in Subtitle I of Title 22E. These changes improve the clarity, completeness, and proportionality of the revised offense.

---

[13] D.C. Code § 16-1023 (a)(4).

[14] "Effective consent means consent other than consent induced by physical force, a coercive threat, or deception."

[15] United States v. Baish, 460 A.2d 38, 40–41 (D.C. 1983), abrogated on other grounds by Carrell v. United States, 80 A.3d 163 (D.C. 2013).

Ninth, the revised statute does not specifically include liability for acting as an aider and abettor, conspirator, or accessory to any of the conduct proscribed by the offense. The current statute prohibits "Act[ing] as an aider and abettor, conspirator, or accessory to any of the actions forbidden by this section[.]"[16] There is no case law on point. By contrast, under the revised parental kidnapping statute, accessory and conspiracy liability for parental kidnapping is subject to the RCC's general accomplice liability[17] and conspiracy[18] statutes. The RCC's general accomplice and conspiracy statutes detail the culpable mental state and other requirements of accomplice and conspiracy liability in a manner consistent with other criminal offenses. To the extent that the RCC's general conspiracy and accomplice provisions differ from the law on conspiracy and accomplice liability as applied to the current parental kidnapping statute,[19] relying on the RCC's general provisions may constitute a change in current law.[20] This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised offense.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

First, the revised parental kidnapping statute specifically refers to an actor who "takes, conceals, or detains" a child, but does not specifically include "abducting," "harboring," or "secreting" a child. However, omitting these terms is not intended to change current District law. The term "taking," "detaining," and "concealing" cover all of the conduct covered by "abducting" or "secreting." Although "harboring" may be broader and include conduct that does not constituting "taking," "detaining," or "concealing," omitting this term does not change current District law. The current penalty provision for parental kidnapping determines penalties based on whether the actor "takes," "detains," or "conceals" a child inside or outside the District[21] and there is no penalty specified for merely "harboring" a child under the current statute. Omitting the word "harboring" does not change current District law, and improves the clarity of the revised offense.

Second, the revised statute omits several versions of the offense specified under current law.[22] Omitting these specific versions of parental kidnapping is not intended to [16] D.C. Code § 16-1022 (b)(6).

[17] RCC § 22E-210.
[18] RCC § 22E-303.
[19] [The Commission plans to address liability for conduct constituting being an accessory after the fact with recommendations for reform to the District's obstruction of justice statutes.]
[20] For discussion on the RCC conspiracy statute's possible changes to current District law, see First Draft of Report #12, Definition of Criminal Conspiracy. For discussion on the RCC's accomplice liability statute's possible changes to current District law, see First Draft of Report #22, Accomplice Liability and Related Provisions.
[21] D.C. Code § 16-1024.
[22] The current statute specifically criminalizes: 1) abducting, taking, or carrying away a child from a person with whom the relative has joint custody pursuant to an order, judgment, or decree of any court, with the intent to prevent a lawful custodian from exercising rights to custody to the child; 2) having obtained physical control of a child for a limited period of time in the exercise of the right to visit with or to be visited by the child or the right of limited custody of the child, pursuant to an order, judgment, or decree of any court, which grants custody of the child to another or jointly with the relative, with intent to harbor, secrete, detain, or conceal the child or to deprive a lawful custodian of the physical custody of the child, change current District law. Each of these versions of parental kidnapping still satisfies the elements of the offense specified in the revised statute. These versions of parental kidnapping all require taking, concealing, or detaining a child, with intent to interfere with a lawful custodian's rights to custody over the child. Omitting these versions of parental kidnapping improves the clarity of the revised statute.

keep the child for more than 48 hours after a lawful custodian demands that the child be returned or makes all reasonable efforts to communicate a demand for the child's return; 3) Having custody of a child pursuant to an order, judgment, or decree of any court, which grants another person limited rights to custody of the child or the right to visit with or to be visited by the child, conceal, harbor, secrete, or detain the child with intent to deprive the other person of the right of limited custody or visitation; 4) Concealing, harboring, secreting, or detaining the child knowing that physical custody of the child was obtained or retained by another in violation of this subsection with the intent to prevent a lawful custodian from exercising rights to custody to the child; and 5) After issuance of a temporary or final order specifying joint custody rights, taking or enticing a child from the other joint custodian in violation of the custody order.

RCC § 16-1023. Protective Custody and Return of Child.

Explanatory Note. This section specifies when a law enforcement officer may take a child into protective custody, and establishes a duty to return a child to a lawful custodian or other entity authorized by law. This section replaces portions of D.C. Code § 16-1023 relating to law enforcement officers' authority to take a child into protective custody, and duty to return the child.

Subsection (a) specifies that a law enforcement officer may take a child into protective custody when the officer reasonably believes that a person has committed an offense under this subchapter, and unlawfully will flee the District with the child.

Subsection (b) specifies that a law enforcement officer shall return a child who has been detained or conceals to the child's lawful custodian or place the child in custody with another entity authorized by law.

Subsection (c) cross references terms defined elsewhere in the RCC.

Relation to Current District Law. This section does not change current District law. This statute is taken verbatim from current D.C. Code § 16-1023 (d) and (e).

RCC § 16-1024. Expungement of Parental Kidnapping Conviction.

Explanatory Note. This section specifies procedures for expunging record of convictions for parental kidnapping. This section replaces current D.C. Code § 16-1026.

This section provides that a person convicted of parental kidnapping under D.C. Code § 16-1022 may have all records of the conviction expunged. A person who commits parental kidnapping with respect to his or her own child may apply for expungement when the person's youngest child reaches the age of 18, provided that the person has no more than one conviction for parental kidnapping. A person who commits parental kidnapping with respect to a person who is not his or her child may apply for expungement five years after the conviction, or after the child has reached 18 years of age, whichever occurs later, provided that the person has no more than one conviction for parental kidnapping.

Relation to Current District Law. This section does not change current District law. This statute is taken verbatim from current D.C. Code § 16-1026.

RCC § 23-586. Failure to Appear after Release on Citation or Bench Warrant Bond.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the failure to appear after release on citation or bench warrant bond offense for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The offense prohibits knowingly failing to appear for a hearing after being released on citation and ordered to appear under D.C. Code § 23-584. It replaces subsection (b) of D.C. Code § 23-585, failure to appear.

Subsection (a) specifies the elements of first degree failure to appear after release on citation or bench warrant bond.

Paragraph (a)(1) requires that the person was required to appear before a judicial officer on a specified date and time for a felony offense. The term "judicial officer" is a defined term under D.C. Code § 23-501.[1] The term "appear" is not defined and should be construed broadly to include all types of appearances, including both in-person and virtual hearings. The term "knows" is defined in RCC § 22E-206 and here requires that the person is practically certain that they are required by a citation or by a bench warrant to appear at a specific date and time.[2] Under RCC § 22E-208(d), knowledge may be imputed if the person is reckless as to whether a circumstance exists and, with the purpose of avoiding criminal liability, avoids confirming or fails to investigate whether the circumstance exists. Applied here, knowledge may be imputed when a person consciously disregards a substantial risk that that they are required to appear before a judicial officer on a specified date and time, and to avoid liability avoids confirming or fails to investigate whether they are required to appear at a specified date and time.[3] The term "in fact" indicates that the accused is strictly liable with respect to whether a citation was issued under D.C. Code § 23-584,[4] which authorizes law enforcement officers to release arrestees to appear before a judge at a later date (with or without conditions[5]), or a bond was posted pursuant to a Superior Court bench warrant. The term "in fact" also indicates that the accused is strictly liable with respect to whether the offense for which they were cited is a felony, as defined in RCC § 22E-701.[6]

Paragraph (a)(2) requires that the person fail to appear at the time specified in the court's order or to remain until excused by a judicial officer. The term "appear" has the same meaning as in paragraph (a)(1). Paragraph (a)(2) specifies that the person must act

---

[1] D.C Code § 23-501(1) ("The term 'judicial officer' means a judge of the Superior Court of the District of Columbia or of the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, or a United States commissioner or magistrate for the District of Columbia.").

[2] Consider, for example, a person who is unable to read or understand the citation due to illiteracy or a language barrier. That person may not be practically certain that they were required to appear.

[3] Consider, for example, a person who is handed a citation to appear and angrily tears it up and throws it in the garbage before reading the date. Knowledge that they were required to appear on the specified date and time may be imputed even though they were not practically certain of it.

[4] RCC § 22E-207.

[5] Failure to abide by a condition of release is not a criminal offense but it does subject a person to being taken into custody and presented before a judicial officer. D.C Code § 23-585(a).

[6] The offense for which the person is cited may differ from the offense that is eventually charged by a prosecutor. First degree liability is dependent upon the offense the law enforcement officer indicated on the citation. It is not a defense that there was no probable cause for the felony offense.

knowingly, a term defined in RCC § 22E-206, which here means that the person must be practically certain that they failed to appear or remain as required.[7] Determining whether a failure to appear is knowing or inadvertent is a fact-sensitive inquiry.[8] Under RCC § 22E-203, the person's conduct must be voluntary.[9]

Subsection (b) specifies the elements of second degree failure to appear after release on citation or bench warrant bond. The elements are identical to the elements of first degree, except that first degree is limited to a felony offense and second degree applies more broadly to either a felony or misdemeanor.

Subsection (c) provides two defenses to liability. First, subsection (c)(1) provides a defense for when a person has the effective consent of a releasing official,[10] prosecutor,[11] or judicial officer[12] to miss the hearing or arrive at a later time. "Effective consent" is a defined term and excludes consent that was obtained by the application of physical force, an explicit or implicit coercive threat, or deception.[13] "Consent" is also defined in RCC

---

[7] Consider, for example, a person who misunderstands when and where they are to appear because the courthouse is closed due to inclement weather or because the hearing is moved to another courtroom. The evidence must show beyond a reasonable doubt that the person was practically certain or deliberately ignorant as to when and where they needed to appear. RCC §§ 22E-206; 22E-208(d). See, e.g., Smith v. United States, 583 A.2d 975, 979 (D.C. 1990); Bolan v. United States, 587 A.2d 458, 460 (D.C. App. 1991) (reversing a conviction on sufficiency grounds where a defendant was not notified of a courtroom change).

[8] See Laniyan v. United States, 226 A.3d 1146, 1150 (D.C. 2020) (D.C. May 14, 2020) (explaining that the factfinder must give sufficient consideration to the defendant's personal circumstances); see also Evans v. United States, 133 A.3d 988, 993 (D.C. App. 2016) (explaining, "The evidence of appellant's chronic or recurring memory problems also was evidence that, if credited by the trial judge, might be deemed relevant to the court's assessment of whether appellant's failure to appear was willful. As another example, appellant testified that he 'had so much stuff going on' while his underlying marijuana-possession case was pending, including financial difficulties and housing challenges—circumstances that the trial court, if it credits appellant's testimony, may also deem relevant on the issue of willfulness.").

[9] A person does not commit failure to appear after release on citation if the absence was not subject to the person's control. For example, a person does not commit an offense if they are incarcerated, hospitalized, stranded, or unable to connect to a virtual hearing due a technological problem. See, e.g., Foster v. United States, 699 A.2d 1113, 1115 (D.C. App. 1997) (reversing a conviction under a similar statute where the defendant's employer unexpectedly canceled his return trip to the District); see also Fearwell v. U.S., 886 A.2d 95, 101 (D.C. 2005) (holding "[I]f there is evidence—however weak—to support it, a defendant is entitled to a requested instruction that he has presented evidence of special circumstances which prevented him from appearing in court on the scheduled date and time, and that if the jury credits that evidence, this may create a reasonable doubt concerning whether the government has proven willfulness beyond a reasonable doubt."). Likewise a person does not commit an offense if they are detained by a court security officer while being searched, temporarily removed from the courthouse for a fire drill, or made to wait outside a courtroom until a non-public hearing concludes.

[10] The term "releasing official" is defined in subparagraph (e)(2)(B). Consider, for example, an officer who issues a citation and decides to withdraw it (e.g., to correct an erroneous date or to dismiss the accusation based on newly discovered evidence). The officer retrieves the citation from the accused and tells her that she is excused from appearing on the date specified. The arrestee has the effective consent of a releasing official to not appear.

[11] Consider, for example, a prosecutor who confers with defense counsel before the hearing date and notifies defense counsel that no charges will be filed (i.e. the case will be "no papered") and excuses the accused from appearing in court. The arrestee has the effective consent of a prosecutor to not appear.

[12] Consider, for example, a presiding criminal judge who reschedules all citation arrest hearings to accommodate social distancing during a global health emergency. The arrestee has the effective consent of a judicial officer to not appear.

[13] RCC § 22E-701.

§ 22E-701. The term "in fact" indicates that the accused is strictly liable with respect to whether effective consent was given.[14] It is not a defense that the person mistakenly believed that they were excused when actually they were not excused.[15]

Subsection (c)(2) provides a defense when the actor, in fact, makes good faith, reasonable efforts to appear or remain for the hearing. The term "in fact" indicates that the accused is strictly liable with respect to whether their conduct constituted "good faith, reasonable efforts."[16]

Subsection (d) specifies the penalties for each gradation of the revised offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.]

Subsection (e) cross-references applicable definitions in the RCC and the D.C. Code.

Subsection (f) specifies that Chapters 1 – 6 the RCC's General Part apply to this Title 23 offense.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised failure to appear after release on citation statute clearly changes current District law in three main ways.

First, the revised statute imposes a single penalty class for all misdemeanor offenses. Current D.C. Code § 23-585(b)(1), concerning misdemeanors, imposes a maximum penalty of "not more than the maximum provided for the offense for which such citation was issued." In contrast, the revised code specifies a penalty class for every offense, including the failure to appear offenses. This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Second, the revised statute allows for higher fines for organizational defendants who violate the statute. Current D.C. Code § 23-585(b)(3) states that: "For the purposes of this section, section 101 of the Criminal Fine Proportionality Amendment Act of 2012, effective June 11, 2013 (D.C Law 19-317; D.C. Official Code § 22-357.01), shall not apply." While the main portion (subsection (b)) of section 101 of the Criminal Fine Proportionality Amendment Act of 2012 sets fines for certain classes of offenses, subsection (c) of Section 101 provides that organizational defendants are subject to heightened (double) fines. Consequently, D.C. Code § 23-585(b)(3) not only exempts the statute from the standard fine provisions applicable to most other current D.C. Code offenses, but also exempts organizational defendants from the heightened fine provisions otherwise applicable to most current D.C. Code offenses. In contrast, the revised code does not specifically exclude failure to appear violations from the higher fines applicable to organizational defendants under RCC § 22E-604(b). There is no clear rationale for treating organizational defendants differently for this particular offense. This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised statutes.

[14] RCC § 22E-207.
[15] Consider, for example, a person who mistakenly believes they may leave the courtroom temporarily to use the bathroom or to smoke a cigarette. Liability depends entirely on the judge's courtroom policy.
[16] RCC § 22E-207.

Third, the revised statute specifies that the general provisions of Chapters 1 through 6 of Subtitle I of Title 22E of the D.C. Code apply to this offense. The current D.C. Code generally does not codify consistent definitions, rules of liability, rules of interpretation, or general defenses. In contrast, Subtitle I of Title 22E sets forth broadly applicable rules and definitions relating to the basic requirements of criminal liability, inchoate liability, justification defenses, and penalty enhancements. Application of these general provisions to the revised offense may change District law in numerous ways. For more in-depth discussion of these general provisions, see commentary accompanying statutory provisions in Subtitle I of Title 22E. These changes improve the clarity, consistency, completeness, and proportionality of the revised offense.

Beyond these three changes to current District law, two other aspects of the revised statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised statute applies standardized definitions for the culpable mental states required for criminal liability. Current D.C. Code § 23-585(b) requires that the accused act willfully. Although the term "willfully" is not defined in the statute, the District of Columbia Court of Appeals ("DCCA") has explained that, in a closely related statute,[17] "willful" means "knowing, intentional, and deliberate, rather than inadvertent or accidental," but does not mean "done with a bad purpose," as it might in other statutes.[18] To resolve this ambiguity, the revised statute uses the RCC's general provisions that define "knowingly"[19] and "in fact,"[20] applying the former to the actor's failure to appear as required and the latter to the nature of the citation. In addition, under RCC § 22E-208(d), knowledge may be imputed when a person consciously disregards a substantial risk that that they are required to appear before a judicial officer on a specified date and time, and, to avoid liability, avoids confirming or fails to investigate whether they are required to appear at a specified date and time. Use of the culpable mental state of "knows" also is consistent with the defense in subsection (c)(2) for making good faith, reasonable efforts to appear. This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised statutes.

Second, the revised statute includes a defense for when, in fact, the actor makes reasonable, good faith efforts to appear or remain at the hearing. Current D.C. Code § 23-585(b) is silent as to whether a person is "willful" or is otherwise free from liability when, despite their good faith, reasonable efforts to be present they do not do so. There is no case law on point. To resolve this ambiguity, the revised statute provides a defense for making good faith, reasonable efforts to appear or remain. Notably, this defense is unnecessary where the failure to appear or remain is simply involuntary.[21] This change is consistent [17] D.C. Code § 23-1327, also proscribing failure to appear.

[18] Trice v. United States, 525 A.2d 176, 181 (D.C. 1987); see also Patton v. U. S., 326 A.2d 818, 820 (D.C. App. 1974).
[19] RCC § 22E-206.
[20] RCC § 22E-207.
[21] RCC § 22E-203 ("No person may be convicted of an offense unless the person voluntarily commits the conduct element required for that offense…When a person's omission provides the basis for liability, a person voluntarily commits the conduct element of an offense when: (A) The person has the physical with the requirement of only knowledge, rather than purpose, in subsections (a)(2) and (b)(2) of the revised statute. This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised statutes.

Third, the revised statute includes a defense where the accused acts with the effective consent[22] of a releasing official, prosecutor, or judicial officer. Current D.C. Code § 23-585(b) is silent as to whether a person may be excused from appearing for a hearing with the consent of a releasing official,[23] prosecutor,[24] or judicial officer.[25] The revised statute makes clear that each of these actors is empowered to excuse the accused from appearing. This change improves the clarity and proportionality of the revised offense.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

The revised statute is severed from D.C. Code § 23-585 and given its own section in the revised code. This change clarifies that the defense, penalties, and definitions do not apply to subsection (a) of current D.C. Code § 23-585, which is not being revised at this time. This change improves the clarity and logical organization of the revised statutes.

---

capacity to perform the required legal duty; or (B) The failure to act is otherwise subject to the person's control.").

[22] "Effective consent" is defined in RCC § 22E-701 to exclude consent obtained by means other than the application of physical force, an explicit or implicit coercive threat, or deception.

[23] Consider, for example, an officer who issues a citation and decides to withdraw it (e.g., to correct an erroneous date or to dismiss the accusation based on newly discovered evidence). The officer retrieves the citation from the accused and tells them that they are excused from appearing on the date specified. The arrestee has the effective consent of a releasing official to not appear.

[24] Consider, for example, a prosecutor who confers with defense counsel before the hearing date and notifies defense counsel that no charges will be filed (i.e. the case will be "no papered") and excuses the accused from appearing in court. The arrestee has the effective consent of a prosecutor to not appear.

[25] Consider, for example, the presiding criminal judge who reschedules all citation arrest hearings to accommodate social distancing during a global health emergency. The arrestee has the effective consent of a judicial officer to not appear.

RCC § 23-1327. Failure to Appear in Violation of a Court Order.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the failure to appear in violation of a court order offense for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The offense prohibits knowingly failing to appear for a hearing after being ordered to appear by a judge. It replaces D.C. Code § 23-1327, Penalties for failure to appear.

Subsection (a) specifies the elements of first degree failure to appear in violation of a court order.

Paragraph (a)(1) requires that the person was required to appear for a hearing before a judicial officer on a specified date and time by a court order that is issued under D.C. Code § 23-584 for a felony. The term "judicial officer" is a defined term under D.C. Code § 23-1331.[1] The term "appear" is not defined and should be construed broadly to include in-person and virtual hearings. The term "court order" includes any judicial directive, oral or written. Common examples include a summons to appear signed by a judge, a pretrial release order that specifies a hearing date and requires the defendant's presence, a scheduling order, and oral directive to return after a recess. A single missed appearance constitutes a single offense, even if the underlying case involved multiple charges.[2] Paragraph (a)(1) also requires that the person knows they are subject to a court order to appear before a judicial officer. The term "knows" is defined in RCC § 22E-206 and here requires that the person is practically certain that they are required to appear at a specific date and time.[3] Under RCC § 22E-208(d), knowledge may be imputed if the person is reckless as to whether a circumstance exists and, with the purpose of avoiding criminal liability, avoids confirming or fails to investigate whether the circumstance exists. Applied here, knowledge may be imputed when a person consciously disregards a substantial risk that that they are required to appear before a judicial officer on a specified date and time, and to avoid liability avoids confirming or fails to investigate whether they are required to appear at a specified date and time.[4]

Subparagraphs (a)(1)(A) and (a)(1)(B) specify two types of hearings that will trigger first degree liability. Under (a)(1)(A), first degree liability attaches when the person is scheduled to appear as a defendant in a felony case. The term "felony" is defined in RCC § 22E-701. A conviction for the underlying offense is not required.[5] Under (a)(1)(B), first degree liability attaches when the person is scheduled to be sentenced. This does not include hearings in which sentencing is merely a possibility, e.g., a status hearing at which the parties expect to resolve a case short of trial by guilty plea and proceed to sentencing,

[1] D.C Code § 23-1331(1) ("The term 'judicial officer' means, unless otherwise indicated, any person or court in the District of Columbia authorized pursuant to section 3041 of Title 18, United States Code, or the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, to bail or otherwise release a person before trial or sentencing or pending appeal in a court of the United States, and any judge of the Superior Court.").
[2] Lennon v. United States, 736 A.2d 208, 210 (D.C. App. 1999).
[3] Consider, for example, a person who is unable to read or understand the citation due to illiteracy or a language barrier. That person may not be practically certain that they were required to appear.
[4] Consider, for example, a person who is handed a scheduling order and angrily tears it up and throws it in the garbage before reading the date. That person may be said to know that they were required to appear on the specified date even though they were not practically certain of it.
[5] Williams v. U. S., 331 A.2d 341, 342 (D.C. App. 1975).

a trial date on which the parties expect to conclude quickly and proceed to sentencing (if applicable), a probation revocation hearing during which the court may resentence, a status hearing after an appellate court has remanded for resentencing. The term "in fact" indicates that the accused is strictly liable with respect to whether the hearing was one of those two types.

Paragraph (a)(2) requires that the person fail to appear[6] at the time specified in the court's order[7] or to remain until excused by a judicial officer.[8] The term "appear" has the same meaning as in paragraph (a)(1). Paragraph (a)(2) specifies that the person must act knowingly, a term defined in RCC § 22E-206, which here means the person must be practically certain that they failed to appear or remain as required.[9] Determining whether a failure to appear is knowing or inadvertent is a fact-sensitive inquiry.[10] Under RCC § 22E-203, the person's conduct must be voluntary.[11]

Subsection (b) specifies the elements of second degree failure to appear in violation of a court order. The elements are identical to the elements of first degree, except for the type of hearing that will trigger liability. Subparagraphs (b)(1)(A) and (b)(1)(B) specify two types of hearings that will trigger second degree liability. Under (b)(1)(A), second degree liability attaches when the person is scheduled to appear as a defendant for either a

---

[6] See Macklin v. United States, 733 A.2d 962, 964 (D.C. App. 1999) (reversing a conviction where there was no evidence presented that the defendant failed to appear).

[7] See Wilkins v. United States, 137 A.3d 975, 979 (D.C. App. 2016).

[8] See Gilliam v. United States, 46 A.3d 360, 371 (D.C. App. 2012) (affirming a conviction where the defendant was present but subsequently left the courtroom).

[9] Consider, for example, a person who misunderstands when and where they are to appear because the courthouse is closed due to inclement weather or because the hearing is moved to another courtroom. The evidence must show beyond a reasonable doubt that the person was practically certain or deliberately ignorant as to when and where they needed to appear. RCC §§ 22E-206; 22E-208(d). See, e.g., Smith v. United States, 583 A.2d 975, 979 (D.C. 1990); Bolan v. United States, 587 A.2d 458, 460 (D.C. App. 1991) (reversing a conviction on sufficiency grounds where a defendant was not notified of a courtroom change).

[10] See Laniyan v. United States, 226 A.3d 1146, 1150 (D.C. 2020) (D.C. May 14, 2020) (explaining that the factfinder must give sufficient consideration to the defendant's personal circumstances); see also Evans v. United States, 133 A.3d 988, 993 (D.C. App. 2016) (explaining, "The evidence of appellant's chronic or recurring memory problems also was evidence that, if credited by the trial judge, might be deemed relevant to the court's assessment of whether appellant's failure to appear was willful. As another example, appellant testified that he 'had so much stuff going on' while his underlying marijuana-possession case was pending, including financial difficulties and housing challenges—circumstances that the trial court, if it credits appellant's testimony, may also deem relevant on the issue of willfulness.").

[11] A person does not commit failure to appear in violation of a court order if the absence was not subject to the person's control. For example, a person does not commit an offense if they are incarcerated, hospitalized, stranded, or unable to connect to a virtual hearing due a technological problem. See Foster v. United States, 699 A.2d 1113, 1115 (D.C. App. 1997) (reversing a conviction where the defendant's employer unexpectedly canceled his return trip to the District); see also Fearwell v. U.S., 886 A.2d 95, 101 (D.C. 2005) (holding "[I]f there is evidence—however weak—to support it, a defendant is entitled to a requested instruction that he has presented evidence of special circumstances which prevented him from appearing in court on the scheduled date and time, and that if the jury credits that evidence, this may create a reasonable doubt concerning whether the government has proven willfulness beyond a reasonable doubt."). Likewise, a person does not commit an offense if they are detained by a court security officer while being searched, temporarily removed from the courthouse for a fire drill, or made to wait outside a courtroom until a non-public hearing concludes.

felony or misdemeanor. Under (b)(1)(B), second degree liability attaches when the person is ordered[12] to appear as a material witness in a criminal case.

Subsection (c) provides two defenses to liability. First, paragraph (c)(1) provides a defense for when a person has the effective consent of a judicial officer[13] to miss the hearing or arrive at a later time. "Effective consent" is a defined term and excludes consent that was obtained by the application of physical force, an explicit or implicit coercive threat, or deception.[14] "Consent" is also defined in RCC § 22E-701. The term "in fact" indicates that the accused is strictly liable with respect to whether effective consent was given.[15] It is not a defense that the person mistakenly believed that they were excused when actually they were not excused.[16]

Second, paragraph (c)(2) provides a defense when the actor, in fact, makes good faith, reasonable efforts to appear or remain for the hearing. The term "in fact" indicates that the accused is strictly liable with respect to whether their conduct constituted "good faith, reasonable efforts."[17]

Paragraphs (d)(1) and (d)(2) specify the penalties for each gradation of the revised offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.] In some cases, the conduct criminalized under this section will also constitute criminal contempt for violation of a court order under RCC § 23-1329(c) or D.C. Code § 11-944 and, in that situation, convictions for both offenses merge under RCC § 22E-214(a)(4).[18]

Paragraph (d)(3) authorizes the court to order the forfeiture of any security which was given or pledged for the defendant's release, subject to the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.[19]

Subsection (e) cross-references applicable definitions in the RCC and the D.C. Code.

Subsection (f) specifies that Chapters 1 – 6 the RCC's General Part apply to this Title 23 offense.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised failure to appear in violation of a court order statute clearly changes current District law in two main ways.

---

[12] A subpoena is insufficient.

[13] Consider, for example, a presiding criminal judge who reschedules all citation arrest hearings to accommodate social distancing during a global health emergency. The arrestee has the effective consent of a judicial officer to not appear. Consider also a judge who calls a case and is informed that the defendant did not due to a family emergency. If the judge excuses the person's absence and reschedules the hearing, the person does not commit an offense.

[14] RCC § 22E-701.

[15] RCC § 22E-207.

[16] Consider, for example, a person who mistakenly believes they may leave the courtroom temporarily to use the bathroom or to smoke a cigarette. Liability depends entirely on the judge's courtroom policy.

[17] RCC § 22E-207.

[18] "Multiple convictions for 2 or more offenses arising from the same course of conduct merge when…[o]ne offense reasonably accounts for the other offense, given the harm or wrong, culpability, and penalty proscribed by each."

[19] See United States v. Nell, 515 F.2d 1351 (D.C. Cir. 1975).

First, the revised offense provides for two degrees of punishment. Current D.C. Code § 23-1327 effectively has three sentencing gradations: 1-5 years for missing a sentencing hearing or a hearing in a felony case, 90-180 days for missing a hearing in a misdemeanor case, and 0-180 days for failing to appear as a material witness. In contrast, because the RCC imposes only maximum penalties and no mandatory or statutory minimums for this offense,[20] the revised statute condenses the offense to two gradations. This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised offenses.

Second, the revised statute specifies that the general provisions of Chapters 1 through 6 of Subtitle I of Title 22E of the D.C. Code apply to this offense. The current D.C. Code generally does not codify consistent definitions, rules of liability, rules of interpretation, or general defenses. In contrast, Subtitle I of Title 22E sets forth broadly applicable rules and definitions relating to the basic requirements of criminal liability, inchoate liability, justification defenses, and penalty enhancements. Application of these general provisions to the revised offense may change District law in numerous ways. For more in-depth discussion of these general provisions, see commentary accompanying statutory provisions in Subtitle I of Title 22E. These changes improve the clarity, consistency, completeness, and proportionality of the revised offense.

Beyond these two changes to current District law, six other aspects of the revised statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised statute applies standardized definitions for the culpable mental states required for criminal liability. Current D.C. Code § 23-1327 requires that the accused act "wilfully." Although the term "wilful" is not defined in the statute, the District of Columbia Court of Appeals ("DCCA") has explained that, in this statute, it means "knowing, intentional, and deliberate, rather than inadvertent or accidental," but does not mean "done with a bad purpose," as it might in other statutes.[21] On at least three occasions, the DCCA has remanded back to the trial court with a directive to more closely consider the impact of a defendant's personal and financial circumstances on their ability to understand, recall, and comply with an order to appear.[22] To resolve this ambiguity, the revised statute uses the RCC's general provisions that define "knowingly"[23] and "in fact,"[24] applying the former to the actor's failure to appear as required and the latter to the nature and issuance of the citation. In addition, under RCC § 22E-208(d), knowledge may be imputed when a person consciously disregards a substantial risk that that they are required to appear before a judicial officer on a specified date and time, and, to avoid liability, avoids confirming or fails to investigate whether they are required to appear at a specified date

[20] See CCRC Advisory Group Memorandum #32 (March 20, 2020) (available at https://ccrc.dc.gov/sites/default/files/dc/sites/ccrc/publication/attachments/Advisory-Group-Memo-32-Supplemental-Materials-to-the-First-Draft-of-Report-52.pdf).
[21] Trice v. United States, 525 A.2d 176, 181 (D.C. 1987); see also Patton v. U. S., 326 A.2d 818, 820 (D.C. App. 1974).
[22] See Laniyan v. United States, 226 A.3d 1146, 1151 (D.C. 2020) (citing Evans v. United States, 133 A.3d 988, 992 (D.C. 2016); Foster v. United States, 699 A.2d 1113 (D.C. 1997)).
[23] RCC § 22E-206.
[24] RCC § 22E-207.

and time. Use of the culpable mental state of "knows" also is consistent with the defense in subsection (c)(2) for making good faith, reasonable efforts to appear. This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised statutes.

Second, the revised statute omits specific references to provision of notice. Current D.C. Code § 23-1327 discusses notice in three places, all of which appear to provide exceptions or qualifications to the offense's requirement that the person's failure to appear be "willful" (a term the D.C. Code does not define). First, subsection (b) states, "Any failure to appear after notice of the appearance date shall be prima facie evidence that such failure to appear is wilful." Second, subsection (b) also specifies that notice of the potential penalties for failure to appear is not required but "shall be a factor" in determining whether such failure to appear is wilful.[25] It further states that, "such warning shall not be a prerequisite to conviction under this section." Third, subsection (c) provides that a factfinder "may convict under this section even if the defendant has not received actual notice of the appearance date if (1) reasonable efforts to notify the defendant have been made, and (2) the defendant, by his own actions, has frustrated the receipt of actual notice." Resolving these ambiguities about exceptions to the otherwise applicable requirement that conduct be "willful," the revised statute requires only that a person actually be required to appear, know that they are required to appear, and knowingly fail to appear. In the revised statute, the provision of notice may well be relevant to proving a defendant's culpable mental state about their duty to appear or failure to appear. However, more specific references to provision of notice are unnecessary because the RCC's general part defines all applicable mental states[26] and includes a deliberate ignorance provision[27] that clarify the culpable mental that must be proven. This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised statutes.

Third, the revised offense includes a defense for when, in fact, the actor makes reasonable, good faith efforts to appear or remain at the hearing. The D.C. Code is silent as to a special circumstances defense. However, the DCCA has held that such a defense exists and, "if there is evidence—however weak—to support it, a defendant is entitled to a requested instruction that he has presented evidence of special circumstances which prevented him from appearing in court on the scheduled date and time, and that if the jury credits that evidence, this may create a reasonable doubt concerning whether the government has proven willfulness beyond a reasonable doubt."[28] The court provides an [25] This provision appears to be superfluous. Unlike the preceding sentence which establishes a permissive inference by use of the phrase "shall be prima facie evidence," it is unclear what effect, if any, the phrase "shall be a factor" has on the statute. No reference to penalty warnings appears in any of the jury instructions the DCCA has reviewed for error or in the pattern jury instruction for the offense. Trice v. U.S., 525 A.2d 176, 181–82 (D.C. 1987); Robinson v. U.S., 322 A.2d 271 (D.C. 1974); Raymond v. U.S., 396 A.2d 975 (D.C. 1979); Fearwell v. U.S., 886 A.2d 95, 101 (D.C. 2005); Cooper v. U.S., 680 A.2d 1370, 1372 (D.C. 1996); Crim. Jury Inst. for DC 6.602 (2019).

---

[26] See RCC § 22E-206 and accompanying commentary.

[27] RCC § 22E-208(d).

[28] Fearwell v. United States, 886 A.2d 95, 101 (D.C. 2005) (internal citations omitted); see also Laniyan v. United States, 226 A.3d 1146, 1151 (D.C. 2020) ("Our cases hold that where, as here, a defendant presents special circumstances explaining his failure to appear as inadvertent, the judge (in a bench trial) must either discredit the defendant's evidence or credit some or all of it while pointing to other evidence overcoming it.

example in which a person is so ill that it is physically impossible to appear in court but does not further clarify what types of circumstances may qualify under the DCCA-recognized defense. To resolve this ambiguity, the revised statute provides a defense for making good faith, reasonable efforts to appear or remain. Notably, this defense is unnecessary where the failure to appear or remain is simply involuntary.[29] This change is consistent with the requirement of only knowledge, rather than purpose, in subsections (a)(2) and (b)(2) of the revised statute. This change improves the clarity and consistency of the revised statutes.

Fourth, the revised statute includes a defense where the accused acts with the effective consent[30] of a judicial officer. Current D.C. Code § 23-1327 is silent as to whether a person may be excused from appearing for a hearing with the consent of a judicial officer.[31] Resolving this ambiguity, the revised statute makes clear that the court is empowered to excuse the accused from appearing. This change improves the clarity and proportionality of the revised offense.

Fifth, the revised statute is limited to persons who are subject to a court order. Current D.C. Code § 23-1327 does not specify that it applies only to court orders (as opposed to releases on citation[32]). However, the statute's location in the District's release and pretrial detention chapter of an enacted title suggests that it may apply only to defendants who have been released under D.C. Code § 23-1321. In addition, District practice is consistent with this reading of the law.[33] To resolve this ambiguity, the revised statute is limited only to persons who are subject to a court order. This change clarifies the revised statute.

Sixth, the revised statute is limited to material witnesses who are required to appear in a criminal case. Current D.C. Code § 23-1327(a) does not specify that it applies only to criminal cases, however, the statute's location in the District's release and pretrial detention chapter of an enacted title suggests that it is specific to criminal matters. To resolve this ambiguity, the revised statute is limited to material witnesses in criminal cases. Criminal contempt remains available under D.C. Code § 11-944. This change clarifies the revised statute.

In other words, if a defendant puts forward a colorable defense to a finding of willfulness, and if the judge credits that defense, then the judge must discuss in sufficient detail the proffered reasons for failing to appear and what other evidence overcomes those reasons, in order to find the defendant's failure to appear willful. In those situations, the judge cannot simply rely on the statutory inference alone.").

[29] RCC § 22E-203 ("No person may be convicted of an offense unless the person voluntarily commits the conduct element required for that offense…When a person's omission provides the basis for liability, a person voluntarily commits the conduct element of an offense when: (A) The person has the physical capacity to perform the required legal duty; or (B) The failure to act is otherwise subject to the person's control.").

[30] "Effective consent" is defined in RCC § 22E-701 to exclude consent obtained by means other than the application of physical force, an explicit or implicit coercive threat, or deception.

[31] Consider, for example, a presiding criminal judge who reschedules all citation arrest hearings to accommodate social distancing during a global health emergency. The arrestee has the effective consent of a judicial officer to not appear.

[32] See RCC § 23-585.

[33] See Crim. Jury Inst. for DC 6.602 (2019) (including in the first element of the offense that the defendant was "released by a judicial officer").

RCC § 23-1329A. Criminal Contempt for Violation of a Release Condition.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the criminal contempt for violation of a release condition provision[1] for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The offense prohibits violating a condition of a pretrial release order issued under D.C. Code § 23-1321. It replaces subsections (a-1) and (c) of D.C. Code § 23-1329, Penalties for violation of conditions of release.

Paragraph (a)(1) requires that the person knows that they are required to comply with conditions while on release. The term "knows" is defined in RCC § 22E-206 and here requires that the person is practically certain that they must comply with certain conditions.[2] Under RCC § 22E-208(d), knowledge may be imputed if the person is reckless as to whether the circumstance exists and, with the purpose of avoiding criminal liability, avoids confirming or fails to investigate whether the circumstance exists.[3]

Subparagraphs (a)(1)(A) – (a)(1)(D) require that the person is conditionally released under D.C. Code § 23-1321[4] and that the release order meet the criteria codified in D.C. Code § 23-1322(f).[5] The term "in fact" indicates that the accused is strictly liable[6] with respect to whether the conditional release order is issued under D.C. Code § 23-1321, is in writing, is sufficiently clear and specific to serve as a guide for the person's conduct, and advises the person of the consequences for violating the order. These consequences include immediate arrest or the issuance of a warrant for the person's arrest, criminal penalties under this section, the pretrial release penalty enhancements under RCC § 22E-

[1] "[A] criminal contempt proceeding is not a criminal prosecution, and consequently not all procedures required in a criminal trial are necessary in a hearing on a charge of contempt." Smith v. United States, 677 A.2d 1022, 1028 (D.C. App. 1996); In re: Wiggins, 359 A.2d 579, 580 (D.C.1976).

[2] Consider, for example, a person who is unable to read or understand the release order due to illiteracy or a language barrier. That person may not be practically certain of their release conditions.

[3] Consider, for example, a person who is handed a release order and angrily tears it up and throws it in the garbage before reading it. That person may be said to know that they were conditionally released, even though they were not practically certain of it.

[4] D.C. Code § 23-1321(b) requires that the court impose a condition "that the person not commit a local, state, or federal crime during the period of release." D.C. Code § 23-1321(c)(1)(B)(xiv) authorizes the court to impose "any other condition that is reasonably necessary to assure the appearance of the person as required and to assure the safety of any other person and the community." Disobedience of these and other court orders are also punished under D.C. Code §§ 11-741 and 11-944. See Caldwell v. U.S., 595 A.2d 961, 965–66 (D.C. 1991). The statute does not apply to a person who is detained. That is, a person cannot be subject to pretrial or presentencing conditions if they are detained in the same case. For example, no statutory or other authority exists under District law for a judicial officer to order a defendant held at D.C. Jail and order that the defendant have no contact with a witness.

[5] See, e.g., Vaas v. U.S., 852 A.2d 44, 46 (D.C. 2004) (defendant's conduct not willful where order failed to meet specificity standard of § 23-1322(f) in case where written order to stay away from "1 block radius" and oral order to stay away from "1 block area" created an ambiguity regarding area from which defendant was barred); Smith v. U.S., 677 A.2d 1022 (D.C. 1996) (no contempt where written statement of conditions was not sufficiently clear and specific to serve as a guide to defendant's conduct where court could not conclude that defendant could reasonably infer from order to stay away from complainant that she was not to have contact with complainant's attorney).

[6] RCC § 22E-207.

607, and the criminal penalties for obstruction of justice under D.C. Code § 22-722. Invalidity of the order is not a defense.[7]

Paragraph (a)(2) requires that the person fail to comply with the release order. Paragraph (a)(2) specifies that the person must act knowingly, a term defined in RCC § 22E-206, which here means the person must be practically certain that they failed to comply with one or more provisions in the order. Under RCC § 22E-203, the person's conduct must be voluntary.[8] For example, being arrested on probable cause is not a volitional act, however, committing a crime while on release is.[9] A person must be afforded a reasonable opportunity to comply with the condition.[10]

Subsection (b) codifies as a defense that the actor has the effective consent of a judicial officer to be excused from the condition of release that is the subject of the charged offense.[11] "Effective consent" is a defined term and excludes consent that was obtained by the application of physical force, an explicit or implicit coercive threat, or deception.[12]

---

[7] A person is not entitled to attack the validity of a court order in a contempt proceeding. See, e.g., Shewarega v. Yegzaw, 947 A.2d 47, 51 (D.C. 2008) (respondent not entitled to attack validity of a CPO in contempt proceeding; he was obligated to obey the court order unless and until it was reversed or vacated). "Compliance with court orders is required until they are reversed on appeal or are later modified." Baker, 891 A.2d at 212 (quoting Kammerman v. Kammerman, 543 A.2d 794, 798–99 (D.C. 1988)). See also Thomas v. U.S., 934 A.2d 389, 391 (D.C. 2007).

[8] A person does not commit an offense if the act or omission was not subject to the person's control. For example, a person does not violate a condition to meet with their pretrial services officer if they are incarcerated, hospitalized, or stranded. See, e.g., Evans v. United States, 133 A.3d 988, 993 (D.C. App. 2016) (explaining, "The evidence of appellant's chronic or recurring memory problems also was evidence that, if credited by the trial judge, might be deemed relevant to the court's assessment of whether appellant's failure to appear was willful. As another example, appellant testified that he 'had so much stuff going on' while his underlying marijuana-possession case was pending, including financial difficulties and housing challenges—circumstances that the trial court, if it credits appellant's testimony, may also deem relevant on the issue of willfulness."); Foster v. United States, 699 A.2d 1113, 1115 (D.C. App. 1997) (reversing a conviction under a similar statute where the defendant's employer unexpectedly canceled his return trip to the District); see also Fearwell v. U.S., 886 A.2d 95, 101 (D.C. 2005) (holding "[I]f there is evidence—however weak—to support it, a defendant is entitled to a requested instruction that he has presented evidence of special circumstances which prevented him from appearing in court on the scheduled date and time, and that if the jury credits that evidence, this may create a reasonable doubt concerning whether the government has proven willfulness beyond a reasonable doubt."); but see Grant v. U.S., 734 A.2d 174, 177 (D.C. 1999) (holding that "[a]ddiction to heroin [does] not constitute a defense to the charge of contempt based upon violating a condition of pretrial release not to use drugs.").

[9] Parker v. U. S., 373 A.2d 906, 907 (D.C. App. 1977).

[10] For example, a person does not violate a condition to stay away from a complainant where the complainant is physically chasing after the person and the person makes reasonable efforts to distance themselves. See RCC § 22E-203 (requiring physical capacity to perform a required legal duty); Conley v. United States, 79 A.3d 270, 292-293 (D.C. 2013) (explaining voluntariness requires a reasonable opportunity to comply with a legal duty); Lambert v. People of the State of California, 355 U.S. 225, 229 (1957) (reversing a conviction where, on first becoming aware of her duty, the appellant had no opportunity to comply with the law and avoid its penalty).

[11] Consider, for example, a judge in one case orders a person to complete a domestic violence intervention program and a judge in another case orders the person to complete an inpatient drug rehabilitation program. Consider also a judge who – temporarily or permanently – loosens the requirements of a written order by making an oral pronouncement.

[12] RCC § 22E-701.

"Consent" is also defined in RCC § 22E-701. The term "in fact" indicates that the accused is strictly liable with respect to whether effective consent was given.[13]

Subsection (c) authorizes the court to initiate contempt proceedings sua sponte.[14]

Subsection (d) specifies that contempt proceedings must be tried to the court.[15]

Subsection (e) specifies the penalties for the revised offense.[16] [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.] In some cases, the conduct criminalized under this section will also constitute criminal contempt under D.C. Code §§ 11-741 or 11-944,[17] failure to appear in violation of a court order under RCC § 23-1327,[18] or tampering with a detection device under RCC § 22E-3402 and convictions for the offenses must merge under RCC § 22E-214(a)(4).[19] Additionally, where the violation of release conditions is committing a new offense,[20] the contempt conviction must merge with or bar any conviction for the new offense.[21]

Subsection (f) cross-references applicable definitions in the RCC.

Subsection (g) specifies that Chapters 1 – 6 the RCC's General Part apply to this Title 23 offense.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised criminal contempt for violation of a court order statute clearly changes current District law in one main way.

The revised statute specifies that the general provisions of Chapters 1 through 6 of Subtitle I of Title 22E of the D.C. Code apply to this offense. The current D.C. Code generally does not codify consistent definitions, rules of liability, rules of interpretation, or general defenses. In contrast, Subtitle I of Title 22E sets forth broadly applicable rules and definitions relating to the basic requirements of criminal liability, inchoate liability, justification defenses, and penalty enhancements. Application of these general provisions to the revised offense may change District law in numerous ways. For more in-depth

---

[13] RCC § 22E-207.

[14] See D.C. Code § 23-1329(c). "[A] criminal contempt proceeding is not a criminal prosecution, and consequently not all procedures required in a criminal trial are necessary in a hearing on a charge of contempt." Smith v. United States, 677 A.2d 1022, 1028 (D.C. App. 1996); In re: Wiggins, 359 A.2d 579, 580 (D.C.1976).

[15] See D.C. Code § 23-1329(c). "[A] criminal contempt proceeding is not a criminal prosecution, and consequently not all procedures required in a criminal trial are necessary in a hearing on a charge of contempt." Smith v. United States, 677 A.2d 1022, 1028 (D.C. App. 1996); In re: Wiggins, 359 A.2d 579, 580 (D.C.1976).

[16] This section operates independently of and in addition to statute eliminating limitation on length of sentence for criminal contempt, thus the sentencing limit effectively does not apply. Caldwell v. U.S., 1991, 595 A.2d 961 (D.C. 1991).

[17] See Caldwell v. U.S., 595 A.2d 961, 965–66 (D.C. 1991); Vest v. United States, 834 A.2d 908 (D.C. App. 2003).

[18] See, e.g., Swisher v. U.S., 572 A.2d 85, 89 (D.C. 1990).

[19] "Multiple convictions for 2 or more offenses arising from the same course of conduct merge when…[o]ne offense reasonably accounts for the other offense, given the harm or wrong, culpability, and penalty proscribed by each."

[20] D.C. Code § 23-1321(b) requires that the court impose a condition "that the person not commit a local, state, or federal crime during the period of release."

[21] See Haye v. United States, 67 A.3d 1025, 1031 (D.C. App. 2013); United States v. Dixon, 509 U.S. 688, 698 (1993).

discussion of these general provisions, see commentary accompanying statutory provisions in Subtitle I of Title 22E. These changes improve the clarity, consistency, completeness, and proportionality of the revised offense.

Beyond this change to current District law, four other aspects of the revised statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised statute applies standardized definitions for the culpable mental states required for criminal liability. Current D.C. Code § 23-1329(c) requires that the accused "intentionally violated a condition of his release." The term "intentionally" is not defined in the statute. There is limited DCCA case law on point that does not clearly distinguish between voluntariness and culpable mental states, but suggests that proof of knowledge or awareness of the violation is sufficient, and not a conscious desire to commit the violation.[22] To resolve this ambiguity, the revised statute uses the RCC's general provisions that define "knowingly"[23] and "in fact,"[24] applying the former to the actor's failure to comply with the order and the latter to the nature and issuance of the order. In addition, under RCC § 22E-208(d), knowledge may be imputed when a person consciously disregards a substantial risk that that they are subject to a conditional release order, and, to avoid liability, avoids confirming or fails to investigate whether they are subject to a conditional release order. These changes clarify and improve the consistency of District statutes.

Second, the revised statute includes a defense where the accused acts with the effective consent[25] of a judicial officer. Current D.C. Code § 23-1327 is silent as to whether a person may be excused from appearing for a hearing with the consent of a judicial officer.[26] Resolving this ambiguity, the revised statute makes clear that the court is [22] Grant v. United States, 734 A.2d 174, 177 n. 6 (D.C. 1999) ("Proof of the intent element of criminal contempt only requires proof that the appellant intended to commit the actions constituting contempt. See, e.g., Jones v. Harkness, 709 A.2d 722, 723–24 (D.C.1998) (no defense to contempt that appellant's violations of civil protection order were due to his psychological condition and not motivated by disrespect to court)."); Jones v. Harkness, 709 A.2d 722, 723–24 (D.C. 1998) ("Appellant admitted that, knowing the CPO was in place, he contacted Ms. Harkness in violation of the court order on numerous occasions. As the court noted, appellant deliberately engaged in continuing behavior that violated the court order. From appellant's actions, the court properly inferred wrongful intent. See Swisher, supra, 572 A.2d at 89 n. 9 (explaining that willfulness could be inferred from the defendant's failure to appear for trial after having been warned that his attendance was required); see also Hager v. District of Columbia Dep't of Consumer and Regulatory Affairs, 475 A.2d 367, 368 (D.C.1984) ("Generally, [willful] means 'no more than that the person charged with the duty knows what he is doing. It does not mean that, in addition, he must suppose that he is breaking the law.' ") (quoting Townsend v. United States, 68 App. D.C. 223, 229, 95 F.2d 352, 358, cert. denied, 303 U.S. 664, 58 S.Ct. 830, 82 L.Ed. 1121 (1938)).").

---

[23] RCC § 22E-206.

[24] RCC § 22E-207.

[25] "Effective consent" is defined in RCC § 22E-701 to exclude consent obtained by means other than the application of physical force, an explicit or implicit coercive threat, or deception.

[26] Consider, for example, a judge in one case orders a person to complete a domestic violence intervention program and a judge in another case orders the person to complete an inpatient drug rehabilitation program. Consider also a judge who – temporarily or permanently – loosens the requirements of a written order by making an oral pronouncement.

empowered to excuse the accused from appearing. This change improves the clarity and proportionality of the revised offense.

Third, the revised statute requires that the release order comply with the requirements of D.C. Code § 23-1322(f). Current D.C. Code § 23-1329 is silent as to whether or how a person's conditions of release be specified in an order. District case law has held that evidence of contempt is insufficient where conditions of release are not in writing and sufficiently clear and specific to serve as a guide to defendant's conduct.[27] However, case law has not addressed whether other criteria specified in the detention statute, such as notice of the potential penalties for failure to comply, must also be satisfied. To resolve this ambiguity, the revised statute codifies this point and clarifies that the written order must meet all requirements of D.C. Code § 23-1322(f). This change clarifies and improves the consistency of District statutes.

Fourth, the revised statute does not specify that contempt proceedings must be "expedited." Current D.C. Code § 23-1329(c) states, "contempt proceedings shall be expedited." The term "expedited" is undefined and District case law has not interpreted its meaning. In contrast, the RCC does not include a rule of criminal procedure in the statutory language. This change improves the consistency of the revised statutes.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

The revised statute is severed from D.C. Code § 23-1329 and given its own section in the revised code. This change clarifies that the defense, penalties, and definitions do not apply to subsections (a), (b), (d), (d-1), (e), and (f) of current D.C. Code § 23-1329, which are not being revised at this time. This change improves the clarity and logical organization of the revised statutes.

[27] Smith v. U.S., 677 A.2d 1022 (D.C. 1996); Vaas v. U.S., 852 A.2d 44, 46 (D.C. 2004).

RCC § 24-241.05A. Violation of Work Release.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the violation of work release offense for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The offense prohibits knowingly violating a work release privilege. It replaces subsection (b) of D.C. Code § 24-241.05, violations of a work release plan.

Paragraph (a)(1) requires that the person is subject to a work release privilege. The term "in fact" indicates that the accused is strictly liable with respect to whether they were on work release at the time the elements of the offense were completed.[1]

Paragraph (a)(2) requires that the person fail to return to the place of confinement designated in their work release plan. Paragraph (a)(2) specifies that the person must act knowingly, a term defined in RCC § 22E-206. Applied here, it means the person must be practically certain that they failed to return as required.[2] Under RCC § 22E-208(d), knowledge may be imputed if the person is reckless as to whether a circumstance exists and, with the purpose of avoiding criminal liability, avoids confirming or fails to investigate whether the circumstance exists. Applied here, knowledge may be imputed when a person consciously disregards a substantial risk that that they have been granted a work release privilege, and to avoid liability avoids confirming or fails to investigate whether they have been granted a work release privilege.[3] Under RCC § 22E-203, the person's conduct must be voluntary.[4]

Subsection (b) specifies that a person does not commit an offense when they have the effective consent of a judicial officer,[5] the Director of the Department of Corrections, or the Chairman of the United States Parole Commission,[6] to be absent from their designated place of confinement. "Effective consent" is a defined term and excludes consent that was obtained by the application of physical force, an explicit or implicit coercive threat, or deception.[7] "Consent" is also defined in RCC § 22E-701. The term "in fact" indicates that the accused is strictly liable with respect to whether effective consent was given.[8] It is not a defense that the person mistakenly believed that they were excused when actually they were not excused.

---

[1] RCC § 22E-207.

[2] Consider, for example, a person who is unable to read or understand their work release plan due to illiteracy or a language barrier. That person may not be practically certain that they failed to return as required.

[3] Consider, for example, a person who is handed a work release plan and angrily tears it up and throws it in the garbage before reading the designated place of confinement. That person may be said to know that they failed to return even though they were not practically certain that they did.

[4] A person does not commit violation of work release if the absence was not subject to the person's control. For example, a person does not commit an offense if they are incarcerated, hospitalized, or stranded.

[5] Paragraph (e)(2) specifies that the term "judicial officer" has the meaning specified in D.C. Code § 23-1331.

[6] The D.C. Board of Parole, referenced in D.C. Code § 24-241.02 no longer exists and its responsibilities are now handled by the United States Parole Commission. D.C. Code § 24-404.

[7] RCC § 22E-701.

[8] RCC § 22E-207.

Subsection (c) states that the Attorney General for the District of Columbia is responsible for prosecuting violations of the statute.

Subsection (d) specifies the penalties for the revised offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.] In some cases, the conduct criminalized under this section will also constitute third degree escape under RCC § 22E-3401(c) and convictions for both offenses must merge under RCC § 22E-214(a)(4).[9]

Subsection (e) cross-references applicable definitions in the RCC and the D.C. Code.

Subsection (f) specifies that Chapters 1 – 6 the RCC's General Part apply to this Title 24 offense.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised violation of work release statute clearly changes current District law in two main ways.

First, the revised statute specifies that the general provisions of Chapters 1 through 6 of Subtitle I of Title 22E of the D.C. Code apply to this offense. The current D.C. Code generally does not codify consistent definitions, rules of liability, rules of interpretation, or general defenses. In contrast, Subtitle I of Title 22E sets forth broadly applicable rules and definitions relating to the basic requirements of criminal liability, inchoate liability, justification defenses, and penalty enhancements. Application of these general provisions to the revised offense may change District law in numerous ways. For more in-depth discussion of these general provisions, see commentary accompanying statutory provisions in Subtitle I of Title 22E. These changes improve the clarity, consistency, completeness, and proportionality of the revised offense.

Second, the revised statute eliminates the mandatory consecutive sentencing provision. Current D.C. Code § 23-241.05(b) states, "such sentence of imprisonment [shall] run consecutively with the remainder of previously imposed sentences." In contrast, the RCC imposes only maximum penalties and no mandatory or statutory minimums for this offense, recognizing that sentencing guidelines, rather than statutory mandates are a more appropriate way to guide judicial decision making.[10] This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised offenses.

Beyond these two changes to current District law, two other aspects of the revised statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised statute applies standardized definitions for the culpable mental states required for criminal liability. The current violation of a work release plan statute[11] punishes "Any prisoner who willfully fails to return at the time and to the place of confinement designated in his work release plan." However, the term "willfully" is not defined and it is unclear to what extent that mental state applies to the language that follows. There is no DCCA case law on point. The revised statute uses the RCC's general provisions that define "knowingly"[12] and "in fact"[13] and specifies that culpable mental states apply until the occurrence of a new culpable mental state or strict liability in the offense.[14] . In addition, under RCC § 22E-208(d), knowledge may be imputed when a person consciously disregards a substantial risk that that they have been granted a work release privilege, and, to avoid liability, avoids confirming or fails to investigate whether they have been granted a work release privilege. These changes clarify and improve the consistency of District statutes.

[9] "Multiple convictions for 2 or more offenses arising from the same course of conduct merge when…[o]ne offense reasonably accounts for the other offense, given the harm or wrong, culpability, and penalty proscribed by each."
[10] See CCRC Advisory Group Memorandum #32 (March 20, 2020) (available at https://ccrc.dc.gov/sites/default/files/dc/sites/ccrc/publication/attachments/Advisory-Group-Memo-32-Supplemental-Materials-to-the-First-Draft-of-Report-52.pdf).
[11] D.C. Code § 24-241.05.

Second, the revised statute includes a defense where the accused acts with the effective consent[15] of a judicial officer, the Director of the Department of Corrections, or the Chairman of the United States Parole Commission. Current D.C. Code § 24-241.05(b) is silent as to whether a person may be excused from returning to the place designated on their work release plan with the consent of a judicial officer,[16] the Department of Corrections,[17] or the United States Parole Commission.[18] Resolving this ambiguity, revised statute makes clear that each of these actors is empowered to excuse the accused from returning. This change improves the revised offenses by describing all elements that must be proven and applying consistent definitions throughout the revised code.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

The revised statute is severed from D.C. Code § 24-241.05 and given its own section in the revised code. This change clarifies that the defense, penalties, and definitions do not apply to subsection (a) of current D.C. Code § 24-241.05, which is not being revised at this time. This change improves the clarity and logical organization of the revised statutes.

[12] RCC § 22E-206.
[13] RCC § 22E-207.
[14] RCC § 22E-207(a).
[15] "Effective consent" is defined in RCC § 22E-701 to exclude consent obtained by means other than the application of physical force, an explicit or implicit coercive threat, or deception.
[16] Consider, for example, a judge who orders a person to remain in court for a hearing instead of returning to their residence at the time specified on their work plan. That person does not commit an offense by abiding by the court's order.
[17] Consider, for example, a halfway house which directs a person to return at 8:00 p.m. and not 7:00 p.m. as specified in the work release plan, to avoid conflict with another resident. That person does not commit an offense by adhering to the safety rules of the confining institution.
[18] Consider, for example, a parole officer who directs a supervisee by text message to report to another placement for the night, due to overcrowding or an emergency evacuation. That person does not commit an offense by following their parole officer's amended work release plan.

RCC § 24-403.01. Sentencing, supervised release, and good time credit for felonies committed on or after August 5, 2000.

Explanatory Note. The RCC amendments to the statute affect a limited number of penalty-related provisions and do not contravene Congressional language in the criminal justice provisions of the Revitalization Act.[1]

Paragraph (b)(2) makes the length of supervised release imposed at sentencing a matter of judicial discretion, although the court must impose a term of supervised release. The maximum length of supervised release that may be imposed varies by the severity of the underlying offense (measured by maximum authorized sentence length). A court may impose a maximum of five years supervised release if the term of imprisonment authorized for the offense is 24 years or more, three years if the term of imprisonment authorized for the offense is eight years or more but less than 24 years, or 1 year if the term of imprisonment authorized for the offense is more than one year but less than 8 years. The paragraph only applies to sentencing for felony offenses.

Paragraph (b)(7) sets the maximum term of imprisonment that may be imposed following revocation of supervised release. Sub-paragraph (b)(7)(A) provides for a maximum of 5 years imprisonment following revocation when the offense carries a maximum of 40 years or more. Sub-paragraph (b)(7)(B) provides for a maximum of 3 years imprisonment following revocation when the offense carries at least 24 years or more but less than 40 years imprisonment. Sub-paragraph (b)(7)(C) provides for a maximum of 2 years imprisonment following revocation when the offense carries at least 8 years or more but less than 24 years imprisonment. Sub-paragraph (b)(7)(D) provides for a maximum of 1 year imprisonment following revocation when the offense carries less than 8 years imprisonment.

Subsection (b-1) clarifies that, for any offense, the maximum term of imprisonment authorized upon revocation of supervised release under subsection (b)(7) shall not be deducted from the maximum term of imprisonment or commitment authorized for such offense.

---

[1] National Capital Revitalization and Self-Government Improvement Act of 1997, Pub. L. No. 105-33, 111 Stat. 712 (1997) §§ 11201-11282. Notably, section 11214 of the Revitalization Act required the District to "enact in whole the recommendations of the [Truth in Sentencing] Commission," and the recommendations of the Commission included language specifying statutory minimums and maximums for various offenses currently codified in D.C. Code § 24-403.01(e) and (f) that are eliminated by the RCC changes to the statute. However, the Commission's inclusion of those statutory minimums and maximums was not required by the Revitalization Act and the Commission itself stated that its intent in inclusion of those minimums and maximums was to: "preserve[] existing maxima and minima, subject to any future changes that may be made to the District of Columbia Code" (emphasis added). See D.C. Truth in Sentencing Commission, Formal Recommendations (January 31, 1998) at 8. Consequently, elimination of current D.C. Code § 24-403.01(e) and (f) does not contravene the requirements of the Revitalization Act. Other provisions of D.C. Code § 24-403.01 revised by the RCC are statutory provisions enacted by the D.C. Council on its own authority, not pursuant to the Revitalization Act.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised § 24-403.01 statute clearly changes current District law in five main ways.

First, the revised statute provides the court discretion, up to the specified maximum, regarding how much supervisory release to require. Current D.C. Code § 24-403.01(b)(2) provides that, when the court imposes a sentence of more than one year, the court must impose either 5 or 3 years supervised release depending on whether the offense at issue carries an authorized penalty of 25 years or more imprisonment or is a less serious felony. Current D.C. Code § 24-403.01(b)(3) authorizes the same periods of supervised release based on the same threshold of 25 years, however subparagraph (b)(3) applies only when the court imposes a sentence of one year or less and the period of supervised release is discretionary. In contrast, the RCC statute provides the court the ability to determine the length of supervised release for all felony sentences, whether or not the imprisonment sentence is more than 1 year. This approach allows judges to better tailor the need for supervised release to each particular person and is consistent with the broader approach in the RCC to provide greater judicial discretion to impose lesser sanctions when doing so is sufficient to serve the purposes of supervision. As in the current D.C. Code §§ 24-403.01(b)(2) and (b)(3), some period of supervised release must still be imposed under the revised language, but the period can be any amount up to the specified maximum. This approach follows the recent updates to the Model Penal Code[2] and is generally consistent with federal law.[3] With the elimination of mandatory terms of supervised release, there remains no relevant distinction between D.C. Code §§ 24-403.01(b)(2) and (b)(3), and the latter is eliminated as duplicative. This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statutes.

---

[2] See, e.g., Model Penal Code: Sentencing (Am. Law Inst., 2017) § 6.09, Postrelease Supervision ("(1) When the court sentences an offender to prison, the court may also impose a term of postrelease supervision. (2) The purposes of postrelease supervision are to hold offenders accountable for their criminal conduct, promote their rehabilitation and reintegration into law-abiding society, reduce the risks that they will commit new offenses, and address their needs for housing, employment, family support, medical care, and mental-health care during their transition from prison to the community. (3) The court shall not impose postrelease supervision unless necessary to further one or more of the purposes in subsection (2). (4) When deciding whether to impose postrelease supervision, the length of a supervision term, and what conditions of supervision to impose, the court should consult reliable risk-and-needs-assessment instruments, when available, and shall apply any relevant sentencing guidelines.").

[3] 18 U.S.C. § 3583 (a), (c) ("(a) In General.—The court, in imposing a sentence to a term of imprisonment for a felony or a misdemeanor, may include as a part of the sentence a requirement that the defendant be placed on a term of supervised release after imprisonment, except that the court shall include as a part of the sentence a requirement that the defendant be placed on a term of supervised release if such a term is required by statute or if the defendant has been convicted for the first time of a domestic violence crime as defined in section 3561(b)."; "(c)Factors To Be Considered in Including a Term of Supervised Release.—The court, in determining whether to include a term of supervised release, and, if a term of supervised release is to be included, in determining the length of the term and the conditions of supervised release, shall consider the factors set forth in section 3553(a)(1), (a)(2)(B), (a)(2)(C), (a)(2)(D), (a)(4), (a)(5), (a)(6), and (a)(7).").

Second, the revised statute provides a third, lower maximum term of supervised release for when the court imposes a sentence for a low felony crime. Current D.C. Code §§ 24-403.01(b)(2) and (b)(3) mandate or authorize imposition of up to either 5 or 3 years supervised release depending on whether the offense at issue carries an authorized penalty of 25 years or more imprisonment or is a less serious felony. In contrast, the RCC statute distinguishes three levels of severity in underlying offenses instead of two, and authorizes a 1 year maximum term of supervised release for low felonies. It is unclear why the current D.C. Code does not distinguish low felonies from the much more serious conduct involved in crimes of ten years or more. The RCC is generally consistent with federal law in providing a three-level distinction in felonies meriting supervised release.[4] This change improves the proportionality of the revised statutes.

Third, the revised statute updates the thresholds for the severity of offenses (measured in years) that trigger different terms of supervised release or, upon revocation of supervised release, imprisonment. Under current D.C. Code §§ 24-403.01(b)(2) and (b)(3) the thresholds for different terms of supervised release turn on whether the offense of conviction carries an authorized a penalty of 25 years or more imprisonment. Under current D.C. Code § 24-403.01(b)(7) the different terms of supervised release turn on whether the offense of conviction meets one of three thresholds: it is a designated "Class A felony"[5] or carries up to a life sentence; it carries an authorized penalty of 25 years or more; or it carries an authorized penalty of 5 years or more imprisonment. In contrast, the RCC statute adjusts the statutory maximums for these thresholds to better follow the RCC Class maximums. Under the RCC there still are four offense penalty ranges that determine imprisonment at revocation, and the new penalties (under 8 years, 8 to under 24 years, 24 to under 40 years, and 40 years or over) closely track the current D.C. Code ranges (under 5 years, 5 to under 25 years, 25 to Class A or life, and Class A or life). The three lower ranges are also used to determine the maximum term of supervised release under the revised paragraph (b)(2). The revised statute's thresholds reflect the RCC's more graduated approach to penalty severity[6] and better accommodate the penalty classes in the [4] 18 U.S.C. § 3583 (b) ("Authorized Terms of Supervised Release.—Except as otherwise provided, the authorized terms of supervised release are—(1) for a Class A or Class B felony, not more than five years; (2) for a Class C or Class D felony, not more than three years; and (3) for a Class E felony, or for a misdemeanor (other than a petty offense), not more than one year.").

[5] Current D.C. Code statutes designating "Class A" felonies for purposes of imprisonment following revocation of release are: § 22-722 (obstruction of justice); § 22-1804a (penalty for felony after at least 2 prior felony convictions); § 22-2001 (kidnapping); § 22-2102 (first degree murder, railroads); § 22-2104 (penalty for murder in first and second degrees); § 22-2803 (carjacking); § 22-3002 (first degree sexual abuse); § 22-3008 (first degree child sexual abuse); § 22-4502 (additional penalty for committing crime when armed); § 22-4515a (manufacture, transfer, use, possession, or transportation of molotov cocktails, or other explosives for unlawful purposes).

[6] E.g., the current D.C. Code's treatment of all forms of kidnapping (D.C. Code § 22–2001) or all offenses with a while-armed enhancement (D.C. Code § 22–4502(a)(4)) as Class A offenses treats widely variable kinds of behavior as equivalent. In contrast, the RCC grades offenses (and enhancements) previously designated as "Class A" felonies to better distinguish relatively minor from more severe conduct.

RCC.[7] The RCC thresholds are also generally consistent with federal law distinctions in felonies meriting different amounts of time after revocation.[8] This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Fourth, the revised statute eliminates the requirement that the maximum term of imprisonment for most offenses be reduced by the maximum term of imprisonment authorized on revocation of supervised release. Under current D.C. Code § 24-403.01(b-1), the maximum imprisonment term that the court can impose is equal to the statutory maximum stated in the offense only for offenses carrying a life sentence or designated as a "Class A" felony. For all other D.C. Code offenses, D.C. Code § 24-403.01(b-1) requires that the court subtract from the otherwise stated statutory maximum the maximum amount of imprisonment time authorized upon revocation of supervised release under subsection (b)(7)—a reduction of 3 years for offenses with a statutory maximum of 25 years or more, 2 years for offenses with a maximum of 5 years up to 25 years, and a reduction of 1 year for felony offenses with a maximum up to 5 years. In contrast, the revised statute does not limit the otherwise stated maximum term of imprisonment that can be imposed for an offense by the amount of backup time in D.C. Code § 24-403.01(b)(7).[9] In conjunction with this change, the RCC penalty classes provide somewhat lower penalties than are common in the current D.C. Code.[10] The net effect is that the RCC authorized penalty classes provide a more transparent statement of what imprisonment the court is allowed to impose, and largely accord with the maximum statutory penalties that are actually available in current D.C. practice once backup time is accounted for.[11] This change improves the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statutes.

---

[7] The RCC penalty classes differentiate offense maximum penalties at 8 years (Class 7), 24 years (Class 4), and 40 years (Class 2). Notably, Classes 1 and 2 are the functional equivalents of life sentences (see commentary to RCC § 22E-603). Also, by setting the lowest threshold at "under 8 years," the lowest term of supervised release and imprisonment time after revocation for RCC Class 8 and 9 offenses, which have a maximum of 4 and 2 years respectively, still carry the same overall imprisonment exposure (3 years and 5 years) as current D.C. Code penalties carrying 3 and 5 year imprisonment terms from which revocation time must be subtracted at sentencing per D.C. Code § 24-403.01(b-1).

[8] See 18 U.S.C. § 3583 (e)(3) ("[A] defendant whose term is revoked under this paragraph may not be required to serve on any such revocation more than 5 years in prison if the offense that resulted in the term of supervised release is a class A felony, more than 3 years in prison if such offense is a class B felony, more than 2 years in prison if such offense is a class C or D felony, or more than one year in any other case;"); 18 U.S.C. § 3559 ("Classification.—An offense that is not specifically classified by a letter grade in the section defining it, is classified if the maximum term of imprisonment authorized is— (1) life imprisonment, or if the maximum penalty is death, as a Class A felony; (2) twenty-five years or more, as a Class B felony; (3) less than twenty-five years but ten or more years, as a Class C felony; (4) less than ten years but five or more years, as a Class D felony; (5) less than five years but more than one year, as a Class E felony;").

[9] Under the revised statute, the total term of imprisonment imposed for revocation of supervised release in addition to the initial sentence imposed may exceed the statutory maximum sentence authorized for any given offense.

[10] RCC § 22E-603, Authorized Terms of Imprisonment.

[11] Compare the most common D.C. Code offense penalties, first line, with RCC § 22E-603, second line:
Life, 60Y, 40Y, 30Y, 20Y, 15Y, 10Y, 5Y, 3Y, 1Y, 180 days, 90 days, 30 days
45Y, 40Y, 30Y, 24Y, 18Y, 12Y, 8Y, 4Y, 2Y, 1Y, 180 days, 60 days, 10 days.

Fifth, the revised statute eliminates provisions providing various minimum and maximum sentences for certain offenses and aggravated versions of specified offenses. Current D.C. Code § 24-403.01(b-2) describes aggravating circumstances and procedures for alleging aggravating circumstances that, if proven, allow for higher sentences for various murder, carjacking, and sex offenses. Current D.C. Code §§ 24-403.01(e) and (f) provide statutory minimum sentences for various assault, sex, and weapon offenses when the actor has prior convictions of a specified type. Current D.C. Code § 24-403.01(g) clarifies that fines are available in addition to the imprisonment penalties described in the section. All offenses with penalties or aggravated penalties described in D.C. Code § 24-403.01 also have statutory penalties and are subject to enhancements for aggravating facts described elsewhere in the D.C. Code.[12] In contrast, the revised statute eliminates all minimum, maximum, and enhanced penalties specified in D.C. Code § 24-403.01 and instead specifies the relevant penalties and enhancements either in RCC Chapter 6 (Offense Classes, Penalties, & Enhancements) or the specific offense itself. There is no clear basis for specifying statutory minimums, maximums, and enhancements for in D.C. Code § 24-403.01, or treating these particular offenses differently than other similarly serious offenses. The revised statute specifies the penalties for all offenses in the same manner as for all other RCC offenses, using standardized penalty classes.[13] This change improves the clarity, consistency, organization, and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change District law.

The revised statute adds the word "adequate" to paragraph (b)(1) so it states: "If a person found guilty is sentenced to imprisonment, or to commitment pursuant to § 24-903, under this section, the court shall impose an adequate period of supervision ("supervised release") to follow release from the imprisonment or commitment." This language mirrors the Congressional language in the Revitalization Act[14] and clarifies the revised statutes.

The maximum statutory penalties common in the D.C. Code are generally 1 or 2 years higher for low and mid-felonies than the corresponding RCC classes, but in practice they are nearly equivalent because these D.C. Code maximums must be reduced by 1 or 2 years for backup time under D.C. Code § 24-403.01(b)(7).

[12] Compare, e.g., penalty provisions in § 22–3008 (First degree child sexual abuse), D.C. Code § 22–3020 (Aggravating circumstances [sex offenses]), and enhancements such as D.C. Code § 22–3611 (Enhanced penalty for committing crime of violence against minors) with additional penalty provisions regarding first degree child sex abuse in D.C. Code § 24-403.01(b-2)(1), (b-2)(2), (b-2)(3), (e), and (f).

[13] For further description of the penalties for RCC offenses corresponding to the D.C. Code offenses cited in D.C. Code § 24-403.01, see the commentary to RCC Chapter 6 (Offense Classes, Penalties, & Enhancements) and the particular offense. Tables showing the correspondence between RCC and D.C. Code offenses are provided in Appendices A and G.

[14] National Capital Revitalization and Self-Government Improvement Act of 1997, Pub. L. No. 105-33, 111 Stat. 712 (1997) Sec. 11212(b)(2)(C).

D.C. Code § 24-403.03. Modification of an imposed term of imprisonment.

Explanatory Note & Relation to Current District Law. This section establishes, for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC) and other D.C. Code provisions, authority and procedures for the court to modify a defendant's terms of imprisonment after serving at least 15 years' imprisonment. The revised statute replaces current D.C. Code § 24-403.03, Modification of an imposed term of imprisonment.

The only changes in the revised statute as compared to the current D.C. Code provision are to: 1) elimination of the age reference from the section title; 2) replacement of the phrases "offense committed before the defendant's 25th birthday" with "offense" in subsection (a) prefatory language and paragraph (b)(1) of the statute; and deletion of the clause in subparagraph (b)(3)(B) stating "but before the defendant's 25th birthday".[15] For there to be a sentence modification under the revised statute a person must have served at least 15 years of their sentence and there must be judicial findings, after consideration of victim statements and other procedural requirements, that the person is not a danger to the safety of any person or the community, and that the interests of justice warrant such a sentence modification. When these stringent requirements are met, continued incarceration may be unjustifiable regardless of a defendant's age when he or she committed a crime.

The revised statute does not diminish the fact that the age when a person commits a crime remains a special factor in sentencing. For over a decade it has been well-established that adolescents are less able to understand the long term consequences of their actions and conform their behavior accordingly.[16] Moreover, the underlying brain and social development that marks adolescent criminal behavior is also common to individuals through age 24.[17] Yet, while these considerations suggest youth offenders may be less blameworthy for their conduct, there is also extensive research indicating that criminal behavior peaks in late teen years and declines from the early 20s onward.[18] Older individuals are less likely to recidivate after release than younger offenders with similar [15] Apart from these changes, the RCC text is identical to the statute as amended by the Omnibus Public Safety and Justice Amendment Act of 2020, Act A23-0568 (Projected Law Date of May 18, 2021).

[16] See Committee on the Judiciary, Report on Bill 21-0683, the "Comprehensive Youth Justice Amendment Act of 2016", (Oct. 5, 2016), available at: http://lims.dccouncil.us/Download/35539/B21-0683-CommitteeReport1.pdf ("citing Laurence Steinberg, Adolescent Development and Juvenile Justice, Ann. Rev. Clin, Psychol. 2009 5:47-73).
[17] See, e.g., U.S. Department of Justice, National Institute of Justice, "From Juvenile Delinquency to Young Adult Offending," (March 10, 2014) (available at https://nij.ojp.gov/topics/articles/juvenile-delinquency-young-adult-offending) ("[R]esearchers concluded that young adult offenders ages 18-24 are more similar to juveniles than to adults with respect to their offending, maturation and life circumstances. Changes in legislation to deal with large numbers of juvenile offenders becoming adult criminals should be considered. One possibility is to raise the minimum age for referral to the adult court to 21 or 24, so that fewer offenders would be dealt with in the adult system.").
[18] See, e.g., U.S. Department of Justice, National Institute of Justice, From Juvenile Delinquency to Young Adult Offending, (March 10, 2014) (available at https://nij.ojp.gov/topics/articles/juvenile-delinquency-young-adult-offending) ("The prevalence of offending tends to increase from late childhood, peak in the teenage years (from 15 to 19) and then decline in the early 20s.") sentences.[19] These considerations undermine arguments for lengthy incarceration as being generally necessary for public safety.

More fundamentally, however, the revised statute recognizes the need for the District's criminal justice system to have a procedural mechanism to review in particular cases whether further incarceration continues to benefit public safety and serve the interests of justice after the person has served at least 15 years. This procedure helps ensure that criminal punishment decisions remain grounded in evidence and contemporary norms. As the American Law Institute (ALI)[20] recently stated in its recent recommendation for a judicial second look procedure after 15 years of time served,[21] such a policy: "is rooted in the belief that governments should be especially cautious in the use of their powers when imposing penalties that deprive offenders of their liberty for a substantial portion of their adult lives. The provision reflects a profound sense of humility that ought to operate when punishments are imposed that will reach nearly a generation into the future, or longer still. A second-look mechanism is meant to ensure that these sanctions remain intelligible and justifiable at a point in time far distant from their original imposition."[22] Finality is a key component of criminal justice system decisions. However, no sentencing regime in the United States is entirely determinate and determinate sentences "are least justifiable as they extend in length from months and years to decades."[23] [19] See, e.g., U.S. Sentencing Commission, The Effects of Aging on Recidivism Among Federal Offenders (December 2017).

---

[20] The American Law Institute is a longstanding national membership organization comprised of leading judges, legal scholars, and practitioners. In 2017, the ALI completed a multi-year review of model sentencing practices and issued new recommendations on second look procedures and other matters.

[21] Model Penal Code: Sentencing §305.6 (Am. Law Inst., Proposed Final Draft, 2017). This draft was approved by the ALI membership at the 2017 Annual Meeting, represents the Institute's position until the official text is published.

[22] Model Penal Code: Sentencing §305.6 cmt. a (Am. Law Inst., Proposed Final Draft 2017).

[23] Model Penal Code: Sentencing §305.6 cmt. b (Am. Law Inst., Proposed Final Draft 2017). See, also, id. ("The passage of many years can call forward every dimension of a criminal sentence for possible reevaluation. On proportionality grounds, societal assessments of offense gravity and offender blameworthiness sometimes shift over the course of a generation or comparable periods. In recent decades, for example, there has been flux in community attitudes toward many drug offenses, homosexual acts as criminal offenses, and even crime categories as grave as homicide, such as when a battered spouse kills an abusive husband, or cases of euthanasia and assisted suicide. Looking more deeply into the American past, witchcraft, heresy, adultery, the sale and consumption of alcohol, and the rendering of aid to fugitive slaves were all at one time thought to be serious offenses. It would be an error of arrogance and ahistoricism to believe that the criminal codes and sentencing laws of our era have been perfected to reflect only timeless values. The prospect of evolving norms, which might render a proportionate prison sentence of one time period disproportionate in the next, is a small worry for prison terms of two, three, or five years, but is of great concern when much longer confinement sentences are at issue. On utilitarian premises, lengthy sentences may also fail to age gracefully. Advancements in empirical knowledge may demonstrate that sentences thought to be well founded in one era were in fact misconceived. An optimist would expect this to be so. For example, research into assessment methods over the last two decades has yielded significant (and largely unforeseen) improvements. Projecting this trend forward, an individualized prediction of recidivism risk made today may not be congruent with the best prediction science 20 years from now. Similarly, with ongoing research and investment, new and effective rehabilitative or reintegrative interventions may be discovered for long-term inmates who previously were thought resistant to change. Proven and credible rehabilitative programming may become a pillar of deincarceration policy in the United States, as some contemporary advocates of "evidence-based sentencing" now expound. Twenty Uniquely, federal law blocks other potential mechanisms the District might use to evaluate the continued benefits to public safety and justice of incarceration after 15 years. Federal law has eliminated the District's Parole Board,[24] limits Bureau of Prisons (BOP) reductions in incarceration for good behavior to a maximum of 15%,[25] and deprives the Mayor of commutation and exoneration powers ordinarily available to the head of the Executive Branch.[26] Other jurisdictions do not confront these barriers, yet several have still implemented second look provisions in addition to other mechanisms for sentence review.[27] The revised statute bypasses these obstacles by expanding current law to provide a second look for all incarcerated persons who have served at least 15 years of their sentence.

District judges are trusted to decide initial sentences of incarceration, but they are not infallible and cannot see into the future. They must work with imperfect information about potential threats to public safety, the likelihood of rehabilitation, and ever-evolving public norms about the seriousness of criminal behavior.[28] The revised statute provides judges with an opportunity to reassess the continued justification for incarceration of an individual after 15 years of time served. This procedural mechanism helps ensure the ongoing proportionality of punishments in the District's criminal justice system.

---

years or more in the future, with sturdier empirical foundations, the perceived collapse of rehabilitation theory could be substantially reversed."

[24] National Capital Revitalization and Self-Government Improvement Act of 1997, Pub. L. No. 105-33, 111 Stat. 712 (1997) ("D.C. Revitalization Act"). The District of Columbia is one of only 16 American jurisdictions without a local parole opportunity of any kind. Other jurisdictions include: Arizona, Delaware, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Maine, Minnesota, New Mexico, North Carolina, Ohio, Oregon, Virginia, Washington, and Wisconsin. In addition, California has a parole system that is limited to life indeterminate life sentences. See Prison Policy Initiative, Failure should not be an option: Grading the parole systems of all 50 states, Appendix A, (2019), available at https://www.prisonpolicy.org/reports/parole_grades_table.html

[25] 18 U.S.C. 3624(b).

[26] The District's Mayor does have a limited power to pardon certain "offenses against the late corporation of Washington, the ordinances of Georgetown and the levy court, the laws enacted by the Legislative Assembly, and the police and building regulations of the District." D.C. Code Ann. § 1-301.76. However, the extent of Mayoral power to pardon does not reach the overwhelming majority of District crimes. See United States v. Cella, 37 App. D.C. 433, 435 (1911) ("crimes committed [in the District of Columbia] are crimes against the United States"); U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1 ("…he shall have Power to grant Reprieves and Pardons for Offenses against the United States").

[27] For further background information, see Advisory Group Memorandum #25–"Second Look" and Related Provisions in Other Jurisdictions.

[28] See also Michael Serota, Second Looks & Criminal Legislation, 17 Ohio St. J. Crim. L. 495, 519–22 (2020) (arguments in favor of second look procedural mechanisms from a retributive perspective).

RCC § 25-1001. Possession of an Open Container or Consumption of Alcohol in a Motor Vehicle.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the possession of an open container or consumption of alcohol in a motor vehicle offense and penalty for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The revised statute replaces D.C. Code § 25-1001 (Drinking of alcoholic beverage in public place prohibited; intoxication prohibited).

Paragraph (a)(1) specifies that a person must act at least knowingly. "Knowingly" is a defined term[1] and applied here means that the person must be practically certain that they are consuming or possessing an alcoholic beverage. The term "alcoholic beverage" is defined[2] and means a liquid or solid containing alcohol capable of being consumed by a human being. It does not include a liquid or solid containing less than one-half of 1% of alcohol by volume.[3]

Subparagraph (a)(2)(A) specifies that the first way of committing the offense is by consuming an alcoholic beverage. Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, a person must know—that is be practically certain—they are consuming an alcoholic beverage.[4]

Subparagraph (a)(2)(B) specifies that the second way of committing the offense is by possessing an alcoholic beverage in an open container.[5] "Possesses" is a defined term and includes both actual and constructive possession.[6] Constructive possession requires intent to exercise dominion and control over an object and to guide its destiny.[7] The term "open container" is defined and means "a bottle, can, or other container that is open or from which the top, cap, cork, seal, or tab seal has at some time been removed."[8] Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, a person must know—that is be practically certain—that the container contains an alcoholic beverage[9] and that the container is unsealed.[10]

Paragraph (a)(2) specifies that the possession or consumption of alcohol must occur in the passenger area of a motor vehicle on a public highway, or the right-of-way of a public highway. The term "passenger area" is undefined but is intended to have a meaning that

[1] "Knowingly" is defined in RCC § 22E-206.
[2] RCC § 22E-701.
[3] RCC § 22E-701; D.C. Code § 25-101(5); Reid v. District of Columbia, 980 A.2d 1131, 1133 (2009).
[4] For example, if a passenger surreptitiously spikes a driver's drink, the unknowing driver does not commit an offense.
[5] Possessing one or more open beverages on a single occasion constitutes a single offense.
[6] RCC § 22E-701.
[7] Guishard v. United States, 669 A.2d 1306, 1312 (D.C. 1995).
[8] D.C. Code § 25-101(35); see also Bean v. United States, 17 A.3d 635, 637 (D.C. 2011) (holding the definition is not unconstitutionally vague); but see D.C. Code § 25-113(b)(5) (permitting a licensed restaurant to reseal one bottle of wine per patron in a manner that it is visibly apparent if the container has been subsequently opened).
[9] There must be evidence that the alcohol bottle contains some liquid. See Workman v. United States, 96 A.3d 678, 681-82 (2014).
[10] See Robinson v. Gov't of the Dist. of Columbia, 234 F. Supp. 3d 14, 26 (D.D.C. 2017).

is consistent with federal regulations.[11] The term "motor vehicle" is defined in RCC § 22E-701 and the term "highway" is defined in 23 U.S.C. § 101(a). Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, a person must know—that is be practically certain—that the beverage is in the passenger area of the vehicle and that they are in the prohibited location.

Subsection (b) excludes liability for passengers in motor vehicles designed for commercial transportation of many passengers, such as a limousine, or a recreational vehicle.[12] This exclusion does not apply to passengers in other vehicles or to drivers. Subsection (b) specifies "in fact," a defined term in RCC § 22E-207 that indicates there is no culpable mental state requirement for a given element, here the requirements in subsection (b).

Subsection (c) specifies that attempted possession of an open container or consumption of alcohol in a motor vehicle is not an offense.

Subsection (d) provides the penalty for the revised offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.]

Subsection (e) cross-references applicable definitions in the RCC and the D.C. Code.

Subsection (f) specifies that Chapters 1 – 6 the RCC's General Part apply to this Title 7 offense.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised possession of an open container or consumption of alcohol in a motor vehicle offense clearly changes current District law in four main ways.

First, the revised statute does not criminalize possession of an open container outside of a motor vehicle. Current D.C. Code § 25-1001(4) makes it unlawful to possess an open container of alcohol in "[a]ny place to which the public is invited and for which a license to sell alcoholic beverages has not been issued…" The current statute provides exceptions for private residences and special events.[13] In Robinson v. Gov't of the Dist. of Columbia,[14] the court explained that the statute furthers a legitimate interest in proscribing public consumption of alcohol and public intoxication. However, the scope of the statutory language is not limited to possessing an open container with intent to consume its contents in public or with intent to become intoxicated in public. Rather, the language more broadly criminalizes any possession of an open container, including some conduct not commonly [11] See 23 U.S.C. § 154(a)(4). Under the Transportation Equity Act for the 21st Century (TEA-21), "Passenger area" is currently defined as the area designed to seat the driver and passengers while the motor vehicle is in operation and any area that is readily accessible to the driver or a passenger while in their seating positions, including the glove compartment. Vehicles without trunks may have an open alcoholic beverage container behind the last upright seat or in an area not normally occupied by the driver or passengers. A law that permits the possession of open alcoholic beverage containers in an unlocked glove compartment, however, will not conform to the requirements. An unlocked glove compartment is within the scope of the revised statute.

[12] See 23 U.S.C. § 154(b)(2).

[13] D.C. Code § 25-1001(b).

[14] 234 F. Supp. 3d 14, 26 (D.D.C. 2017).

considered criminal.[15] In contrast, the revised statute offense is limited to motor vehicles, where the danger of intoxication is so grave that mere access to alcohol warrants criminal punishment. Civil penalties may be warranted for individuals who possess an open container of alcohol in other locations.[16] Businesses that provide alcohol in open containers to a customer risk losing their license to sell or serve alcohol.[17] This change improves the proportionality[18] of the revised offenses.

Second, the revised code does not criminalize public intoxication.[19] Current D.C. Code § 25-1001(c) provides: "No person, whether in or on public or private property, shall be intoxicated and endanger the safety of himself, herself, or any other person or property." The term "intoxicated" is undefined in the current statute and District case law has not interpreted its meaning.[20] District case law has held that chronic alcoholism is a defense to public intoxication,[21] but has not defined the meaning of the phrase "chronic alcoholic."

---

[15] For example, carrying a bag full of half empty beers to a recycling bin in an alleyway or carrying a bottle of homemade sangria to a gathering at a friend's home. In contrast, the District does not arrest for public smoking of marijuana. See Martin Weil and Clarence Williams, D.C. arrests for marijuana use to result in citation, not custody, officials say, WASHINGTON POST (September 21, 2018).

[16] In contrast to cities that have fully legalized public drinking (e.g., Las Vegas, NV; New Orleans, LA; Sonoma, CA; Fort Worth, TX; Savannah, GA; Indianapolis, IN; Erie, PA; Butte, MT; Hood River, OR; Gulfport, MS), the revised code decriminalizes public possession of an open container of alcohol and intoxication without making any recommendation as to whether and what civil remedies should be promulgated and enforced.

[17] D.C. Code § 25-741.

[18] Drinking in a public place is a public order crime that carries significant collateral consequences and may disproportionately impact persons of color. An arrest for POCA, similar to the effects of possession of marijuana, may lead to discrimination in employment, housing, and education. See Report on Bill 20-409, the "Marijuana Possession Decriminalization Amendment Act of 2014," Council of the District of Columbia Committee on the Judiciary and Public Safety (January 15, 2014) at Page 5. It also may divert police resources away from investigating serious crime. Id. at Page 7. The direct and collateral consequences disproportionately impact low-income people and people of color. Racial Disparities in D.C. Policing: Descriptive Evidence From 2013-2017, American Civil Liberties Union of the District of Columbia (May 13, 2019) ("Because people in poverty are less likely to own property than wealthier individuals, they have fewer private places to congregate with friends. That makes members of low-income communities more likely to gather in public—and commit open container violations if they drink alcohol while doing so."); see also Joseph Goldstein, Sniff Test Does Not Prove Public Drinking, a Judge Rules, NEW YORK TIMES (June 14, 2012) (noting one study determined 85% of open-container charges were given to Black and Latino people and 4% given to White people in Brooklyn, NY). By comparison, 87% of POCA charges in D.C. Superior Court adult charges for POCA from 2009-2019 were for Black and 5% to white people. CCRC Advisory Group Memorandum #28, Statistics on District Adult Criminal Charges and Convictions, Appendix D (10-21-19).

[19] But see RCC § 22E-4201 (Disorderly Conduct), which punishes recklessly causing another person to reasonably believe that he or she is likely to suffer bodily injury, taking of property, or damage to property in a public place. The revised disorderly conduct statute does not reach conduct that occurs in private or behavior that only endangers a person's own bodily integrity or property. See also 36 CFR § 2.35(c) (prohibiting presence in a federal park area when under the influence of alcohol or a controlled substance to a degree that may endanger oneself or another person, or damage property or park resources).

[20] Title 50, Chapter 22 of the D.C. Code, concerning impaired operating or driving defines "intoxicated" to mean a specific blood alcohol content for persons over 21 years of age and any measurable blood alcohol content for persons under 21 years of age. See D.C. Code § 50-2206.01.

[21] Easter v. Dist. of Columbia, 361 F.2d 50, 53-55 (D.C. Cir. 1966) (explaining, "One who is a chronic alcoholic cannot have the mens rea necessary to be held responsible criminally for being drunk in public…[A] chronic alcoholic is in fact a sick person who has lost control over his use of alcoholic beverages…[T]o convict such a person of that crime would also offend the Eighth Amendment."); see also

In contrast, the revised statute eliminates criminal liability for any form of public intoxication, whether or not a person is a "chronic alcoholic." The District has long recognized the need of addressing public health issues through means other than criminalization.[22] Separate from D.C. Code § 25-1001(c), D.C. Code § 24-604 already provides that any person who is intoxicated in public may be (1) taken or sent to his home or to a public or private health facility; or (2) taken to a detoxification center.[23] Moreover, under D.C. Code § 25-781, a business that sells to an intoxicated person or a person who appears to be intoxicated, risks losing its license to sell or serve alcohol. This change improves the proportionality of the revised offenses.

Third, the revised statute provides specific exclusions from liability for passengers in commercial and certain other recreational and mass transit vehicles. D.C. Code § 25-1001(a)(2) prohibits possession of an open container in a "vehicle in or upon any street, alley, park, or parking area," without exception. Under current District law, a person who commissions a limousine or an event bus faces the same penalty for possession of an open container in that vehicle as a person who drives their own vehicle while drinking. In contrast, the revised offense does not punish drinking as a passenger in a commercial, recreational, or mass transit vehicle. This change allows persons with an open container of alcohol to hire a driver potentially providing a safe alternative to driving under the influence of alcohol.[24] This change improves the proportionality of the revised offenses.

Fourth, the revised statute specifies that the general provisions of Chapters 1 through 6 of Subtitle I of Title 22E of the D.C. Code apply to this offense. The current D.C. Code generally does not codify consistent definitions, rules of liability, rules of interpretation, or general defenses. In contrast, Subtitle I of Title 22E sets forth broadly

---

Anne E. Marimow, Court Strikes Down Virginia Law 'Criminalizing an Illness' In Targeting Homeless Alcoholics, THE WASHINGTON POST (July 17, 2019); compare Robinson v. California, 370 U.S. 660, 660 (1962) (holding that criminalizing the status of narcotics addiction as cruel and unusual punishment) with Powell v. State of Tex., 392 U.S. 514 (1968) (upholding a conviction for public drunkenness); Hicks v. Dist. of Columbia, 383 U.S. 252, 252 (1966) (J. Douglas, dissenting) (stating the District's vagrancy statute violates due process).

[22] See, e.g., D.C. Code § 24-601 ("all public officials in the District of Columbia shall take cognizance of the fact that public intoxication shall be handled as a public health problem rather than as a criminal offense, and that a chronic alcoholic is a sick person who needs, is entitled to, and shall be provided appropriate medical, psychiatric, institutional, advisory, and rehabilitative treatment services of the highest caliber for his illness."); Report on Bill 21-360, the "Neighborhood Engagement Achieves Results Amendment Act of 2016," Council of the District of Columbia Committee on the Judiciary (January 28, 2016) at Page 4 ("There has been a growing consensus in recent years that violence is a public health problem that can be best prevented by identifying and addressing its root causes and by improving access to social services and supports."). In Easter v. Dist. of Columbia, the D.C. Circuit cited legislative history in which the Council noted, "[A]nything more futile than this process of getting drunk, being arrested, receiving 10, 15, or 30-day sentences, going to the Jail and to the Workhouse serving time, going out and getting drunk again, can scarcely be imagined." 361 F.2d 50, App. B (D.C. Cir. 1966) (noting "[T]he average person arrested for intoxication during that test period had a record of 12 prior arrests for the same offense…the best evidence that existing procedures are failing to rehabilitate the alcoholic.").

[23] D.C. Code § 25-1001(d) includes a cross-reference to this provision.

[24] Notably, nonprofit organization Mothers Against Drunk Driving has not actively supported public consumption laws, adding "We're concerned about [open-container laws] for vehicles." Emile Shire, Drunk on Power: It's Time to Ditch America's Idiotic Open-Container Laws, THE DAILY BEAST (April 14, 2017).

applicable rules and definitions relating to the basic requirements of criminal liability, inchoate liability, justification defenses, and penalty enhancements. Application of these general provisions to the possession of an open container or consumption of alcohol in a motor vehicle offense may change District law in numerous ways. For more in-depth discussion of these general provisions, see commentary accompanying statutory provisions in Subtitle I of Title 22E. These changes improve the clarity, completeness, and proportionality of the revised offense.

Beyond these four changes to current District law, one other aspect of the revised statute may constitute a substantive change to current District law.

The revised statute applies a standardized definition for the "knowingly" culpable mental state required for possession of an open container or consumption of alcohol in a motor vehicle liability. The current statute does not specify a requisite mental state,[25] however, the United States District Court for the District of Columbia has construed the law to require knowledge implicitly.[26] Furthermore, District case law generally requires knowledge for actual or constructive possession of any item.[27] The revised statute uses the RCC's general provisions that define "knowingly" and specify that culpable mental states apply until the occurrence of a new culpable mental state in the offense.[28] These changes clarify and improve the consistency of District statutes.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

The revised code defines "possession" in its general part.[29] The D.C. Code does not codify a definition of possession, although it is an element of several property, drug, and weapon offenses. Instead, parties rely on District case law concerning what evidence is or is not sufficient to establish that the accused actually or constructively or jointly possessed an unlawful item.[30] The RCC definition of "possession,"[31] with the requirement in the offense that the possession be "knowing,"[32] matches the meaning of possession in current DCCA case law.[33] The RCC definition of possession improves the consistency of possessory elements throughout revised statutes.

---

[25] D.C. Code § 25-1001.
[26] Robinson v. Gov't of the Dist. of Columbia, 234 F. Supp. 3d 14, 26 (D.D.C. 2017) (explaining the individual must know the container he possesses contains an alcoholic beverage, know the container is unsealed, and know he is standing in a public space while in possession of that container).
[27] See, e.g., Campos v. United States, 617 A.2d 185, 187-88 (D.C. 1992); United States v. Joseph, 892 F.2d 118, 125 (D.C. Cir. 1989); Thompson v. United States, 567 A.2d 907, 908 (D.C. 1989); Easley v. United States, 482 A.2d 779, 781 (D.C. 1984).
[28] RCC § 22E-207.
[29] RCC § 22E-202.
[30] See Criminal Jury Instructions for the District of Columbia Instruction 3.104 (2018).
[31] RCC § 22E-701.
[32] RCC § 22E-206.
[33] See United States v. Hubbard, 429 A.2d 1334, 1338 (D.C. 1981) ("Actual possession has been defined as the ability of a person to knowingly exercise direct physical custody or control over the property in question. See United States v. Spears, 145 U.S.App.D.C. 284, 293, 449 F.2d 946, 955 (1971); Spencer v.

United States, 73 U.S.App.D.C. 98, 99, 116 F.2d 801, 802 (1940)."); see also Rivas v. United States, 783 A.2d 125, 128 (D.C. 2001) (en banc) ("[I]n…constructive possession cases, there must be something more in the totality of the circumstances–a word or deed, a relationship or other probative factor–that, considered in conjunction with the evidence of proximity and knowledge, proves beyond a reasonable doubt that the passenger intended to exercise dominion or control over the drugs, and was not a mere bystander." (Emphasis in original.)); Guishard v. United States, 669 A.2d 1306, 1312 (D.C. 1995) ("To obtain a conviction based on a theory of constructive possession, the government must prove that the defendant knew of the location of the contraband, that he had the ability to exercise dominion and control over it, and that he 'intended to guide [its] destiny.' Speight v. United States, 599 A.2d 794, 796 (D.C.1991); In re T.M., 577 A.2d 1149, 1151–1152 n. 5 (D.C.1990); Bernard v. United States, 575 A.2d 1191, 1195-1196 (D.C.1990).").

RCC § 48-904.01a. Possession of a Controlled Substance.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the possession of a controlled substance offense and penalty gradations for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The offense criminalizes knowingly possessing a controlled substance. The offense is divided into two penalty gradations which are based on the type of controlled substance possessed by the actor. The revised possession of a controlled substance statute replaces D.C. Code § 48-904.01(d), the applicable language of the attempt and conspiracy penalty provision,[1] and the applicable language of the repeat offender penalty enhancement statute.[2]

Subsection (a) specifies the elements of first degree possession of a controlled substance. Paragraph (a)(1) specifies that the person must knowingly possess a measurable quantity of a controlled substance. A measurable quantity is a quantity that is capable of being measured or quantified. Trace amounts of a controlled substance are insufficient to satisfy this element.[3] "Possess" is a term defined in RCC § 22E-701, to mean to "hold or carry on one's person," or to "have the ability and desire to exercise control over." The term "controlled substance" is defined under D.C. Code § 48-901.02, and includes a broad array of substances organized into five different schedules. Paragraph (a)(1) also specifies that a "knowingly" culpable mental state applies, a term defined in RCC § 22E-206, which here requires that the accused was practically certain that he or she possessed a controlled substance. It is not required that the accused knew which specific controlled substance he or she possessed. This element may be satisfied by showing that the accused was practically certain that he or she possessed any controlled substance.

Paragraph (a)(2) requires that the controlled substance that the accused possessed was, in fact, one of the eight substances referenced in subparagraphs (a)(2)(A)-(H). Subparagraph (a)(2) uses the term "in fact" to specify that there is no culpable mental state as to whether the substance was one of the substances referenced in (a)(2)(A)-(H).

Subsection (b) specifies the elements of second degree possession of a controlled substance. The elements of second degree possession of a controlled substance are identical to those for first degree possession of a controlled substance, except that it is not required that the person possessed one of the eight substances listed in subparagraphs (a)(2)(A)-(H). Second degree possession of a controlled substance only requires that the person knowingly possessed any controlled substance.

Subsection (c) provides two exclusions from liability under subsections (a) and (b). Paragraph (c)(1) specifies it is an exclusion to liability if a person possesses a controlled substance that was obtained directly from, or pursuant to, a valid prescription or order of a practitioner, or if the possession is otherwise authorized by Chapter 9 of Title 48 or Chapter 16B of Title 7. Paragraph (c)(2) specifies that it is an exclusion to liability that the actor satisfied the requirements under D.C. Code § 7-403.

---

[1] D.C. Code § 48-904.09.
[2] D.C. Code § 48-904.08.
[3] Thomas v. United States, 650 A.2d 183, 196 (D.C. 1994); see also Price v. United States, 746 A.2d 896 (D.C. 2000) (discussing means of proving that the defendant possessed a measurable quantity of a controlled substance).

Subsection (d) specifies relevant penalties for the offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.]

Subsection (e) cross-references applicable definitions located elsewhere in Chapter 9 of Title 48 and in the RCC.

Subsection (f) specifies that that the general provisions of Chapters 1 through 6 of Subtitle I of Title 22 of the D.C. Code apply to this offense.

Subsection (g) specifies procedures by which a judge may dismiss or defer proceedings. Paragraph (g)(1) provides that when a person is convicted of possession of a controlled substance, "the court may, without entering a judgment of guilty and with the consent of the person, defer further proceedings and place the person on probation upon such reasonable conditions as it may require and for such period, not to exceed one year, as the court may prescribe." Under paragraph (g)(1), if the person violates a condition of probation, the court "may enter an adjudication of guilt and proceed as otherwise provided." If the person does not violate probation, paragraph (g)(1) provides for dismissal of the proceedings, and once the period of probation expires, paragraph (g)(1) states that "the court shall discharge such person and dismiss the proceedings against the person." Under paragraph (g)(1), such a dismissal "shall not be deemed a conviction for purposes of disqualifications or disabilities imposed by law upon conviction of a crime," including recidivist penalties such as under D.C. Code § 48-904.08. Under paragraph (g)(1), a judge may defer and dismiss proceedings, even if the defendant has previously had a case dismissed, or has been convicted of any other offense under this chapter, or of any offense under the laws of the United States or any state relating to narcotic or abusive drugs or depressant or stimulant substances.

Paragraph (g)(2) states that upon discharge of the proceedings under paragraph (g)(1), the person may apply to the court for an order to expunge "from all official records all recordation relating to the person's arrest, indictment or information, trial, finding of guilty, and dismissal and discharge pursuant to this subsection." If the court determines, the person or her discharged, paragraph (g)(2) provides that "it shall enter such order." Further, under paragraph (g)(2), "No person as to whom such order has been entered shall be held thereafter under any provision of any law to be guilty of perjury or otherwise giving a false statement by reason of failure to recite or acknowledge such arrest, or indictment, or trial in response to any inquiry made of the person for any purpose."

Relation to Current District Law. The revised possession of a controlled substance offense changes current District law in four main ways.

First, the revised possession of a controlled substance offense changes current District law by dividing the offense into two penalty grades based on whether the controlled substance is an abusive or narcotic drug. The current D.C. Code possession of controlled substance offense is divided into two penalty grades based on whether the controlled substance is phencyclidine (commonly known as "PCP") in liquid form[4] as compared to any other drug. In contrast, in the revised offense, first degree possession of a controlled substance requires possession of one of the substances enumerated in subparagraphs (a)(2)(A)-(H), and second degree possession of a controlled substance requires possession of any controlled substance. In the revised offense first degree possession of a controlled substance includes possession of phencyclidine, but does not provide any heightened penalty for possession of phencyclidine in liquid form. Grading possession based on whether the controlled substance is an abusive or narcotic drug uses the same standards (based on the potential harm of the drug) as in the current and RCC offenses of distribution and possession with intent to distribute. There is no clear rationale for why, at present, the possession of any quantity of liquid phencyclidine, alone, merits categorically more severe penalties[5] than all other controlled substances.[6] This change improves the proportionality and consistency of revised statutes.

[4] D.C. Code § 48-904.01(d)(2).

Second, the RCC possession of a controlled substance offense treats attempt or conspiracy consistent with other revised offenses. Under the current D.C. Code, the elements that must be proven to establish liability for attempts or conspiracies to commit a controlled substance offense are not specified, although both are subject to the same maximum penalty as applicable to the offense which was the object of the attempt or conspiracy.[7] In contrast, under the RCC attempt or conspiracy to commit a controlled substance offense will be determined by the general provisions relating to attempt[8] and conspiracy[9] liability which specify the relevant elements and provide a penalty of one-half the maximum punishment applicable to that offense. There is no clear rationale for why, at present, attempt or conspiracy to commit controlled substance offenses should be treated differently from other offenses. This change improves the proportionality and consistency of revised statutes.

Third, the RCC possession of a controlled substance offense eliminates repeat offender penalty enhancements consistent with other nonviolent revised offenses. Under the current D.C. Code, a person who has been previously convicted of any controlled substance offense under Chapter 48, under any statute of the United States, or any state,

---

[5] Under current District law, possession of any quantity of liquid phencyclidine is subject to a 3 year imprisonment penalty as compared to a maximum of 180 days for all other controlled substances—a penalty six times as severe. D.C. Code § 48-904.01(d).

[6] The legislative history to the "Liquid PCP Possession Amendment Act" provides two rationales for the increased penalty for possession of phencyclidine in liquid form: 1) the Committee report says that PCP "more frequently engenders violent and bizarre behavior, combined with a sense of invulnerability, than happens with other drugs"; and 2) PCP in liquid form is the typical medium for distribution, even in small quantities. The report says that illegal drugs are usually distributed and consumed in similar form, but that is not the case with PCP which typically is distributed is a liquid but is not consumed in that form. The legislative history makes clear that the bill "should not be viewed as a bill to punish users" and that the enhanced penalty is that the enhanced penalty is intended to "address the fight against PCP . . . by going after distributors." Committee on Public Safety and the Judiciary Report on the Liquid PCP Possession Amendment Act, April 13, 2010, at 5-6. However, to the extent that the intent of the bill was to punish distributors, and PCP is typically distributed, but not consumed, in liquid form, it is unclear why penalties for possession of liquid PCP should be increased. If PCP in liquid form is highly probative of intent to distribute, then the RCC trafficking of a controlled substance should adequately provide for heightened penalties above those applicable for simple possession.

[7] D.C. Code § 48-904.09.

[8] RCC § 22E-301.

[9] RCC 22E-303.

upon conviction of a subsequent controlled substance offense may be imprisoned up to twice the term otherwise authorized, fined an amount up to twice that otherwise authorized, or both.[10] In contrast, the revised code eliminates a drug offense-specific repeat offender provision. The RCC general recidivism enhancement (RCC § 22E-606) is limited to RCC offenses against persons and enhanced burglary, which requires the presence of a dangerous weapon or imitation firearm. This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised criminal code.

Fourth, subsection (g), which provides for a deferral or dismissal, gives the court discretion to defer sentencing regardless of whether the defendant has a prior conviction for a drug offense. Under current law, a judge may not defer or dismiss proceedings if the defendant previously had a case dismissed under § 48-904 (e)(1), or if the defendant has ever been convicted of an offense under Chapter 9 or Title 48, or of any offense under the law of the United States or any other state relating to narcotic or abusive drugs, or depressant or stimulant substances. By contrast, under RCC subsection (g), a judge may still defer and dismiss proceedings, even if the defendant has previously had a case dismissed, or if the defendant has prior convictions for controlled substance offenses in another jurisdiction. Due to the addictive nature of many controlled substances, persons may repeatedly be charged and convicted of possession of a controlled substance. This change will provide trial judges with broader discretion to dismiss proceedings when appropriate, even if the defendant has prior convictions, or has had other cases dismissed. This change improves the proportionality of the revised criminal code.

Beyond these four substantive changes to current District law, one other aspect of the revised possession of a controlled substance statute may be constitute a substantive change to current District law.

The revised statute specifies that the general provisions of Chapters 1 through 6 of Subtitle I of Title 22 of the D.C. Code apply to this offense. The current D.C. Code generally does not codify consistent definitions, rules of liability, rules of interpretation, or general defenses. In contrast, Subtitle I of Title 22E sets forth broadly applicable rules and definitions relating to the basic requirements of criminal liability, inchoate liability, justification defenses, and penalty enhancements. Application of these general provisions to the possession of a controlled substance offense may change District law in numerous ways. For more in depth discussion of these general provisions, see commentary accompanying statutory provisions in Subtitle I of Title 22E. These changes improve the clarity, completeness, and proportionality of the revised offense.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

First, the revised statute requires that the accused possess a "measurable amount" of a controlled substance. Although the current statute does not specify that the accused must possess a measurable amount, the D.C. Court of Appeals (DCCA) has held that the offense requires possession of a "measurable amount" of a controlled substance.[11] This language is intended to codify current DCCA case law which requires that the accused possesses a measurable amount of a controlled substance.

[10] D.C. Code § 48-904.08.

Second, the exclusion to liability under subsection (c) does not reference D.C. Code § 48-1201. The current statutory provision criminalizing possession of a controlled substance refers to § 48-1201. However, omitting this reference is not intended to change current District law, or in any way change the applicability of § 48-1201.

[11] Thomas v. United States, 650 A.2d 183, 196 (D.C. 1994); see also Price v. United States, 746 A.2d 896 (D.C. 2000) (discussing means of proving that the defendant possessed a measurable quantity of a controlled substance).

RCC § 48-904.01b. Trafficking of a Controlled Substance.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the trafficking of a controlled substance offense and penalty gradations for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The offense criminalizes knowingly distributing, manufacturing, or possessing with intent to distribute or manufacture a controlled substance. The offense is divided into five penalty gradations based on the type and quantity of controlled substance involved in the offense. The revised trafficking of a controlled substance statute replaces portions of the District's current controlled substance prohibited acts statute,[1] the distribution to minors statute,[2] enlistment of minors statute,[3] the drug free zones statute,[4] the attempt and conspiracy penalty provision,[5] the repeat offender penalty enhancement statute,[6] part of the statute criminalizing possession of a firearm or imitation firearm during a dangerous crime,[7] and the additional penalty for committing crime when armed statute.[8]

Subsection (a) specifies the elements of first degree trafficking of a controlled substance. Paragraph (a)(1) requires that the person knowingly distributes, manufactures, or possesses with intent to distribute or manufacture, a measurable quantity of a controlled substance. A measurable quantity is a quantity that is capable of being measured or quantified. Trace amounts of a controlled substance are insufficient to satisfy this element.[9] "Possess" is a term defined in RCC § 22E-701, to mean to "hold or carry on one's person," or to "have the ability and desire to exercise control over." The term "distribute" is defined in D.C. Code § 48-901.01, and means "the actual, constructive, or attempted transfer from one person to another other than by administering or dispensing of a controlled substance, whether or not there is an agency relationship."[10] The term "manufacture" is defined in D.C. Code § 48-901.02, and means "the production, preparation, propagation, compounding, conversion or processing of a controlled substance either directly or indirectly by extraction from substances of natural origin, or independently by means of chemical synthesis, or by a combination of extraction and chemical synthesis[.]" The term "controlled substance" is defined under D.C. Code § 48-901.01, and includes a broad array of substances organized into five different schedules.

Paragraph (a)(1) specifies that a culpable mental state of knowledge applies, a term defined in RCC § 22E-206 to mean that the accused was practically certain that he or she would distribute or manufacture a controlled substance. It is not required that the accused knew which specific controlled substance he or she would distribute or manufacture. This

[1] D.C. Code § 48-904.01(a)(1).
[2] D.C. Code § 48-904.06.
[3] D.C. Code § 48-904.07.
[4] D.C. Code § 48-904.07a.
[5] D.C. Code § 48-904.09.
[6] D.C. Code § 48-904.08.
[7] D.C. Code § 22-4504 (b).
[8] D.C. Code § 22-4502.
[9] Thomas v. United States, 650 A.2d 183, 196 (D.C. 1994); see also Price v. United States, 746 A.2d 896 (D.C. 2000) (discussing means of proving that the defendant possessed a measurable quantity of a controlled substance).
[10] The terms "administering" and "dispensing" are also defined in D.C. Code § 48-901.02.

element may be satisfied by showing that the accused was practically certain that he or she distributed or manufactured any controlled substance. Alternatively, a person commits trafficking in a controlled substance if he or she knowingly possesses a controlled substance with intent to distribute or manufacture a controlled substance. Again, it is not required that the accused knew which specific controlled substance he or she possessed with intent to distribute or manufacture. The term "intent" is defined in RCC § 22E-206, which here requires that the person was practically certain that he or she would distribute or manufacture a controlled substance. Per RCC § 22E-205, the object of the phrase "with intent that" is not an objective element that requires separate proof—only the person's culpable mental state must be proven regarding the object of this phrase. It is not necessary to prove that the actor actually distributed or manufactured a controlled substance, only that the actor believed to a practical certainty that he or she would distribute or manufacture a controlled substance.

Paragraph (a)(2) requires that the controlled substance is, in fact, one of the substances listed in subparagraphs (a)(2)(A)-(H). Subparagraphs (a)(2)(A)-(H) also require a minimum quantity for each substance. The elements in subparagraphs (a)(2)(A)-(H) can be satisfied if the offense involved the minimum quantity of a mixture that contains the specified substance.[11] "In fact," a defined term in RCC § 22E-207, is used to indicate that there is no culpable mental state requirement as to the type or quantity of substance involved in the offense.

Subsection (b) specifies the elements of second degree trafficking in a controlled substance. The elements of second degree trafficking in a controlled substance are identical to the elements of first degree trafficking in a controlled substance, except that the minimum required quantity for each specified controlled substance in subparagraphs (b)(2)(A)-(H) are lower than those required for first degree trafficking.

Subsection (c) specifies the elements of third degree trafficking in a controlled substance. The elements of third degree trafficking in a controlled substance are identical to the elements of first degree trafficking in a controlled substance, except that there is no minimum quantity required for each specified controlled substance in subparagraphs (c)(2)(A)-(H). Third degree trafficking only requires that the actor distributes, manufactures, or possesses with intent to distribute or manufacture, a measurable quantity of a compound or mixture containing of the substances listed in subparagraphs (c)(2)(A)-(H).

Subsection (d) specifies the elements of fourth degree trafficking in a controlled substance. The elements of fourth degree trafficking in a controlled substance are identical to the elements of first degree trafficking in a controlled substance, except that the offense requires that the actor distributes, manufactures, or possesses with intent to distribute or manufacture any controlled substance that is, in fact, under schedule I, II, or III, as defined in Subchapter II of this Chapter 9 of Title 48. "In fact," a defined term in RCC § 22E-207, is used to indicate that there is no culpable mental state requirement as to whether the controlled substance is included in schedules I, II, or III.

[11] For example, under subparagraph (a)(2)(D), it is not required that the person distribute, manufacture, or possess X grams of pure cocaine. This element is satisfied if the defendant distributed cocaine mixed with an adulterant, if the entire mixture weighs more than X grams.

Subsection (e) specifies the elements of fifth degree trafficking in a controlled substance. The elements of fifth degree trafficking in a controlled substance are identical to the elements of first degree trafficking in a controlled substance, except that the offense requires that the actor distributes, manufactures, or possesses with intent to distribute or manufacture any controlled substance.

Subsection (f) allows for the aggregation of quantities for the purposes of offense grading when a single scheme or systematic course of conduct could give rise to multiple trafficking of a controlled substance charges. The aggregation provision only applies when the multiple charges could arise from trafficking the same type of controlled substance. The government may not aggregate quantities of two different controlled substances to determine the grade of the offense.

Subsection (g) specifies rules for edible products and non-consumable containers in determining the weight of compounds or mixtures containing controlled substances. Paragraph (g)(1) specifies that when a controlled substance is contained within an edible product, the weight of the inert edible mixture will not be included in determining the weight of the compound or mixture containing a controlled substance. Paragraph (g)(2) specifies that the weight of non-consumable containers in which a substance is stores shall not be included in the weight of the compound or mixture containing the controlled substance.[12]

Subsection (h) specifies relevant penalties for the offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.] Paragraph (g)(6) provides for enhanced penalties for each grade of the offense. If the government proves at least one of the elements listed under subparagraphs (h)(6)(A)-(C), the penalty classification for each offense may be increased in severity by one penalty class. This penalty enhancement may be applied in addition to any penalty enhancements authorized by RCC Chapter 6.

Subparagraph (h)(6)(A) codifies a penalty enhancement if the actor was, in fact, over the age of 21, and distributed a controlled substance to a person with recklessness as to the fact that the person is under the age of 18. This enhancement requires that the actor was aware of a substantial risk that the controlled substance would be distributed to a person under the age of 18. This enhancement does not apply if an actor distributes a controlled substance to an adult who subsequently distributes the substance to a person under the age of 18, unless the actor knew that the adult was going to transfer the substance to the other person, and the actor was at least reckless as to the fact that other person was under the age of 18.

Subparagraph (h)(6)(B) codifies a penalty enhancement if the actor distributes or possesses with intent to distribute a controlled substance while knowingly possessing, either on the actor's person or in a location where it is readily available, a firearm, imitation firearm, or dangerous weapon. "Possess" is a term defined in RCC § 22E-701, to mean to "hold or carry on one's person," or to "have the ability and desire to exercise control over." However, not all constructive possession suffices, as the penalty enhancement further requires that the item be "on the actor's person or in a location where it is readily available." An item is in a location where it is readily available if it is in "close proximity or easily accessible during the commission of the offense."[13] The term "firearm" is defined in RCC § 22E-701 to have the same meaning as under D.C. Code § 7-2501.01.[14] The term "imitation firearm" is defined in RCC § 22E-701, and means "any instrument that resembles an actual firearm closely enough that a person observing it might reasonably believe it to be real." The term "dangerous weapon" is defined in RCC § 22E-701, and includes an array of specified weapons, as well as "[a]ny object or substance, other than a body part, that in the manner of its actual, attempted, or threatened use is likely to cause death or serious bodily injury to a person." Subparagraph (g)(6)(B) specifies that a culpable mental state of knowledge applies, a term defined in RCC § 22E-206 that, applied here, means the accused was practically certain that he or she possessed on his or her person, or in a location where it is readily available, an imitation firearm or dangerous weapon. In addition, the possession of the firearm, imitation firearm, or dangerous weapon must occur during, and be in furtherance of the offense. Incidental possession that occurs during commission of the offense is insufficient. The "in furtherance" language is adapted from 18 U.S.C. § 924, which authorizes enhanced penalties for possessing a firearm in furtherance of a drug trafficking offense.[15] It is not required that the actor actually displayed or used the firearm, imitation firearm, or dangerous weapon, but the imitation firearm or weapon must at least facilitate commission of the offense in some manner.[16]

[12] For example, if a cigarette is dipped in liquid PCP, the weight of the tobacco containing the liquid PCP may be included in the weight of the compound or mixture. However, if some of the liquid PCP also soaks into the cigarette box, the weight of the box would not be included in the weight.

Subparagraph (h)(6)(C) codifies as a penalty enhancement that the actor was, in fact, 21 years of age or older, and engages in the conduct constituting the offense by enlisting, hiring, contracting, or encouraging any person to sell or distribute any controlled substance for the profit or benefit of the actor, reckless as to the person being under the age of 18. This enhancement requires that the actor was aware of a substantial risk that the person enlisted, hired, contracted, or encouraged to sell or distribute a controlled substance is under the age of 18. A person may be liable for committing an offense under this section based on the conduct of another if the actor satisfies either the requirements for accomplice

[13] Clyburn v. United States, 48 A.3d 147, 153–54 (D.C. 2012) (interpreting the meaning of the term "readily available" as used in D.C. Code § 22-4502 (a)).

[14] However, the term "firearm" as used in the RCC "shall not include a firearm frame or receiver; [s]hall not include a firearm muffler or silencer; and [s]hall include operable antique pistols."

[15] 18 U.S.C. § 924 (c)(1)(A). See, Charles Doyle, Congressional Research Service, Mandatory Minimum Sentencing of Federal Drug Offenses, January 11, 2018, at 8 (discussing the "in furtherance" requirement under 18 U.S.C. § 94, and federal courts' holdings regarding factors that are relevant in determining whether possession of firearm was in furtherance of predicate drug offense).

[16] For example, if a person sells a controlled substance while armed with a firearm, with intent to use the firearm if someone attempts to take the controlled substances from him without payment, the penalty enhancement would apply even if the person never actually uses or displays the firearm.

liability[17], or liability for causing crime by an innocent or irresponsible party.[18] If an actor commits trafficking of a controlled substance under either of these theories of liability, reckless that the person enlisted, hired, etc. is under the age of 18, this penalty enhancement applies.

Subparagraph (h)(6)(D) codifies a penalty enhancement if the person commits the offense in a location that is, in fact, within 300 feet of a school, college, university, public swimming pool, public playground, public recreation center, public library, or children's day care center, that displays clear and conspicuous signage which indicates controlled substances are prohibited or the location is a drug free zone. This enhancement applies if the offense occurs within 300 feet of the building or grounds, or within the building or grounds. The term "in fact" specifies that there is no culpable mental state as to whether the person committed the offense while in the specified location.

Subsection (i) specifies two defenses to prosecution under this section. Under paragraph (i)(1), it is a defense that the person distributes or possesses with intent to distribute a controlled substance, but such distribution or possession with intent to distribute is not in exchange for something of value or future expectation of financial gain from distribution of a controlled substance. In addition, paragraph (i)(1) requires that either the quantity of the substance distributed does not exceed the amount for a single use by the recipient, or the recipient plans to immediately use the controlled substance. This defense generally applies to sharing or giving away controlled substances for free,[19] rather than substances distributed in exchange for anything of value, which includes services, satisfaction of debt, or promises of future payment or services. However, even when sharing or giving away controlled substances for free, the defense is not available if such action was taken with future expectation of financial gain from distribution of a controlled substance.[20] Paragraph (i)(1) uses the term "in fact" to specify that there is no culpable mental state required as to the elements of the defense.

Under paragraph (i)(2), it is a defense to that the person manufactured, or possessed with intent to manufacture, a controlled substance by packaging, repackaging, labeling, or relabeling a controlled substance for his or her own personal use. It is also a defense to prosecution for possession with intent to manufacture that the person possessed a controlled substance with intent to package, repackage, label, or re-label the substance for one of the purposes specified in paragraph (h)(2). Under this defense, packaging, repackaging, labeling, or relabeling a controlled substance for personal use, or possessing

---

[17] RCC § 22E-210.

[18] RCC § 22E-211. Although this enhancement does not require any culpable mental state as to enlisting, hiring, contracting, or encouraging any person to sell or distribute a controlled substance, liability still requires that the actor satisfy the mens rea requirements for accomplice liability under RCC § 22E-210 or causing crime by an innocent or irresponsible party.

[19] For example, an actor who shares a controlled substance with his or her spouse or a friend, without receiving anything of value in return and having no future expectation of receiving something of value in return, may claim this defense. However, a person successfully raising this defense likely would still be liable for committing a lesser crime—possession of a controlled substance.

[20] For example, an actor would not be able to claim this defense who distributes free "samples" of a controlled substance for marketing purposes or to create addiction in a population, which is expected to end up yielding the actor some sort of financial gain from drug distribution.

a controlled substance with intent to package, repackage, label, or relabel it for personal use does not constitute a violation of this section.[21] Per the rules of interpretation in RCC § 22E-207, the term "in fact" also applies to this paragraph, and there is no culpable mental state required as to the elements of this defense.

Subsection (j) cross-references applicable definitions located elsewhere in the RCC.

Subsection (k) specifies that the general provisions of Chapters 1 through 6 of Subtitle I of Title 22 of the D.C. Code apply to this offense.

Relation to Current District Law. The trafficking of a controlled substance statute changes current law in nine main ways.

First, the revised offense grades, in part, based on the weight of the controlled substance involved in the offense. The current D.C. Code statute only provides for different penalties based on the type of controlled substance, but not the weight. The current statute provides for a maximum 30-year sentence if the offense involves a schedule I or II drug that is an "abusive" or "narcotic" drug, regardless of the quantity. In contrast, under the revised statute, the first and second grades of the offense each require a minimum quantity for each specified controlled substance. In addition, under subsection (f), when a single scheme or course of conduct could give rise to multiple charges of trafficking of a controlled substance, the government may bring one charge and aggregate the quantity of the controlled substances involved in the scheme or course of conduct. This change improves the proportionality of the revised statute.

Second, the revised statute authorizes the same penalties when the offense involves controlled substances under Schedules IV or V. The current D.C. Code statute provides for different maximum penalties based on whether the actor committed the offense with respect to a controlled substance under Schedule IV or V.[22] In contrast, under the revised statute, fifth degree trafficking of a controlled substance includes committing the offense with respect to substances included in Schedules IV and V. The difference in potential harmfulness between schedule IV and V drugs appears to be quite minor. This change improves the proportionality of the revised statute.

Third, the revised statute includes a defense if the person distributes or possesses with intent to distribute a controlled substance but does not do so in exchange for something of value or future expectation of financial gain from distribution of a controlled substance. Under the current D.C. Code, a person commits distribution of a controlled substance regardless of whether the controlled substance was distributed in exchange for anything of value.[23] Consequently, non-commercial transfers of a controlled substance between two people such as gifting and sharing are subject to liability.[24] In contrast, the revised statute provides a defense if the actor distributed or possessed with intent to distribute a controlled substance, but did not do so in exchange for anything of value or future expectation of receiving something of value. However, both the person distributing and the recipient of such a transaction likely would still be liable for a lesser possessory offense.[25] This change improves the proportionality of the revised statute.

[21] For example, a person who packages cocaine in a bag for his own use later in time has technically "manufactured" a controlled substance as the term is defined. Under this defense, this conduct would not constitute a violation of this section. However, a person successfully raising this defense likely would still be liable for committing a lesser crime—possession of a controlled substance.
[22] D.C. Code § 48-904.01 (a)(2)(C), (D).
[23] Durham v. United States, 743 A.2d 196, 201 (D.C. 1999) ("The prosecutor need not prove that a sale took place").

Fourth, the revised statute includes a defense if the person packages, repackages, labels or relabels a controlled substance for his or her own personal use, or possesses a controlled substance with intent to do so. Under the current D.C. Code, a person commits manufacturing of a controlled substance regardless of the purpose for packaging, repackaging, labeling, or relabeling of a controlled substance. Consequently, a person who packages a controlled substance for his or her own use is subject to liability. In contrast, the revised statute provides a defense if the actor packaged, repackaged, labeled, or relabeled a controlled substance for his or her personal use. It is also a defense to prosecution for possession with intent to manufacture that the person possessed a controlled substance with intent to package, repackage, label, or relabel a substance for one the purposes specified in paragraph (h)(2). However, the person would still be liable for a lesser possessory offense.[26] This change improves the proportionality of the revised statute.

Fifth, the RCC trafficking of a controlled substance offense treats attempt or conspiracy consistent with other revised offenses. Under the current D.C. Code, the elements that must be proven to establish liability for attempts or conspiracies to commit a controlled substance offense are not specified, although both are subject to the same maximum penalty as applicable to the offense which was the object of the attempt or conspiracy.[27] In contrast, under the RCC, penalties for attempt or conspiracy to commit a controlled substance offense will be determined by the general provisions relating to attempt[28] and conspiracy[29] liability which specify the relevant elements and provide a penalty of one-half the maximum punishment applicable to that offense. There is no clear rationale for why, at present, attempt or conspiracy to commit controlled substance offenses should be treated differently from other offenses. This change improves the proportionality and consistency of revised statute.

Sixth, the RCC trafficking of a controlled substance offense eliminates repeat offender penalty enhancements consistent with other nonviolent revised offenses. Under the current D.C. Code, a person who has been previously convicted of any controlled substance offense under Chapter 48, under any statute of the United States, or any state, upon conviction of a subsequent controlled substance offense may be imprisoned up to [24] See Wright v. United States, 588 A.2d 260, 262 (D.C. 1991) ("Appellant testified that he possessed drugs when arrested which he intended to share with his companion. Such evidence proves possession with intent to distribute.").

[25] RCC § 48-904.01a.
[26] RCC § 48-904.01a.
[27] D.C. Code § 48-904.09.
[28] RCC § 22E-301.
[29] RCC 22E-303.

twice the term otherwise authorized, fined an amount up to twice that otherwise authorized, or both.[30] In contrast, the revised code omits a drug-offense specific repeat offender provision. The RCC general recidivism enhancement (RCC § 22E-606) is limited to RCC offenses against persons and enhanced burglary, which requires the presence of a dangerous weapon or imitation firearm. This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised statute.

Seventh, the RCC limits the area around schools and other specified locations that are subject to a penalty enhancement, and eliminates public housing and "video arcade[s]" altogether as specified locations. Under the current D.C. Code, drug free zones extend to all areas within 1,000 feet of any designated location, including all day care centers (public or private), schools, playgrounds, libraries, public housing, and video arcades.[31] In contrast, the revised statute applies a penalty enhancement only if the offense occurs within 100 feet of a designated location, which does not categorically include public housing or video arcades. While heightened penalties are warranted for committing trafficking of a controlled substance on or near locations where youth gather, 1,000 feet appears to be an excessive distance. In an urban jurisdiction like the District, a 1,000 foot radius around every playground, school, etc. listed in the current drug free zone statute leaves almost no location in the District in an unenhanced location.[32] In addition to considerably expanding the zones where there are enhanced penalties, categorically raising penalties in areas of public housing (as opposed to private housing) raises concerns about equitable treatment under the law. This change improves the proportionality of the revised statute.

Eighth, the RCC includes a penalty enhancement only if the person commits an offense while possessing on one's person or having readily available, a firearm, imitation firearm, or other dangerous weapon, and such possession is in furtherance of the offense. The current D.C. Code "while armed" enhancement in § 22-4502[33] and the separate [31] Drug free zones include "[a]ll areas within 1000 feet of an appropriately identified public or private day care center, elementary school, vocational school, secondary school, junior college, college, or university, or any public swimming pool, playground, video arcade, youth center, or public library, or in and around public housing, as defined in section 3(1) of the United States Housing Act of 1937, approved August 22, 1974 (88 Stat. 654; 42 U.S.C. § 1437a(b)), the development or administration of which is assisted by Department of Housing and Urban Development, or in or around housing that is owned, operated, or financially assisted by the District of Columbia Housing Authority, or an event sponsored by any of the above entities shall be declared a drug free zone." D.C. Code § 48-904.07a.

---

[30] D.C. Code § 48-904.08.

[32] See, Judith Greene, Kevin Prains, Jason Ziedenberg, Justice Policy Institute. Disparity by Design: How drug-free zone laws impact racial disparity – and fail to protect youth. March, 2006. This report notes that the New Jersey Sentencing Commission concluded that under New Jersey's drug free zone laws, "urban areas where schools, parks, and public housing developments are numerous and closely spaced, overlapping zones turn entire communities into prohibited zones – erasing the very distinction between school and non-school areas that the law was intended to create." Id. at 4. For example, drug free zones covered 76 percent of Newark, and over half of Camden and Jersey City. Id. at 26. A partial map of District schools and other locations which comprise the District's gun-free zone (locations nearly identical to those listed in the drug-free zone) was compiled by the Crime Prevention Research Institute. See https://crimeresearch.org/2017/10/dcs-gun-free-zone-problem-regulations-effectively-ban-anyone-legally-carrying-gun/ (last visited June 25, 2019).

[33] D.C. Code § 22-4502 authorizes additional penalty for "Any person who commits a crime of violence, or a dangerous crime in the District of Columbia when armed with or having readily available any pistol or criminal offense of "possessing a firearm during a crime of violence or dangerous crime" in § 22-4504[34] provide substantially increased penalties and liability for distribution, or possession with intent to distribute a controlled substance. D.C. Code § 22-4502 authorizes an enhanced penalty for distributing of or possessing with intent to distribute a controlled substance[35] "when armed with or having readily available any pistol or other firearm (or imitation thereof) or other dangerous weapon[.]" D.C. Code § 22-4504 criminalizes possession of a firearm or imitation firearm while committing a dangerous crime. Under § 22-4504, there is no requirement that the firearm or imitation firearm be in proximity to the person at the time of the offense, or that the firearm or imitation firearm had any relationship to the offense.[36] However, neither D.C. Code § 22-4502 nor D.C. Code § 22-4504 has a statutory requirement that the dangerous weapon or imitation firearm had any relationship to the offense. There is no DCCA case law as to whether coincidental possession of a dangerous weapon or imitation firearm during drug distribution or possession with intent to distribute would be sufficient for increased liability under 22-4502 or 22-4504.[37] In addition, both the penalty enhancement under § 22-4502, and the separate criminal offense under § 22-4504 may apply to a single act or course of conduct.[38] other firearm (or imitation thereof) or other dangerous or deadly weapon (including a sawed-off shotgun, shotgun, machine gun, rifle, stun gun, dirk, bowie knife, butcher knife, switchblade knife, razor, blackjack, billy, or metallic or other false knuckles)[.]" The term "dangerous crime" is defined under D.C. Code § 22-4501 (2), as "distribution of or possession with intent to distribute a controlled substance. For the purposes of this definition, the term 'controlled substance' means any substance defined as such in the District of Columbia Official Code or any Act of Congress."

---

[34] D.C. Code § 22-4504 (b) states "No person shall within the District of Columbia possess a pistol, machine gun, shotgun, rifle, or any other firearm or imitation firearm while committing a crime of violence or dangerous crime as defined in § 22-4501. Upon conviction of a violation of this subsection, the person may be sentenced to imprisonment for a term not to exceed 15 years and shall be sentenced to imprisonment for a mandatory-minimum term of not less than 5 years and shall not be released on parole, or granted probation or suspension of sentence, prior to serving the mandatory-minimum sentence." The term "dangerous crime" is defined under D.C. Code § 22-4501 (2), as "distribution of or possession with intent to distribute a controlled substance. For the purposes of this definition, the term 'controlled substance' means any substance defined as such in the District of Columbia Official Code or any Act of Congress."

[35] The penalty enhancement under D.C. Code § 22-4502 applies to "crimes of violence" and "dangerous crimes." D.C. Code § 22-4501 defines "dangerous crime" as "distribution of or possession with intent to distribute a controlled substance."

[36] D.C. Code § 22-4504 could apply if a person distributes a controlled substance while constructively possessing a firearm or switchblade knife in his home located miles away, even if the weapon was inaccessible and played no role in commission of the offense

[37] But see, Easley v. United States, 482 A.2d 779 (D.C. 1984) (holding that when determining whether an actor was aware of a firearm, as required for constructive possession, a criminal venture is only relevant if there was a connection between the firearm and the criminal venture).

[38] Hawkins v. United States, 119 A.3d 687, 702 (D.C. 2015) (citing Thomas v. United States, 602 A.2d 647 (D.C.1992)). The penalty for distribution of, or possession with intent, to distribute a controlled substance that is an abusive or narcotic drug is 30 years. D.C. Code § 48-904.01. If the person commits this offense while possessing a firearm, the person may be subject to an additional 30 years, with a 5 year mandatory minimum, under the while armed enhancement in § 22-4502, and an additional 15 years, with a 5 year mandatory minimum under § 22-4504. In total, a person who distributes, or possesses with intent to distribute an abusive or narcotic drug while possessing a firearm is subject to a maximum of 75 years imprisonment, including two separate 5 year mandatory minimums. The 75 year maximum sentence

In contrast, the revised statute includes a single penalty enhancement for involvement of a firearm, imitation firearm, or dangerous weapon, clearly requires a connection between the possession of a firearm, imitation firearm, or dangerous weapon and the drug crime, and does not provide enhanced liability for an imitation firearm or dangerous weapon that is not readily available to the actor at the time of the drug crime. This penalty enhancement changes current District law in three main ways. First, the revised enhancement does not treat firearms more severely as compared to other dangerous weapons or imitation weapons, and does not provide for stacking the enhancement with a duplicative crime of possessing a weapon during commission of a drug crime. This change caps the effect of a dangerous weapon or imitation dangerous weapon being possessed during the controlled substance offense to an increase of one penalty class as compared with an increase of up to 45 years.[39] Second, the revised enhancement requires that the person possessed the firearm, dangerous weapon, or imitation firearm while committing and in furtherance of the drug offense. This change requires, as in comparable federal legislation,[40] proof of some nexus between possession of a firearm, imitation firearm, or dangerous weapon and the controlled substance offense, which excludes coincidental possession.[41] Third, the revised statute does not provide an enhancement for constructively possessing a firearm, dangerous weapon, or imitation firearm that isn't readily available to the actor, contrary to D.C. Code § 22-4504(b).[42] These latter two changes eliminate an enhancement for trafficking a controlled substance when there is not a substantially increased risk of harm during the offense due to possession of the firearm, dangerous weapon, or imitation dangerous weapon.[43] These changes improve the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statute.

---

exceeds the maximum sentence for first degree murder, absent aggravating circumstances. D.C. Code § 22-2104.

[39] Under D.C. Code 22-4502 a person convicted of a crime of violence or dangerous crime while armed with or having readily available a firearm or dangerous weapon may sentenced to a maximum of 30 years in addition to the penalty provided for the crime of violence or dangerous crime. D.C. Code § 22-4504 provides a separate criminal offense for possessing a firearm or imitation firearm while committing a crime of violence or dangerous crime, subject to a maximum 15-year sentence.

[40] See generally, Charles Doyle, Congressional Research Service, Mandatory Minimum Sentencing of Federal Drug Offenses, January 11, 2018.

[41] For example, if a person distributes a controlled substance while possessing a 7 inch chef's knife with intent to use the knife as a weapon if someone attempts to take the controlled substances from him without payment, the penalty enhancement would apply. However, a person who distributes a controlled substance in a kitchen while incidentally in close proximity to a 7 inch chef's knife would not be subject to this penalty enhancement.

[42] The scope of the revised enhancement—"readily available"—matches the breadth of current D.C. Code § 22-4502, but is narrower than D.C. Code § 22-4504(b), which applies to any constructive possession. Compare, Guishard v. United States, 669 A.2d 1306, 1312 (D.C. 1995) (firearm in dresser in the same room as defendant was "readily accessible"), with Moore v. United States, 927 A.2d 1040, 1050 (D.C. 2007) (holding that evidence of constructively possession was sufficient when firearm found in defendant's apartment, while defendant was outside the apartment sitting in a car).

[43] An actor who constructively possesses a dangerous weapon in furtherance of a drug crime may still be liable for one or more separate weapon offenses under the RCC. See RCC § 22E-XXXX [Weapon crimes] and accompanying commentary for more details.

Ninth, the trafficking of a controlled substance statute does not include a separate penalty for first time offenders who distribute or possess with intent to distribute ½ pound or less of marijuana. Under the current statute, distributing or possessing with intent to distribute marijuana is subject to a 5 year maximum sentence. However, if the offense involved ½ pound or less of marijuana, and the person had not been previously convicted of the offense, the maximum sentence is 180 days. In contrast, the revised trafficking of a controlled substance statute does not provide a separate penalty for first time offenders trafficking ½ pound or less of marijuana. Violations of this statute involving marijuana constitutes fourth degree trafficking of a controlled substance, and is subject to the penalty specified in paragraph (g)(4).[44] This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Beyond these nine substantive changes to current District law, three other aspects of the revised trafficking of controlled substances statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised statute caps the increased penalties an actor may be subject to for different types of penalty enhancements. The current D.C. Code provides separate penalty enhancements in the current distribution to minors statute[45], the drug free zone statute[46], and portions of the while armed enhancement statute.[47] However, the D.C. Code is silent as to whether or how these different penalty enhancements may be stacked, and there is no relevant D.C. Court of Appeals (DCCA) case law. The revised statute resolves this ambiguity by specifying that only one of the enhancements may apply.[48] This change improves the clarity and proportionality of the revised statutes.

Second, the revised statute specifies that the general provisions of Chapters 1 through 6 of Subtitle I of Title 22 of the D.C. Code apply to this offense. The current D.C. Code generally does not codify consistent definitions, rules of liability, rules of interpretation, or general defenses. In contrast, Subtitle I of Title 22E sets forth broadly applicable rules and definitions relating to the basic requirements of criminal liability, inchoate liability, justification defenses, and penalty enhancements. Application of these general provisions to the possession of a controlled substance offense may change District law in numerous ways. For more in depth discussion of these general provisions, see commentary accompanying statutory provisions in Subtitle I of Title 22E. These changes improve the clarity, completeness, and proportionality of the revised offense.

Third, the penalty enhancement under paragraph (h)(6)(C) requires that the actor encourages, hires, contracts, or encourages a person to sell or distribute a controlled substance, and was reckless as to the person being under the age of 18. This penalty enhancement is intended to replace current D.C. Code § 48-904.07, which criminalizes

[44] The exact effect of this change is unclear at this time, as penalties have not been determined for the trafficking offense.
[45] D.C. Code 48-904.06.
[46] D.C. Code § 48-904.07a.
[47] D.C. Code § 22-4502.
[48] For example, a person who sells a controlled substance to a minor while in a drug free zone would only be subject to an increase in penalty severity of one class.

enlistment of minors to distribute a controlled substance. Although D.C. Code § 48-904.07 does not specify a culpable mental state, the D.C. Court of Appeals (DCCA) has held that current statute does not require knowledge as to the age of the person enlisted to distribute a controlled substance.[49] However, the DCCA has not directly held that strict liability is sufficient, or if any other culpable mental state is required as to the enlisted person's age. By contrast, the revised statute's penalty enhancement requires that the actor was reckless as to the fact that the enlisted person was under the age of 18. Applying a penalty enhancement when the actor was not aware of a substantial risk that the enlisted person was under the age of 18 is disproportionately severe.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

First, the revised statute specifies particular controlled substances rather than rely on the defined terms "abusive" or "narcotic" drugs to list those controlled substances. The current statute provides different maximum penalties based on the type of controlled substance involved in the offense. The highest penalty is reserved for offenses committed "with respect to . . . A controlled substance classified in Schedule I or II that is a narcotic or abusive drug[.]"[50] The terms "abusive drug" and "narcotic drug" are defined in the current D.C. Code, and include an array of controlled substances.[51] The revised statute does not use the terms "abusive drug" or "narcotic drug," but the first three grades of the offense enumerate all of the substances that are defined as "abusive" or "narcotic" under current law.

Second, the revised statute requires that the person distributes, manufactures, or possesses a "measurable quantity" of a controlled substance. Although the current statute does not require any minimum quantity of controlled substance, the DCCA has clearly held that the current statute requires distribution, manufacture, or possession of a measurable quantity of a controlled substance.[52]

Third, the revised trafficking in controlled substance statute does not include exceptions for offenses committed with respect to marijuana. This is not intended to change current District law. The revised definition of the term "controlled substance" includes all of the exceptions that are recognized under current law with respect to possession, distribution, and manufacturing of marijuana.[53]

[49] Outlaw v. United States, 604 A.2d 873, 876 (D.C. 1992).
[50] D.C. Code § 48-904.01 (a)(2)(A).
[51] D.C. Code § 48-901.02.
[52] Thomas v. United States, 650 A.2d 183, 184 (D.C. 1994).
[53] The revised trafficking of a controlled substance statute is also consistent with the DCCA's holding in Sims v. United States, 17-CM-1137 (D.C. 2021).

RCC § 48-904.01c. Trafficking of a Counterfeit Substance.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the trafficking a counterfeit substance offense and penalty gradations for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The offense criminalizes knowingly distributing, creating, or possessing with intent to distribute a counterfeit substance. The offense is divided into five penalty gradations which are based on the type and quantity of counterfeit substance. The revised trafficking a counterfeit substance statute replaces portions of the District's current controlled substance prohibited acts statute,[1] the attempt and conspiracy penalty provision,[2] and the repeat offender penalty enhancement statute.[3]

Subsection (a) specifies the elements of first degree trafficking of a counterfeit substance. Paragraph (a)(1) requires that the accused knowingly distributes, creates, or possesses with intent to distribute, a measurable quantity of a counterfeit substance. A measurable quantity means a quantity that is capable of being measured or quantified. Trace amounts of a controlled substance are insufficient to satisfy this element.[4] "Possess" is a term defined in RCC § 22E-701, to mean to "hold or carry on one's person," or to "have the ability and desire to exercise control over." The term "distribute" is defined in D.C. Code § 48-901.02, and means "the actual, constructive, or attempted transfer from one person to another other than by administering or dispensing of a controlled substance, whether or not there is an agency relationship." The term "creates" is intended to have the same meaning as under current law. The term "counterfeit substance" is defined under D.C. Code § 48-901.02, and means "a controlled substance which, or the container or labeling of which, without authorization, bears the trademark, trade name, or other identifying mark, imprint, number or device, or any likeness thereof, of a manufacturer, distributor, or dispenser other than the person who in fact manufactured, distributed, or dispensed the substance."

Paragraph (a)(1) specifies that a culpable mental state of knowledge applies, a term defined in RCC § 22E-206 that, applied here, means that the accused was practically certain that he or she would distribute or create a counterfeit substance. It is not required that the accused knew which specific counterfeit substance he or she would distribute or create. This element may be satisfied by showing that the accused was practically certain that he or she distributed or created any counterfeit substance. Alternatively, a person commits trafficking in a counterfeit substance if he or she knowingly possesses a counterfeit substance with intent to distribute the counterfeit substance. The term "intent" is defined in RCC § 22E-206 and, applied here, requires that the accused was practically certain that he or she would distribute a counterfeit substance. Per RCC § 22E-205, the object of the phrase "with intent that" is not an objective element that requires separate

[1] D.C. Code § 48-904.01(d).
[2] D.C. Code § 48-904.09.
[3] D.C. Code § 48-904.08.
[4] Thomas v. United States, 650 A.2d 183, 196 (D.C. 1994); see also Price v. United States, 746 A.2d 896 (D.C. 2000) (discussing means of proving that the defendant possessed a measurable quantity of a controlled substance).

proof—only the actor's culpable mental state must be proven regarding the object of this phrase. It is not necessary to prove that the actor actually distributed a counterfeit substance, only that the actor believed to a practical certainty that he or she would distribute a counterfeit substance.

Paragraph (a)(2) requires that the counterfeit substance is, in fact, one of the substances listed in subparagraphs (a)(2)(A)-(H). Subparagraphs (a)(2)(A)-(H) also require a minimum quantity for each substance. The elements in subparagraphs (a)(2)(A)-(H) can be satisfied if the offense involved the minimum quantity of a mixture that contains the specified substance.[5] "In fact," a defined term in RCC § 22E-207, is used to indicate that there is no culpable mental state requirement as to the type or quantity of substance involved in the offense.

Subsection (b) specifies the elements of second degree trafficking in a counterfeit substance. The elements of second degree trafficking in a counterfeit substance are identical to the elements of first degree trafficking in a counterfeit substance, except that the minimum required quantity for each specified controlled substance in subparagraphs (b)(2)(A)-(H) are lower than those required for first degree trafficking.

Subsection (c) specifies the elements of third degree trafficking in a counterfeit substance. The elements of third degree trafficking in a counterfeit substance are identical to the elements of first degree trafficking in a counterfeit substance, except that there is no minimum quantity required for each specified counterfeit substance in subparagraphs (c)(2)(A)-(H). Third degree trafficking only requires that the actor distributes, creates, or possesses with intent to distribute, a measurable quantity of a compound or mixture containing one of the substances listed in subparagraphs (c)(2)(A)-(H).

Subsection (d) specifies the elements of fourth degree trafficking in a counterfeit substance. The elements of fourth degree trafficking in a controlled substance are identical to the elements of first degree trafficking in a controlled substance, except that the offense requires that the actor distributes, creates, or possesses with intent to a distribute any counterfeit substance that is, in fact, a controlled substance under schedule I, II, or III, as defined in Subchapter II of Chapter 9 of Title 48. "In fact," a defined term in RCC § 22E-207, is used to indicate that there is no culpable mental state requirement as to whether the substance is included in schedules I, II, or III.

Subsection (e) specifies the elements of fifth degree trafficking in a counterfeit substance. The elements of fifth degree trafficking in a counterfeit substance are identical to the elements of first degree trafficking in a counterfeit substance, except that the offense requires that the actor distributes, creates, or possesses with intent to a distribute any counterfeit substance.

Subsection (f) allows for the aggregation of quantities for the purposes of offense grading when a single scheme or systematic course of conduct could give rise to multiple trafficking of a counterfeit substance charges. The aggregation provision only applies when the multiple charges could arise from trafficking the same type of counterfeit substance. The government may not aggregate quantities of two different counterfeit substances to determine the grade of the offense.

[5] For example, under subparagraph (a)(2)(D), it is not required that the person distribute, manufacture, or possess X grams of pure cocaine. This element is satisfied if the defendant distributed cocaine mixed with an adulterant, if there were more than X grams of the entire mixture.

Subsection (g) specifies rules for edible products and non-consumable containers in determining the weight of compounds or mixtures containing counterfeit controlled substances. Paragraph (g)(1) specifies that when a counterfeit controlled substance is contained within an edible product, the weight of the inert edible mixture will not be included in determining the weight of the compound or mixture containing a controlled substance. Paragraph (g)(2) specifies that the weight of non-consumable containers in which a substance is stores shall not be included in the weight of the compound or mixture containing the counterfeit controlled substance.[6]

Subsection (h) specifies relevant penalties for the offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.]

Paragraph (h)(6) codifies a penalty enhancement if the actor distributes or possesses with intent to distribute a counterfeit substance while knowingly possessing, either on the actor's person or in a location where it is readily available, a firearm, imitation firearm, or dangerous weapon. "Possess" is a term defined in RCC § 22E-701, to mean to "hold or carry on one's person," or to "have the ability and desire to exercise control over." However, not all constructive possession suffices, as the penalty enhancement further requires that the item be "on the actor's person or in a location where it is readily available." An item is in a location where it is readily available if it is in "close proximity or easily accessible during the commission of the offense."[7] The term "firearm" is defined in RCC § 22E-701 to have the same meaning as under D.C. Code § 7-2501.01.[8] The term "imitation firearm" is defined in RCC § 22E-701, and means "any instrument that resembles an actual firearm closely enough that a person observing it might reasonably believe it to be real." The term "dangerous weapon" is defined in RCC § 22E-701, and includes an array of specified weapons, as well as "[a]ny object or substance, other than a body part, that in the manner of its actual, attempted, or threatened use is likely to cause death or serious bodily injury to a person." Paragraph (h)(6) specifies that a culpable mental state of knowledge applies, a term defined in RCC § 22E-206 that, applied here, means the accused was practically certain that he or she possessed on his or her person, or in a location where it is readily available, an imitation firearm or dangerous weapon. In addition, the possession of the firearm, imitation firearm, or dangerous weapon must occur during, and be in furtherance of the offense. Incidental possession that occurs during commission of the offense is insufficient. The "in furtherance" language is adapted from 18 U.S.C. § 924, which authorizes enhanced penalties for possessing a firearm in

[6] For example, if a cigarette is dipped in liquid PCP, the weight of the tobacco containing the liquid PCP may be included in the weight of the compound or mixture. However, if some of the liquid PCP also soaks into the cigarette box, the weight of the box would not be included in the weight.

[7] Clyburn v. United States, 48 A.3d 147, 153–54 (D.C. 2012) (interpreting the meaning of the term "readily available" as used in D.C. Code § 22-4502 (a)).

[8] However, the term "firearm" as used in the RCC "shall not include a firearm frame or receiver; [s]hall not include a firearm muffler or silencer; and [s]hall include operable antique pistols."

furtherance of a drug trafficking offense.[9] It is not required that the actor actually displayed or used the firearm, imitation firearm, or dangerous weapon, but the imitation firearm or weapon must facilitate commission of the offense in some manner.[10]

Subsection (i) cross-references applicable definitions located elsewhere in Chapter 9 of Title 48 and in the RCC.

Subsection (j) specifies that that the general provisions of Chapters 1 through 6 of Subtitle I of Title 22 of the D.C. Code apply to this offense.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised trafficking in counterfeit substances statute changes current law in five main ways.

First, the first three grades of the revised offense are based on the quantity of the counterfeit substance. The current statute only provides for different penalties based on the type of substance, but not the quantity. The current statute provides for a maximum 30 year sentence if the offense involves a schedule I or II drug that is an "abusive" or "narcotic" drug, regardless of the quantity. In contrast, under the revised statute, the first and second grades of the offense each require a minimum quantity for each specified controlled substance. In addition, when a single scheme or course of conduct could give rise to multiple trafficking of a counterfeit substance charges, bring one charge and aggregate the quantity of the counterfeit substances involved in the scheme or course of conduct. This change improves the proportionality of the revised statute.

Second, the revised statute authorizes the same penalties when the offense involves counterfeit substances under Schedules IV or V. The current statute provides for different maximum penalties based on whether the actor committed the offense with respect to substances under Schedule IV or V.[11] In contrast, under the revised statute, fifth degree trafficking of a counterfeit substance includes committing the offense with respect to substances included in Schedules IV and V. The difference in potential harmfulness between schedule IV and V drugs appears to be quite minor.[12] This change improves the proportionality of the revised statute.

Third, the RCC trafficking of a counterfeit substance offense treats attempt or conspiracy consistent with other revised offenses. Under the current D.C. Code, the elements that must be proven to establish liability for attempts or conspiracies to commit a controlled substance offense are not specified, although both are subject to the same maximum penalty as applicable to the offense which was the object of the attempt or conspiracy.[13] In contrast, under the RCC, penalties for attempt or conspiracy to commit a [9] 18 U.S.C. § 924 (c)(1)(A).

[10] For example, if a person sells a controlled substance while armed with a firearm, with intent to use the firearm if someone attempts to take the controlled substances from him without payment, the penalty enhancement would apply even if the person never actually uses or displays the firearm.
[11] D.C. Code § 48-904.01 (a)(2)(C), (D).
[12] The current D.C. Code provides tests for determining which substances should be categorized into each schedule. The tests for schedules IV and V are require a "low potential for abuse," and "limited physical dependence or psychological dependence" if the substance is abused. D.C. Code §§ 48-902.03, 48-902.05, 48-902.07, 48-902.09, 48-902.11.
[13] D.C. Code § 48-904.09.

controlled substance offense will be determined by the general provisions relating to attempt[14] and conspiracy[15] liability which specify the relevant elements and provide a penalty of one-half the maximum punishment applicable to that offense. There is no clear rationale for why, at present, attempt or conspiracy to commit controlled substance offenses should be treated differently from other offenses. This change improves the proportionality and consistency of revised statute.

Fourth, the RCC trafficking of a controlled substance offense eliminates repeat offender penalty enhancements consistent with other nonviolent revised offenses. Under current law, a person who has been previously convicted of any controlled substance offense under Chapter 48, under any statute of the United States, or any state, upon conviction of a subsequent controlled substance offense may be imprisoned up to twice the term otherwise authorized, fined an amount up to twice that otherwise authorized, or both.[16] In contrast, the revised code omits a drug-offense specific repeat offender provision. The RCC general recidivism enhancement (RCC § 22E-606) is limited to RCC offenses against persons and enhanced burglary, which requires the presence of a dangerous weapon or imitation firearm. This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised statute.

Fifth, the RCC includes a penalty enhancement only if the person commits the offense while possessing on one's person or having readily available, a firearm, imitation firearm, or other dangerous weapon, and such possession is in furtherance of and while committing the offense. The current D.C. Code "while armed" enhancement in § 22-4502[17] and the separate criminal offense of "possessing a firearm during a crime of violence or dangerous crime" in § 22-4504[18] provide substantially increased penalties and liability for distribution, or possession with intent to distribute a counterfeit substance. D.C. Code § 22-4502 authorizes an enhanced penalty for distributing of or possessing with

[14] RCC § 22E-301.
[15] RCC 22E-303.
[16] D.C. Code § 48-904.08.
[17] D.C. Code § 22-4502 authorizes additional penalty for "Any person who commits a crime of violence, or a dangerous crime in the District of Columbia when armed with or having readily available any pistol or other firearm (or imitation thereof) or other dangerous or deadly weapon (including a sawed-off shotgun, shotgun, machine gun, rifle, stun gun, dirk, bowie knife, butcher knife, switchblade knife, razor, blackjack, billy, or metallic or other false knuckles)[.]" The term "dangerous crime" is defined under D.C. Code § 22-4501 (2), as "distribution of or possession with intent to distribute a controlled substance. For the purposes of this definition, the term 'controlled substance' means any substance defined as such in the District of Columbia Official Code or any Act of Congress." As defined in D.C. Code § 48-901.02 (5), "counterfeit substances" are controlled substances.
[18] D.C. Code § 22-4504 (b) states "No person shall within the District of Columbia possess a pistol, machine gun, shotgun, rifle, or any other firearm or imitation firearm while committing a crime of violence or dangerous crime as defined in § 22-4501. Upon conviction of a violation of this subsection, the person may be sentenced to imprisonment for a term not to exceed 15 years and shall be sentenced to imprisonment for a mandatory-minimum term of not less than 5 years and shall not be released on parole, or granted probation or suspension of sentence, prior to serving the mandatory-minimum sentence." The term "dangerous crime" is defined under D.C. Code § 22-4501 (2), as "distribution of or possession with intent to distribute a controlled substance. For the purposes of this definition, the term 'controlled substance' means any substance defined as such in the District of Columbia Official Code or any Act of Congress." As defined in D.C. Code § 48-901.02 (5), "counterfeit substances" are controlled substances.

intent to distribute a counterfeit substance[19] "when armed with or having readily available any pistol or other firearm (or imitation thereof) or other dangerous weapon[.]" D.C. Code § 22-4504 criminalizes possession of a firearm or imitation firearm while committing a dangerous crime. Under § 22-4504, there is no requirement that the firearm or imitation firearm be in proximity to the person at the time of the offense, or that the firearm or imitation firearm had any relationship to the offense.[20] However, neither D.C. Code § 22-4502 nor D.C. Code § 22-4504 has a statutory requirement that the dangerous weapon or imitation firearm had any relationship to the offense. There is no DCCA case law as to whether coincidental possession of a dangerous weapon or imitation firearm during drug distribution or possession with intent to distribute would be sufficient for increased liability under 22-4502 or 22-4504.[21] In addition, both the penalty enhancement under § 22-4502, and the separate criminal offense under § 22-4504 may apply to a single act or course of conduct.[22]

In contrast, the revised statute includes a single penalty enhancement for involvement of a firearm, imitation firearm, or dangerous weapon, clearly requires a connection between the possession of a firearm, imitation firearm, or dangerous weapon and the drug crime, and does not provide enhanced liability for an imitation firearm or dangerous weapon that is not readily available to the actor at the time of the drug crime. This penalty enhancement changes current District law in three main ways. First, the revised enhancement does not treat firearms more severely as compared to other dangerous weapons or imitation weapons, and does not provide for stacking the enhancement with a duplicative crime of possessing a weapon during commission of a drug crime. This change caps the effect of a dangerous weapon or imitation dangerous weapon being possessed during the counterfeit substance offense to an increase of one penalty class as compared with an increase of up to 45 years.[23] Second, the revised enhancement requires that the

[19] The penalty enhancement under D.C. Code § 22-4502 applies to "crimes of violence" and "dangerous crimes." D.C. Code § 22-4501 defines "dangerous crime" as "distribution of or possession with intent to distribute a controlled substance."

[20] D.C. Code § 22-4504 could apply if a person distributes a controlled substance while constructively possessing a firearm or switchblade knife in his home located miles away, even if the weapon was inaccessible and played no role in commission of the offense

[21] But see, Easley v. United States, 482 A.2d 779 (D.C. 1984) (holding that when determining whether an actor was aware of a firearm, as required for constructive possession, a criminal venture is only relevant if there was a connection between the firearm and the criminal venture).

[22] Hawkins v. United States, 119 A.3d 687, 702 (D.C. 2015) (citing Thomas v. United States, 602 A.2d 647 (D.C.1992)). The penalty for distribution of, or possession with intent, to distribute a counterfeit substance that is an abusive or narcotic drug is 30 years. D.C. Code § 48-904.01. If the person commits this offense while possessing a firearm, the person may be subject to an additional 30 years, with a 5 year mandatory minimum, under the while armed enhancement in § 22-4502, and an additional 15 years, with a 5 year mandatory minimum under § 22-4504. In total, a person who distributes, or possesses with intent to distribute a counterfeit substance that is an abusive or narcotic drug while possessing a firearm is subject to a maximum of 75 years imprisonment, including two separate 5 year mandatory minimums. The 75 year maximum sentence exceeds the maximum sentence for first degree murder, absent aggravating circumstances. D.C. Code § 22-2104.

[23] Under D.C. Code 22-4502 a person convicted of a crime of violence or dangerous crime while armed with or having readily available a firearm or dangerous weapon may sentenced to a maximum of 30 years in addition to the penalty provided for the crime of violence or dangerous crime. D.C. Code § 22-4504 person possessed the firearm, dangerous weapon, or imitation firearm while committing and in furtherance of the drug offense. This change requires, as in comparable federal legislation,[24] proof of some nexus between possession of a firearm, imitation firearm, or dangerous weapon and the counterfeit substance offense, which excludes coincidental possession.[25] Third, the revised statute does not provide an enhancement for constructively possessing a firearm, dangerous weapon, or imitation firearm that isn't readily available to the actor, contrary to D.C. Code § 22-4504(b).[26] These latter two changes eliminate an enhancement for trafficking a controlled substance when there is not a substantially increased risk of harm during the offense due to possession of the firearm, dangerous weapon, or imitation dangerous weapon.[27] These changes improve the clarity, consistency, and proportionality of the revised statute.

Beyond these five substantive changes to current District law, two other aspects of the revised trafficking of counterfeit substances statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised statute specifies that the actor must knowingly distribute, create, or possesses a counterfeit substance. The current statute does not specify any culpable mental state, there is no relevant DCCA case law, and there is no Redbook Jury Instruction that specifically applies to the counterfeit substance offense. One means of committing the current offense is to "possess with intent to distribute a counterfeit substance,"[28] but it is not clear whether this culpable mental state applies to other elements of the offense, and the phrase "with the intent" is not defined in the statute. Applying a knowledge requirement to statutory elements that distinguish innocent from criminal behavior is a well-established practice in American jurisprudence.[29] Specifying a culpable mental state provides a separate criminal offense for possessing a firearm or imitation firearm while committing a crime of violence or dangerous crime, subject to a maximum 15 year sentence.

[24] See generally, Charles Doyle, Congressional Research Service, Mandatory Minimum Sentencing of Federal Drug Offenses, January 11, 2018.

[25] For example, if a person distributes a controlled substance while possessing a 7 inch chef's knife with intent to use the knife as a weapon if someone attempts to take the controlled substances from him without payment, the penalty enhancement would apply. However, a person who distributes a controlled substance in a kitchen while incidentally in close proximity to a 7 inch chef's knife would not be subject to this penalty enhancement.

[26] The scope of the revised enhancement—"readily available"—matches the breadth of current D.C. Code § 22-4502, but is narrower than D.C. Code § 22-4504(b), which applies to any constructive possession. Compare, Guishard v. United States, 669 A.2d 1306, 1312 (D.C. 1995) (firearm in dresser in the same room as defendant was "readily accessible"), with Moore v. United States, 927 A.2d 1040, 1050 (D.C. 2007) (holding that evidence of constructively possession was sufficient when firearm found in defendant's apartment, while defendant was outside the apartment sitting in a car).

[27] An actor who constructively possesses a dangerous weapon in furtherance of a drug crime may still be liable for one or more separate weapon offenses under the RCC. See RCC § 22E-XXXX [Weapon crimes] and accompanying commentary for more details.

[28] D.C. Code § 48-904.01 (b)(1).

[29] See Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2009 (2015) ("[O]ur cases have explained that a defendant generally must 'know the facts that make his conduct fit the definition of the offense,' even if he does not know that those facts give rise to a crime. (Internal citation omitted)").

for the offense improves the clarity of the RCC and is consistent with requirements for most other offenses.

Second, the revised statute specifies that the general provisions of Chapters 1 through 6 of Subtitle I of Title 22 of the D.C. Code apply to this offense. The current D.C. Code generally does not codify consistent definitions, rules of liability, rules of interpretation, or general defenses. In contrast, Subtitle I of Title 22E sets forth broadly applicable rules and definitions relating to the basic requirements of criminal liability, inchoate liability, justification defenses, and penalty enhancements. Application of these general provisions to the possession of a controlled substance offense may change District law in numerous ways. For more in depth discussion of these general provisions, see commentary accompanying statutory provisions in Subtitle I of Title 22E. These changes improve the clarity, completeness, and proportionality of the revised offense.

Other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to substantively change current District law.

First, the revised statute does not refer to the terms "abusive" or "narcotic" drugs. The current statute provides different maximum penalties based on the type of substance involved in the offense. The highest penalty is reserved for offenses committed "with respect to . . . A counterfeit substance classified in Schedule I or II that is a narcotic or abusive drug[.]"[30] The terms "abusive drug" and "narcotic drug" are defined in the current D.C. Code, and include an array of controlled substances.[31] The revised statute does not use the terms "abusive drug" or "narcotic drug," but the first three grades of the offense enumerate all of the substances that are defined as "abusive" or "narcotic" under current law.

Second, the revised statute requires that the actor distributes, creates, or possesses a "measurable quantity" of a counterfeit substance. Although the current statute does not require any minimum quantity of counterfeit substance, the DCCA has clearly held that the current statute requires distribution, creation, or possession of a measurable quantity of a controlled substance.[32]

[30] D.C. Code § 48-904.01 (a)(2)(A).
[31] D.C. Code § 48-901.02.
[32] Thomas v. United States, 650 A.2d 183, 184 (D.C. 1994). Although the Thomas case did not involve the counterfeit substance offense, the DCCA held that "in order to secure a conviction for controlled substance violations, the government need only prove there was a measurable amount of the controlled substance in question."

RCC § 48-904.10. Possession of Drug Manufacturing Paraphernalia.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the possession of drug manufacturing paraphernalia offense for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The offense criminalizes knowingly possessing an object with intent to use the object to manufacture a controlled substance. The revised possession of drug manufacturing paraphernalia offense does not cover possession of objects with intent to use them for any other purpose related to controlled substances. The revised possession of drug paraphernalia statute replaces the current possession of drug paraphernalia statute that applies specifically to hypodermic needles and syringes[1], portions of the general drug paraphernalia statute criminalizing possession of drug paraphernalia,[2] the definition of the term "drug paraphernalia" included in the statute defining terms as used in Subchapter I of Chapter 11[3], and the statute specifying factors to be considered in determining whether object is paraphernalia.[4]

Subsection (a) specifies the elements of possession of drug paraphernalia. Subsection (a) specifies that the accused must knowingly possess an object. "Possess" is a term defined in RCC § 22E-701, to mean to "hold or carry on one's person," or to "have the ability and desire to exercise control over." Subsection (a) also specifies that a "knowingly" culpable mental state applies, a term defined in RCC § 22E-206, which here requires that the accused was practically certain that he or she possessed an object. Subsection (a) also requires that the actor had intent to use the object to manufacture a controlled substance. The term "manufacture" is defined in RCC § 22E-701, and means "the production, preparation, propagation, compounding, conversion or processing of a controlled substance either directly or indirectly by extraction from substances of natural origin, or independently by means of chemical synthesis, or by a combination of extraction and chemical synthesis[.]" The term "controlled substance" is defined under D.C. Code § 48-901.02, and includes a broad array of substances organized into five different schedules. The term "intent" is defined in RCC § 22E-206 and, applied here, requires that the accused was practically certain that he or she would use the object to manufacture a controlled substance. Per RCC § 22E-205, the object of the phrase "with intent that" is not an objective element that requires separate proof—only the actor's culpable mental state must be proven regarding the object of this phrase. It is not necessary to prove that the person actually used the object to manufacture a controlled substance, only that the person believed to a practical certainty that he or she would use the object to manufacture a controlled substance.

Subsection (b) provides three exclusions to liability. Paragraph (b)(1) provides an exception to liability if the object is 50 year of age or older. This exclusion applies regardless of the intended use of the object. Paragraph (b)(2) provides an exclusion to liability if the actor possesses an object with intent to use the object to package or repackage

[1] D.C. Code § 48-904.10.
[2] D.C. Code § 48-1103 (a)(1).
[3] D.C. Code § 48-1101 (3).
[4] D.C. Code § 48-1102.

a controlled substance for the actor's own use. Paragraph (b)(3) provides an exclusion to liability of the actor satisfies the requirements set forth under D.C. Code § 7-403.

Subsection (c) specifies penalties for the offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.]

Subsection (d) cross-references applicable definitions located elsewhere in Chapter 9 of Title 48 and in the RCC.

Subsection (e) specifies that the general provisions of Chapters 1 through 6 of Subtitle I of Title 22 of the D.C. Code apply to this offense.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised possession of drug manufacturing paraphernalia statute changes current District law in three main ways.

First, the revised statute limits liability to possession of objects related to the manufacture of a controlled substance. The current D.C. Code general paraphernalia statute requires a person to use or possess with intent to use "drug paraphernalia," a defined term,[5] to "plant, propagate, cultivate, grow, harvest, manufacture, compound, convert, produce, process, prepare, test, analyze, pack, repack, store, contain, conceal, inhale, ingest, or otherwise introduce into the human body a controlled substance[.]"[6] In addition, current D.C. Code § 48-904.01 specifically criminalizes possession of a "hypodermic needle, hypodermic syringe . . . with intent to use it for administration of a controlled substance by subcutaneous injection"[7] In contrast, the revised statute does not use a defined term of "drug paraphernalia" and more simply requires that the person possessed an object that was actually used to manufacture a controlled substance, or with intent to use it to manufacture a controlled substance. Objects that are used or intended for use for any other purpose, most notably personal consumption, are not covered by the revised statute.[8] This change improves the clarity and proportionality of the revised criminal code.

Second, the revised statute does not provide as a basis for liability that a person possesses an object that has been "designed for use" in manufacturing a controlled substance. The current D.C. Code paraphernalia statute includes liability for "objects used, intended for use, or designed for use in manufacturing…a controlled substance." [9] In contrast, the revised statute provides liability only for possession of an object with intent to use the object to manufacture a controlled substance. Determining whether an item is specially "designed for" a particular purpose based on its objective features is a potentially difficult task, subject to arguments over whether a possessor is sufficiently on notice as to [5] D.C. Code § 48-1101 (3). This definition of "drug paraphernalia" includes a list of items that largely, though not entirely, replicates the functions of the object described in the general paraphernalia statute, for example: "planting," "propagating," "cultivating," "growing."

[6] D.C. Code § 48-1103.
[7] This statute also requires that the needle or syringe "has on it or in it any quantity (including a trace) of a controlled substance [.]"
[8] For example, possession of an instrument with intent to use it to ingest a controlled substance is not covered by the revised statute. This decriminalizes conduct currently covered by both D.C. Code § 48-904.10, and § 48-1103.
[9] D.C. Code § 48-1101 (3)(B).

the item being contraband.[10] Moreover, in practice, the revised statute's elimination of separate liability for possession of items "designed for use in manufacturing…a controlled substance" may be quite narrow. Most objects involved in the planned[11] manufacture of a controlled substance are either general purpose items not specially designed[12] for manufacturing a controlled substance, or, if they are so specially designed,[13] would need few additional facts to allow inference of an intent to use to manufacture a controlled substance under the revised statute. This change clarifies and improves the proportionality of the revised statute.

Third, the revised statute includes an exclusion to liability if a person possesses an object with intent to use the object to package or repackage a controlled substance for the person's own use. Under current law, the term "manufacturing" includes "any packaging or repackaging of the [controlled] substance" with no exception for personal use.[14] In contrast, the revised statute provides an exclusion to liability for possessing an object with intent to use it to package or repackage a controlled substance for the actor's own use. This change improves the proportionality of the revised statute.

Beyond these three substantive changes to current District law, two other aspects of the revised possession of drug paraphernalia statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised statute specifies that the actor must knowingly possess an object. The current D.C. Code statute does not specify any culpable mental state as to the possession of the object, and there is no DCCA case law on point. Applying a knowledge requirement to statutory elements that distinguish innocent from criminal behavior is a well-established practice in American jurisprudence.[15] Specifying a culpable mental state for the offense improves the clarity of the RCC and is consistent with requirements for most other offenses.

Second, the revised statute specifies that the general provisions of Chapters 1 through 6 of Subtitle I of Title 22 of the D.C. Code apply to this offense. The current D.C. Code generally does not codify consistent definitions, rules of liability, rules of interpretation, or general defenses. In contrast, Subtitle I of Title 22E sets forth broadly applicable rules and definitions relating to the basic requirements of criminal liability,

---

[10] See, generally, Fatumabahirtu v. United States, 26 A.3d 322, 333 (D.C. 2011)(discussing constitutional litigation of paraphernalia statutes regarding "notice as to when otherwise innocuous household items qualified as drug paraphernalia.").

[11] The revised statute continues liability for knowing possession of an object that has been used to manufacture a controlled substance.

[12] For example, scales, packaging equipment, adulterants, and other items listed in D.C. Code § 48-1101 (3)(B).

[13] For example, a chemical preparation apparatus configured in a unique way to produce a controlled substance.

[14] The current definition of the term "manufacture" includes exceptions for "preparation or compounding of a controlled substance by an individual for his or her own use," but not for packaging or repackaging of a controlled substance for his or her own use. D.C. Code § 48-901.01 (13).

[15] See Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2009 (2015) ("[O]ur cases have explained that a defendant generally must 'know the facts that make his conduct fit the definition of the offense,' even if he does not know that those facts give rise to a crime. (Internal citation omitted)").

inchoate liability, justification defenses, and penalty enhancements. Application of these general provisions to the possession of a controlled substance offense may change District law in numerous ways. For more in depth discussion of these general provisions, see commentary accompanying statutory provisions in Subtitle I of Title 22E. These changes improve the clarity, completeness, and proportionality of the revised offense.

Four other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to change current District law.

First, the revised statute does not include an exception to liability for possession of testing equipment for the purpose of testing personal use quantities of a controlled substance. The current statute provides that "it shall not be unlawful for a person to use, or possess with the intent to use, [paraphernalia] for the purpose of testing personal use quantities of a controlled substance."[16] However, omitting this language is not intended to change District law. Under the revised possession of drug paraphernalia statute, possession of testing equipment with intent to test personal quantities of a controlled substance is not criminalized, as the revised statute requires that the actor possesses an object that has been used, or with intent to use, it to manufacture a controlled substance.

Second, the revised statute does not include an exception for possession of objects with intent to ingest or manufacture cannabis. The current statute provides an exception for persons 21 years of age or older who use, or possess with intent to use, paraphernalia to use or possess cannabis, or to grow, possess, harvest, or process cannabis plants in a manner lawful under D.C. Code § 48-904.01(a). However, omitting this exception is not intended to change current District law. A person who possesses an object with intent to use or possess would not be liable under the revised statute, which requires intent to manufacture. The term "controlled substance" as defined excludes cannabis plants that are grown in the manner set forth in D.C. Code § 48-904.01 (a). A person who possesses an object with intent to use it to grow, possess, harvest, or process cannabis plants in the manner that is lawful under D.C. Code § 48-904.01 (a) would not have the requisite intent to manufacture a "controlled substance," and would not liable under the revised offense.

Third, the revised statute includes an exclusion to liability if the object is 50 years of age or older. The current D.C. Code paraphernalia offenses do not include this exclusion. However, in the current D.C. Code § 48-1101 definition of "drug paraphernalia" it states that "[t]he term 'drug paraphernalia' shall not include any article that is 50 years of age or older." Although the revised statute does not use a defined term of "drug paraphernalia," this exclusion is intended to maintain current law by excluding cases involving objects that are 50 years of age or older.

Fourth, the forfeiture under D.C. Code § 48-1104 includes two technical amendments. First, the statute refers to the revised paraphernalia offenses under D.C. Code § 48-904.10 and § 48-904.11, instead of current D.C. Code § 48-1103. Second, the forfeiture statute also omits the reference to use or possession of drug paraphernalia for "personal use." Under the current forfeiture statute, money or currency that has been used or intended for use in conjunction with the use or possession of paraphernalia, other than for personal use, is subject to forfeiture. This limitation on the forfeiture statute is unnecessary under the revised statutes, as use or possession of an object that is used for personal use of a controlled substance is not a criminal offense.

[16] D.C. Code § 48-1103.

RCC § 48-904.11. Trafficking of Drug Paraphernalia.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the trafficking of drug paraphernalia offense for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The offense criminalizes knowingly selling or delivering, or possessing with intent to sell or deliver, an object with intent that another person will use the object for one of several specified purposes in conjunction with a controlled substance. The revised distribution of drug paraphernalia statute replaces portions of the general drug paraphernalia statute that criminalize sale, delivery, or possession with intent to sell or deliver drug paraphernalia,[1] the definition of the term "drug paraphernalia" included in the statute defining terms as used in Subchapter I of Chapter 11,[2] and the statute providing factors to be considered in determining whether an object is paraphernalia.[3]

Subsection (a) specifies the elements of trafficking of drug paraphernalia. Paragraph (a)(1) specifies that the accused must knowingly deliver or sell, or possess with intent to deliver or sell, an object. The terms "deliver" and "sell" are intended to have the same meaning as under current District law. "Possess" is a term defined in RCC § 22E-701, to mean to "hold or carry on one's person," or to "have the ability and desire to exercise control over." Paragraph (a)(1) also specifies that a "knowingly" culpable mental state applies, a term defined in RCC § 22E-206, and applied here requires that the accused was practically certain that he or she delivered, sold, or possessed an object. The term "intent" is defined in RCC § 22E-206, and applied here requires that the accused was practically certain that he or she would deliver or sell an object. Per RCC § 22E-205, the object of the phrase "with intent that" is not an objective element that requires separate proof—only the actor's culpable mental state must be proven regarding the object of this phrase. It is not necessary to prove that the actor actually delivered or sold the object, only that the actor possessed the object while believing to a practical certainty that he or she would deliver or sell the object.

Paragraph (a)(2) requires that the person had intent that another person will use the object to introduce into the human body, produce, process, prepare, test, analyze, pack, store, conceal, manufacture, or measure a controlled substance. The term "intent" is defined in RCC § 22E-206, and applied here requires that the accused was practically certain that another person would use the object for one of the specified purposes. Per RCC § 22E-205, the object of the phrase "with intent that" is not an objective element that requires separate proof—only the actor's culpable mental state must be proven regarding the object of this phrase. It is not necessary to prove that another person actually used the object, only that the person believed to a practical certainty that another person would use the object for one of the specified purposes.

Subsection (b) provides four defenses to prosecution under this section. Subsection (b) uses the term "in fact," which specifies that there is no culpable mental state required as to any of the defenses provided under this subsection. Paragraph (b)(1) specifies that it is a defense that the object sold, delivered, or possessed, is testing equipment or other objects used, planned for use, or designed for use in identifying or analyzing the strength, effectiveness, or purity of a controlled substance, or for ingestion or inhalation of a controlled substance, provided that the actor is a community-based organization. The term "community-based organization" is defined in D.C. Code § 7-404, and means "an organization that provides services, including medical care, counseling, homeless services, or drug treatment, to individuals and communities impacted by drug use . . . [and] includes all organizations currently participating in the Needle Exchange Program with the Department of Human Services under § 48-1103.01."

[1] D.C. Code § 48-1103 (b), (c), and (e).
[2] D.C. Code §48-1101 (3).
[3] D.C. Code § 48-1102.

Paragraph (b)(2) specifies that it is a defense that the object sold, delivered, or possessed is an unused hypodermic syringe or needle.

Paragraph (b)(3) specifies that it is a defense that object sold, delivered, or possessed is an item planned for use in a medical procedure or treatment permitted under District or federal civil law, to be performed by a licensed health professional or by a person acting at the direction of a licensed health professional.

Paragraph (b)(4) specifies that it is a defense that object sold, delivered, or possessed is 50 years of age or older. This defense applies regardless of the planned use of the object.

Subsection (c) specifies relevant penalties for the offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.]

Subsection (d) cross-references applicable definitions located elsewhere in Chapter 9 of Title 48 and in the RCC.

Subsection (e) specifies that the general provisions of Chapters 1 through 6 of Subtitle I of Title 22 of the D.C. Code apply to this offense.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised trafficking of drug paraphernalia statute changes current law in eight main ways.

First, the revised distribution of drug paraphernalia statute does not require that the actor distributed or possessed "drug paraphernalia," a defined term that includes objects designed in a particular way. The current D.C. Code statute requires delivery or sale, or possession with intent to deliver or sell of "drug paraphernalia," a defined term which includes a broad array of specified objects used to produce, package, test, measure, or ingest a controlled substance, as well as any object "used, intended for use, or designed for use in ingesting, inhaling, or otherwise introducing . . . [a] controlled substance into the human body[.]"[4] In contrast, the revised statute covers any object provided that the accused intended that another person would use it for one of the specified purposes.[5] This change improves the clarity of the revised criminal code.

[4] D.C. Code § 48-1101 (3).

[5] This change may have no practical effect on current District law. As currently defined, any object can constitute "drug paraphernalia" if it is used or intended to be used to manufacture or ingest a controlled substance. Any time a person satisfies the elements under the revised statute, the object in question would have constituted "drug paraphernalia" as currently defined.

Second, the revised statute requires that the actor's sale, delivery, or possession with intent to sell or deliver the object be with intent that another person would use the object for one of the specified purposes. The current D.C. Code statute requires that the defendant sells or delivers paraphernalia "knowingly, or under circumstances where one reasonably should know, that it will be used to plant, propagate, cultivate, grow, harvest, manufacture, compound, convert, produce, process, prepare, test, analyze, pack, repack, store, contain, conceal, inject, ingest, inhale, or otherwise introduce into the human body a controlled substance[.]" The D.C. Court of Appeals has applied this culpable mental state language without discussion as to the meaning of such terms or whether or how such language equates to a negligence standard under the Model Penal Code or other jurisdictions."[6] Coupled with the current D.C. Code definition of "drug paraphernalia" as including, in part, items that are "designed for" use with controlled substances, the current statute provides liability for selling or delivering an item, without any awareness of that the other person may or will use that item in relation with a controlled substance. In contrast, the revised statute requires that the person's sale, delivery, or possession be with intent to sell or deliver an object be done "with intent" that the object be used for one of the specified purposes. While it need not be proven that an actor consciously desired for the recipient of the object to use it with respect to a controlled substance, the actor must be at least practically certain that the object would be used for such purposes. Applying a knowledge requirement to statutory elements that distinguish innocent from criminal behavior is a well-established practice in American jurisprudence,[7] while basing criminal liability on negligence[8] is generally disfavored.[9]. This change improves the clarity and proportionality of the revised criminal code.

---

[6] Fatumabahirtu v. United States, 26 A.3d 322, 336 (D.C. 2011). This case involved a glass ink pen, which could be used to inhale or ingest a controlled substance. However, the holding in Fatumabahirtu may presumably be applied to all other prohibited uses of drug paraphernalia.

[7] See Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2009 (2015) ("[O]ur cases have explained that a defendant generally must 'know the facts that make his conduct fit the definition of the offense,' even if he does not know that those facts give rise to a crime. (Internal citation omitted)").

[8] The DCCA's opinion in Fatumabahirtu strongly suggests that, per the current statute's reference to "under circumstances where one reasonably should know…," something akin to mere negligence as to whether the buyer would use the paraphernalia to ingest a controlled substance would suffice for criminal liability. The DCCA's opinion referenced the Model Drug Paraphernalia Act, which served as a model for the District's current paraphernalia statute and stated: "The knowledge requirement of Section B is satisfied when a supplier: (i) has actual knowledge an object will be used as drug paraphernalia; (ii) is aware of a high probability an object will be used as drug paraphernalia; or (iii) is aware of facts and circumstances from which he should reasonably conclude there is a high probability an object will be used as drug paraphernalia. Section B requires a supplier of potential paraphernalia to exercise a reasonable amount of care." Fatumabahirtu, 26 A.3d at 334 (emphasis added). To the extent that the DCCA ruling in Fatumabahirtu establishes or requires a lower culpable mental state as to whether the person to whom an object is delivered or sold will use the object in a proscribed manner with respect to a controlled substance, that case would no longer be valid law upon adoption of the revised statute.

[9] The Supreme Court has stated that the principle that "the understanding that an injury is criminal only if inflicted knowingly is 'as universal and persistent in mature systems of law as belief in freedom of the human will and a consequent ability and duty of the normal individual to choose between good and evil.'" Rehaif v.

Third, the revised statute does not specifically criminalize sale of items currently enumerated in D.C. Code § 48-1103 (e)(1). Under the current D.C. Code statute, sale of cocaine free base kits, glass or ceramic tubes,[10] cigarette rolling papers, and cigar wrappers is criminalized for most[11] vendors, regardless of their actual or intended use. In contrast, under the revised statute sale of these objects is not criminalized, unless the person selling the objects intends that another person will use them in a manner specified in paragraph (a)(2) in relation to a controlled substance. Most of these items are objects with legitimate uses[12] and are currently available for purchase by District residents on the websites of major online retail sellers—any sale of which may constitute a crime under current law.[13] This change improves the proportionality of the revised criminal code.

Fourth, the revised statute eliminates repeat offender penalties consistent with other nonviolent revised offenses in the RCC. Under the current D.C. Code statute, a person convicted of delivering or selling drug paraphernalia who has previously been convicted in the District of Columbia of a violation under subchapter I of Chapter 11, may be sentenced up to 2 years, four times the 6 month penalty for first time offenders. In contrast, the revised code omits any special repeat offender provision for trafficking of drug paraphernalia. The RCC general recidivism enhancement (RCC § 22E-606) is limited to RCC offenses against persons and enhanced burglary, which requires the presence of a dangerous weapon or imitation firearm. This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised criminal code.

Fifth, the revised statute eliminates penalty enhancements for delivering or selling paraphernalia to a person under the age of 18. Under the current D.C. Code statute, any person who is 18 year of age or older who delivers or sells paraphernalia to a person who is under the age of 18 and who is at least 3 years younger may be sentenced to a term of imprisonment of up to 8 years, sixteen times the penalty for delivery or sale to an adult.[14] In contrast, the revised statute does not include an age-based penalty enhancement. Delivering or selling drug paraphernalia to a minor would likely give rise to liability for contributing to the delinquency of a minor[15] that effectively raises the penalty for such behavior in a more proportionate manner. This change improves the proportionality of the revised criminal code.

United States, No. 17-9560, 2019 WL 2552487, at *4 (U.S. June 21, 2019) (quoting Morisette v. United States, 342 U.S. 246, 250 (1952)).

[10] The tubes must be 6 inches in length and 1 inch in diameter.

[11] The statute excepts from this blanket prohibition on sale certain businesses. Commercial retail or wholesaler establishments may sell cigarette rolling papers if the establishment: derives at least 25% of its total annual revenue from the sale of tobacco products; and sells loose tobacco intended to be rolled into cigarettes or cigars.

[12] See, e.g., Toff, Nancy, The Flute Book: A Complete Guide for Students and Performers (2012) at 36.

[13] See, D.C. Code § 45–604 ("The word "person" shall be held to apply to partnerships and corporations, unless such construction would be unreasonable, and the reference to any officer shall include any person authorized by law to perform the duties of his office, unless the context shows that such words were intended to be used in a more limited sense.").

[14] D.C. Code § 48-1103 (c). Notably, an 8 year maximum sentence is longer than the maximum sentence authorized for felony assault, D.C. Code § 22-404, fourth degree sexual abuse, D.C. Code §22-3005, or second degree sexual abuse of a minor, D.C. Code § 22-3009.02.

[15] D.C. Code § 22–811(a)(5)(carrying a six-month maximum penalty for a first-time offense).

Sixth, paragraph (b)(1) of the revised statute include a defense for community-based organizations selling, delivering, or possessing with intent to sell or deliver any item for ingestion or inhalation of a controlled substance. The current D.C. Code statute states that "it shall not be unlawful for a community based organization as that term is defined in § 7-404(a)(1), to deliver or sell, or possess with intent to deliver or sell, the materials described in § 48-1101(3)(D)."[16] By reference to D.C. Code § 48-1101(3)(D), the current statute excludes community-based organizations selling, delivering, or possessing with intent to sell or deliver certain types of testing equipment. In contrast, the revised statute also excludes community-based organizations selling, delivering, or possessing with intent to sell any item for ingestion or inhalation of a controlled substance. Community-based organizations may address public health concerns associated with controlled substance use by distributing items for use in ingesting or inhaling controlled substance. The revised statute bars criminal liability in these cases. This change improves the proportionality of the revised criminal code.

Seventh, paragraph (b)(2) of the revised statute includes a defense for selling, delivering, or possessing with intent to sell or deliver an unused hypodermic syringe or needle. Under current D.C. Code § 48-1103.01, certain persons authorized by the Needle Exchange Program may distribute hypodermic needles and syringes. In contrast, the revised statute excludes any person selling, delivering, or possessing with intent to sell an unused hypodermic needle. Used hypodermic syringes and needles present significant health risks, and distribution of unused needles and syringes can mitigate this risk, regardless of whether the person distributing them is authorized under the Needle Exchange Program. This change improves the proportionality of the revised criminal code.

Eighth, paragraph (b)(3) of the revised statute include a defense for selling, delivering, or possessing with intent to sell or deliver an item planned for use in a medical procedure or treatment. Current District law does not provide a defense for distribution of paraphernalia for such purposes. Under current law, it appears that selling a hypodermic needle planned for use by a physician or nurse in administering a controlled substance constitutes a criminal offense. In contrast, the revised statute establishes that this conduct is not subject to criminal liability. Including this defense improves the clarity and proportionality of the revised criminal code.

Beyond these eight substantive changes to current District law, two other aspects of the revised possession of drug paraphernalia statute may constitute substantive changes to current District law.

First, the revised statute specifies that the actor must knowingly distribute or sell the object that is to be used in connection with a controlled substance. The current D.C. Code statute does not specify any culpable mental state for "deliver or sell," however the DCCA has stated that the current statute requires "specific intent" to deliver or sell the paraphernalia.[17] The revised statute specifies that a "knowingly" culpable mental state is

[16] D.C. Code § 48-1103(b)(1)(A).
[17] Fatumabahirtu, 26 A.3d at 325 ("We hold that D.C.Code § 48–1103(b) requires the government to prove that an owner or a clerk of a commercial retail store had (1) the specific intent to deliver or sell drug required. Applying a knowledge requirement to statutory elements that distinguish innocent from criminal behavior is a well-established practice in American jurisprudence.[18] Specifying a culpable mental state for the offense improves the clarity of the RCC and is consistent with requirements for most other offenses.

Second, the revised statute specifies that the general provisions of Chapters 1 through 6 of Subtitle I of Title 22 of the D.C. Code apply to this offense. The current D.C. Code generally does not codify consistent definitions, rules of liability, rules of interpretation, or general defenses. In contrast, Subtitle I of Title 22E sets forth broadly applicable rules and definitions relating to the basic requirements of criminal liability, inchoate liability, justification defenses, and penalty enhancements. Application of these general provisions to the possession of a controlled substance offense may change District law in numerous ways. For more in depth discussion of these general provisions, see commentary accompanying statutory provisions in Subtitle I of Title 22E. These changes improve the clarity, completeness, and proportionality of the revised offense.

Five other changes to the revised statute are clarificatory in nature and are not intended to change current District law.

First, the revised statute does not specifically criminalize manufacturing drug paraphernalia. The current D.C. Code statute specifically includes "manufacture with intent to deliver or sell drug paraphernalia" as a distinct form of a paraphernalia offense.[19] The revised statute, however, does not explicitly refer to manufacturing objects that are intended for use with controlled substances because such language is surplusage and potentially confusing. A person who manufactures an object would also necessarily possess the object, and fall within the scope of the revised statute.

Second, the defense under paragraph (b)(1) specifically lists testing equipment and other objects rather than rely on a cross reference. The current D.C. Code statute states that "it shall not be unlawful for a community based organization to as that term is defined in § 7-404(a)(1), to deliver or sell, or possess with intent to deliver or sell, the materials described in § 48-1101(3)(D)."[20] In the revised statute the term "community based organization" is cross-referenced in the subsection (e), and retains the same meaning as under current law. However, instead of referring to D.C. Code § 48-1101(3), paragraph (b)(1) specifies the testing equipment and objects that are excluded from the offense, using language copied verbatim from current D.C. Code § 48-1103(3)(D).

Third, the revised statute includes an exclusion to liability if the object is 50 years of age or older. The current D.C. Code paraphernalia offense does not include this paraphernalia (as defined in D.C.Code § 48–1101(3))…."). The DCCA discussion of "specific intent" in Fatumabahirtu does not appear to distinguish between conduct to "deliver or sell, possess with intent to deliver or sell, or manufacture with intent to deliver or sell."

[18] See, Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2009 (2015) ("[O]ur cases have explained that a defendant generally must 'know the facts that make his conduct fit the definition of the offense,' even if he does not know that those facts give rise to a crime. (Internal citation omitted)").

[19] D.C. Code § 48-1103 (b)(1). Notably, unlike Chapter 9 of Title 48, which contains most controlled substance offenses and penalties, the term "manufacture" is not defined for Chapter 11.

[20] D.C. Code § 48-1103(b)(1)(A).

exclusion, however, current D.C. Code § 48-1101 states that "[t]he term 'drug paraphernalia' shall not include any article that is 50 years of age or older." Although the revised statute does not use the term "drug paraphernalia," this exclusion is intended to maintain current law in excluding cases involving objects that are 50 years of age or older.

Fourth, the revised statute does not include an exception for selling, delivering, or possessing with intent to sell or deliver objects with intent that another person will use the object to possess, use, grow, harvest, or process cannabis. The current statute provides an exception for selling, delivering, or possessing with intent to sell or deliver drug paraphernalia "under circumstances in which one knows or has reason to know that such drug paraphernalia will be used solely for use of marijuana that is lawful under § 48-904.01(a), or that such drug paraphernalia will be used solely for growing, possession, harvesting, or processing of cannabis plants that is lawful under § 48-904.01(a)."[21] However, omitting this exception is not intended to change current District law. A person who sells, delivers, or possesses with intent to sell or deliver an object with intent that a person will use the object to use, possess, grow, harvest, or process cannabis plants in a manner that is lawful under § 48-901.01(a) will not be liable under the revised offense. Under both current law and the RCC, the term "controlled substance" does not include marijuana used or possessed in manner defined in §48-904.01 (a), or cannabis plants that are grown in the manner set forth in D.C. Code § 48-904.01 (a). A person who sells, delivers, or possesses with intent to sell or deliver an object with intent that another person will use the object with marijuana or cannabis plants in a manner that is lawful under D.C. Code § 48-904.01 (a) would not have the requisite intent that another person will use the object to produce, process, prepare, test, analyze, pack, store, conceal, manufacture, or measure a "controlled substance," and would not liable under the revised offense.

Fifth, the forfeiture statute under D.C. Code § 48-1104 includes two technical amendments. First, the statute refers to the revised paraphernalia offenses under D.C. Code § 48-904.10 and § 48-904.11, instead of current D.C. Code § 48-1103. Second, the forfeiture statute also omits the reference to use or possession of drug paraphernalia for "personal use." Under the current forfeiture statute, money or currency that has been used or intended for use in conjunction with the use or possession of paraphernalia, other than for personal use, is subject to forfeiture. This limitation on the forfeiture statute is unnecessary under the revised statutes, as use or possession of an object that is used for personal use of a controlled substance is not a criminal offense.

[21] D.C. Code § 48-1103 (b)(1).

RCC § 48-904.12. Maintaining Methamphetamine Production.

Explanatory Note. This section establishes the maintaining methamphetamine production offense for the Revised Criminal Code (RCC). The offense criminalizes knowingly opening or maintaining a place with intent to manufacture methamphetamine. The offense does not include merely packaging, repackaging, labeling, or relabeling methamphetamine. The maintaining methamphetamine production offense replaces the current D.C. Code § § 48–904.03, which criminalizes opening or maintaining a place to manufacture, distribute, or store for the purposes of manufacturing or distributing a narcotic or abusive drug.

Subsection (a) specifies the elements of maintaining methamphetamine production. Subsection (a) requires that the actor opens or maintains any location. Subsection (a) also specifies a culpable mental state of knowledge, a term defined in RCC § 22E-206 which here requires that the accused must be practically certain that he or she is opening or maintaining any location. Subsection (a) also requires that the actor with intent to manufacture methamphetamine, its salts, isomers, or salts of its isomers. Per RCC § 22E-205, the object of the phrase "with intent that" is not an objective element that requires separate proof—only the actor's culpable mental state must be proven regarding the object of this phrase. It is not necessary to prove that the anyone actually manufactured methamphetamine.

Subsection (a) excludes certain types of manufacturing. The term "manufacture" is defined in D.C. Code § 48-901.02, and means "the production, preparation, propagation, compounding, conversion or processing of a controlled substance, either directly or indirectly by extraction from substances of natural origin, or independently by means of chemical synthesis, or by a combination of extraction and chemical synthesis, and includes any packaging or repackaging of the substance or labeling or relabeling of its container." Subsection (a) specifies that maintaining a place with intent to package, repackage, label, or relabel methamphetamine is not included in the offense.

Subsection (b) specifies relevant penalties for the offense. [See RCC §§ 22E-603 and 22E-604 for the imprisonment terms and fines for each penalty class.]

Subsection (c) cross-references applicable definitions located elsewhere in Chapter 9 of Title 48 and in the RCC.

Subsection (d) specifies that the general provisions of Chapters 1 through 6 of Subtitle I of Title 22 of the D.C. Code apply to this offense.

Relation to Current District Law. The revised maintaining a place for methamphetamine manufacturing statute changes current District law in two main ways.

First, the revised requires intent to manufacture methamphetamine. The current statute includes maintaining or opening a location "for the purpose of manufacture or distribution a narcotic or abusive drug."[1] By contrast, the revised statute does not criminalize maintaining a location with intent to manufacture substances other than methamphetamine, or with intent to distribute any controlled substance. Conspiracy and accomplice liability are sufficient to deter and punish maintaining a location for manufacturing or distributing other controlled substances. However, due to the particular dangerousness associated with manufacturing methamphetamine, a separate criminal offense, with different culpability requirements than required for accomplice[2] or conspiracy[3] liability, is warranted. This change improves the proportionality of the revised criminal code.

[1] D.C. Code § 48-904.03a.

Second, the revised excludes maintaining a location with intent to package, repackage, label, or relabel, methamphetamine. The current statute does not include any exclusions or exceptions to liability. By contrast, the revised statute excludes certain types of conduct that are included in the definition of "manufacture." Although included in the definition of "manufacture," packaging and labeling of methamphetamine does not create the same safety risks associated with the actual production of methamphetamine. This change improves the proportionality of the revised criminal code.

Beyond these two main changes to current District law, one other aspect of the revised maintaining a place for methamphetamine manufacturing statute may constitute a substantive change to current District law.

The revised statute criminalizes maintaining or opening a location with intent to manufacture methamphetamine. The current statute criminalizes knowingly opening or maintaining any location "to manufacture, distribute, or store for the purpose of manufacture or distribution a narcotic or abusive drug." The current statute is semi-inchoate in that it does not require that the location actually be used to manufacture or distribute a controlled substance. However, although the statute requires that the person must knowingly open or maintain a place, it does not specify a culpable mental state as to whether the location will be used to manufacture or store controlled substances. The revised statute resolves this ambiguity by specifying that the actor must act "with intent" that the location will be used to manufacture methamphetamine.

[2] Under RCC § 22E-210, accomplice liability requires that the actor acts with the culpability required by the offense, and either purposely assists another person with the planning or commission of conduct constituting that offense; or purposely encourages another person to engage in specific conduct constituting that offense. A person who maintains a location knowing but not consciously desiring that it be used to manufacture methamphetamine would not satisfy the requirements for accomplice liability.

[3] Under RCC § 22E-303, conspiracy liability requires that the actor purposely agrees "to engage in or aid the planning or commission of conduct which, if carried out, will constitute that offense or an attempt to commit that offense[.]" A person who maintains a location knowing that another person will use the location to manufacture methamphetamine, without purposely forming an agreement with the other person would not be guilty of conspiracy to manufacture methamphetamine.

The CCRC repeats its prior recommendations to the Council and Mayor in Report #1: Recommendations for Enactment of D.C. Code Title 22 and Other Changes to Criminal Statutes (May 5, 2017) to repeal the following offenses:

1. D.C. Code § 3-206. Repeal of Unlawful acts.
2. D.C. Code § 4-125. Repeal of Assisting child to leave institution without authority; concealing such child; duty of police.
3. D.C. Code § 8-305. Repeal of Penalty.
4. D.C. Code § 9-433.01. Repeal of Permit required; exceptions.
5. D.C. Code § 9-433.02. Repeal of Penalty; prosecution.
6. D.C. Code § 22-1003. Repeal of Rest, water and feeding for animals transported by railroad company.
7. D.C. Code § 22-1012(a). Repeal of Abandonment of maimed or diseased animal; destruction of diseased animals; disposition of animal or vehicle on arrest of driver; scientific experiments.
8. D.C. Code § 22-1308. Repeal of Playing games in streets.
9. D.C. Code § 22-1317. Flying fire balloons or parachutes.
10. D.C. Code § 22-1402. Recordation of deed, contract, or conveyance with intent to extort money.
11. D.C. Code § 22-1807. Punishment for offenses not covered by provisions of Code.
12. D.C. Code § 22-3303. Repeal of Grave robbery; burying or selling dead bodies.
13. D.C. Code § 22-3320. Repeal of Obstructing public road; removing milestones.
14. D.C. Code § 34-701. Repeal of False statements in securing approval for stock issue.
15. D.C. Code § 34-707. Repeal of Destruction of apparatus or appliance of Commission.
16. D.C. Code § 36-153. Repeal of Unauthorized use, defacing, or sale of registered vessel.
17. D.C. Code § 47-102. Repeal of Total indebtedness not to be increased.

D.C. Code § 5-115.03. Repeal of Neglect to Make Arrest for Offense Committed in Presence.

Explanatory Note and Relation to Current District Law.

Current D.C. Code § 5-115.03 provides:

> If any member of the police force shall neglect making any arrest for an offense against the laws of the United States committed in his presence, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punishable by imprisonment in the District Jail or Penitentiary not exceeding 2 years, or by a fine not exceeding $500. A member of the police force who deals with an individual in accordance with § 24-604(b) shall not be considered as having violated this section.[1]

The D.C. Court of Appeals (DCCA) does not appear to have published any opinions in which a criminal defendant was charged with violating this statute. However, the DCCA has referred to this statute when finding that members of the Metropolitan Police Departments are "always on duty."[2] Additionally, the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia has referred to this statute when finding that the District does not have a policy or practice of allowing officers to break the law and shielding the government from liability under 42 U.S.C. § 1983.[3]

There is no legislative history available as to the original intent of the statute because it is among the oldest in the D.C. Code. The crime began as part of wartime (Civil War) 1861 legislation that originally created a unified "Metropolitan Police district of the District of Columbia" out of the "corporations of Washington and Georgetown, and the county of Washington." [4]

The scope of D.C. Code § 5-115.03 is ambiguous because it does not specify culpable mental states as to applicable criminal laws or the relevant conduct of persons. In

---

[1] D.C. Code § 5-115.03.

[2] See D.C. Code § 22–405; Mattis v. United States, 995 A.2d 223, 225–26 (D.C. 2010)(finding off-duty police officers are protected by the District's assault on a police officer statute); Lande v. Menage Ltd. Pshp., 702 A.2d 1259 (D.C. 1997)(finding private business not liable for the unlawful actions of the off-duty police officers they employed as security guards).

[3] Gregory v. District of Columbia, 957 F. Supp. 299 (D.D.C. 1997)

[4] See Compilation of the Laws in Force in the District of Columbia, April 1, 1868, U.S. Government Printing Office (1868) at 400, (available online at https://books.google.com/books?id=87kWAAAAYAAJ&printsec=frontcover#v=onepage&q&f=false) (citing Congress' August 6, 1861 Act to create a Metropolitan Police district of the District of Columbia, and to establish a police therefor, and providing in section 21 of the law: "It shall be a misdemeanor punishable by imprisonment in the county jail or penitentiary not exceeding two years, or by a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars for any person without justifiable or excusable cause to use personal violence upon any elector in said district, or upon any member of the police force thereof when in the discharge of his duty, or for any such member to neglect making any arrest for an offence against the law of the United States, committed in his presence, or for any person not a member of the police force to falsely represent himself as being such member, with a fraudulent design.").

other words, it is unclear from the statute whether police officers may be criminally liable for neglecting to arrest persons if he or she is unaware of the laws being broken or that person's conduct.[5]

However, even if limited to situations where an officer knows a person is breaking a criminal law in their presence, the statutory language makes no exception for the many circumstances in which safety concerns or District policy would require an officer to decline to arrest. In some situations, requiring an officer to make an arrest may compromise the officer's safety,[6] the arrestee's safety,[7] or the safety of a third party.[8] In some situations, Metropolitan Police Department (MPD) orders specifically direct officers to engage with people in a manner that may not result in an arrest for wrongdoing.[9] In still other situations, District law[10] conflicts with federal law[11] and requiring an arrest undermines the District's authority to make and enforce its own criminal laws.[12]

In rare circumstances,[13] requiring law enforcement officers to make arrests for criminal actions they know to be committed in their presence may be consistent with District policy. The CCRC will evaluate such situations in the context of its review of future offenses. However, the CCRC recommends the repeal of the broad failure to make arrest requirement in D.C. Code § 5-115.03. This change improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised offenses.

---

[5] For example, it is unclear if an officer would be liable for failure to arrest when he or she observes a group of people playing outside without knowing that the game they are playing is shindy or that there is a law against playing shindy, D.C. Code § 22-1308.

[6] E.g., the officer is undercover, the officer is outnumbered, the officer is unarmed or physically outmatched,

[7] E.g., a person in need of immediate medical care for an injury, illness, or psychiatric condition. See D.C. Code § 21-521.

[8] E.g., a hostage.

[9] See., e.g., Metropolitan Police Department, General Order 201.26(V)(D)(2)(f), April 6, 2011; Metropolitan Police Department, General Order 303.01(I)(B)(2)-(3), April 30, 1992; Metropolitan Police Department, Special Order 96-10, July 10, 1996; Metropolitan Police Department, General Order 502.04, April 24, 2018;

[10] D.C. Code § 48-1201 (providing a civil penalty for possession of marijuana, one ounce or less).

[11] 21 U.S. Code § 844 (criminalizing possession of a controlled substance, including marijuana).

[12] Notably, the District recently adopted a policy of non-custodial arrests for public consumption of marijuana. See Martin Weil and Clarence Williams, D.C. arrests for marijuana use to result in citation, not custody, officials say, Washington Post, September 21, 2018, available at https://wapo.st/2OJBEZo?tid=ss_mail&utm_term=.9078c3261301.

[13] See, e.g., D.C. Code § 16-1031 (requiring police officers to make an arrest in domestic violence, but without a criminal penalty for failure to comply). Another situation where a mandatory arrest policy may be considered is when a law enforcement officer is present during a criminal act by another officer. For example, Officer A witnesses Officer B steal narcotics from the evidence control branch and, although A did not consciously desire B to steal and was not an accomplice or accessory after-the-fact, he fails to arrest B to protect B's job. In such situations, the officer's failure to arrest may be conduct sufficiently harmful to be criminalized. This situation will be reviewed when the CCRC examines the District's obstruction of justice statutory provisions.

D.C. Code §§ 7-2502.12 and 7-2502.13. Repeal of Possession of Self-Defense Sprays.

Explanatory Note and Relation to Current District Law. Current D.C. Code § 7-2502.12 provides:

> For the purposes of §§ 7-2502.12 through 7-2502.14, the term:
>
> "Self-defense spray" means a mixture of a lacrimator including chloroacetophenone, alphacloracetophenone, phenylchloromethylketone, orthochlorobenazalm-alononitrile or oleoresin capsicum.

Current D.C. Code § 7-2502.13 provides:

> (a) Notwithstanding the provisions of § 7-2501.01(7)(C), a person may possess and use a self-defense spray in the exercise of reasonable force in defense of the person or the person's property only if it is propelled from an aerosol container, labeled with or accompanied by clearly written instructions as to its use, and dated to indicate its anticipated useful life.
>
> (b) No person shall possess a self-defense spray which is of a type other than that specified in §§ 7-2502.12 to 7-2502.14.

D.C. Code § 7-2502.14 has already been repealed.

The meaning and scope of a "self-defense spray" is unclear. Specifically, it is unclear from whether § 7-2502.12 defines the permissible "self-defense spray" to include any mixture containing a lacrimator of any kind and non-lacrimators, any mixture consisting solely of lacrimators that are one of the five listed substances, or any mixture consisting solely of lacrimators of any kind.

The proportionality of criminal penalties for possession of a self-defense spray is also questionable. The District of Columbia Court of Appeals ("DCCA") has held that lacrimators are unlikely to cause great bodily injury.[1] However, simple possession of a self-defense spray is currently punishable by up to one year in jail,[2] the same maximum penalty currently available for possession of a fully automatic machine gun.[3]

Under the revised code, harmful uses of a self-defense spray would remain criminal even without a separate offense penalizing possession of such a spray. Any object, including a self-defense spray of any kind, is treated as a dangerous weapon if the manner of its actual, attempted, or threatened use is likely to cause death or serious bodily injury.[4]

---

[1] See Jones v. United States, 67 A.3d 547 (D.C. 2013).
[2] D.C. Code § 7-2507.06.
[3] D.C. Code §§ 22-4514(a) and 22-4515; see also D.C. Code § 7-2501.01(10) (defining "machine gun").
[4] RCC § 22E-701 (defining "dangerous weapon"). Consider, for example, an actor who uses self-defense spray against a person who is operating a motor vehicle.

Furthermore, if an actor uses a self-defense spray to assault another person, the potential punishment is determined by the degree of the injury suffered. For example, if the spray causes an injury that requires immediate medical treatment beyond what a layperson can personally administer,[5] the assault may be punished as a third or fourth degree assault, instead of as a sixth degree, simple assault.[6] Other offenses committed by use of a self-defense spray also are penalized more severely in the RCC, including robbery,[7] criminal threats,[8] sexual assault,[9] kidnapping,[10] and criminal restraint.[11]

However, the RCC differentiates self-defense sprays from firearms and other weapons. Weapons that are most likely to facilitate a mass casualty event, are prohibited and punished as contraband per se.[12] Weapons that are likely to cause a more serious bodily injury are punished if they are carried outside of the home,[13] possessed with intent to commit a crime,[14] or possessed during a crime.[15]

This change clarifies, logically reorganizes, and improves the consistency and proportionality of the revised offenses.

[5] See RCC § 22E-701 (defining "significant bodily injury").
[6] RCC § 22E-1202.
[7] RCC § 22E-1201.
[8] RCC § 22E-1204.
[9] RCC § 22E-1301.
[10] RCC § 22E-1401.
[11] RCC § 22E-1402.
[12] RCC § 22E-4101.
[13] RCC § 22E-4102.
[14] RCC § 22E-4103.
[15] RCC § 22E-4104.

D.C. Code § 22-1311. Repeal of Allowing Dogs to Go at Large.

The Commission recommends repealing in its entirety D.C. Code § 22-1311, the offense of allowing dogs to go at large. The current statute only applies to fierce or dangerous dogs, and female dogs while in heat. As it pertains to fierce or dangerous dogs, the conduct prohibited by D.C. Code § 22-1311 is duplicative of prohibited conduct found either elsewhere in the D.C. Code or in the DCMR, and is unnecessary. As it pertains to female dogs in heat, such conduct is not suitable for criminal punishment.

Explanatory Note and Relation to Current District Law.

The statutory section recommended for repeal constitute, D.C. Code § 22-1311, entitled "Allowing dogs to go at large," provides:

> (a) If any owner or possessor of a fierce or dangerous dog shall permit the same to go at large, knowing said dog to be fierce or dangerous, to the danger or annoyance of the inhabitants, he shall upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000; and if such animal shall attack or bite any person, the owner or possessor thereof shall, on conviction, be punished by a fine not exceeding $10,000, and in addition to such punishment the court shall adjudge and order that such animal be forthwith delivered to the poundmaster, and said poundmaster is hereby authorized and directed to kill such animal so delivered to him.
>
> (b) If any owner or possessor of a female dog shall permit her to go at large in the District of Columbia while in heat, he shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $20.

While D.C. Code § 22-1311(a) is constructed to apply only to dangerous or fierce dogs, the prohibited conduct is largely addressed in the D.C. Municipal Regulations (DCMR) provision regarding dogs generally. Specifically, Section 24-900 of the DCMR provides in part:

> No person owning, keeping, or having custody of a dog in the District shall permit the dog to be on any public space in the District, other than a dog park established by section 9a of the Animal Control Act of 1979, passed on 2nd reading on September 20, 2005 (Enrolled version of Bill 16-28), unless the dog is firmly secured by a substantial lease. The leash shall be held by a person capable of managing the dog.

Section 24-900 further provides that anyone who violates the subsection above, "...shall be punished by a fine of not more than three hundred dollars ($300), or by imprisonment not exceeding ten (10) days".

Much like D.C. Code § 22-1311(a), DCMR 24-900, prohibits dogs at large conduct and punishes violators with a monetary penalty. While the maximum monetary penalty allowable under D.C. Code § 22-1311(a) ($5000) is much greater than what is permissible under the DCMR ($300), the DCMR also offers a short period of imprisonment for those who violate this regulation.

The main distinction between D.C. Code § 22-1311(a) and DCMR 24-900 is that the former specifically holds owners of known dangerous or fierce dogs accountable when those dogs attack or pose a danger to others. However, the definition of a "fierce or dangerous dog" is not provided in Title 22 and has not been specified by case law.

However, Title 8, Chapter 19, the Environmental and Animal Control and Protection section of the D.C. Code does address dangerous dogs. Specifically, D.C. Code § 8-1905 provides:

> It shall be unlawful to:
>
> (1) Keep a potentially dangerous or dangerous dog without a valid certificate of registration issued under § 8-1904;
>
> (2) Permit a potentially dangerous dog to be outside a proper enclosure unless the potentially dangerous dog is under the control of a responsible person and restrained by a chain or leash, not exceeding 4 feet in length;
>
> (3) Fail to maintain a dangerous dog exclusively on the owner's property except for medical treatment or examination. When removed from the owner's property for medical treatment or examination, the dangerous dog shall be caged or under the control of a responsible person and muzzled and restrained with a chain or leash, not exceeding 4 feet in length. The muzzle shall be made in a manner that will not cause injury to the dangerous dog or interfere with its vision or respiration, but shall prevent it from biting any human being or animal;
>
> (4) Fail to notify the Mayor within 24 hours if a potentially dangerous or dangerous dog is on the loose, is unconfined, has attacked another domestic animal, has attacked a human being, has died, has been sold, or has been given away. If the potentially dangerous or dangerous dog has been sold or given away, the owner shall also provide the Mayor with the > name, address, and telephone number of the new owner of the potentially dangerous or dangerous dog;

> (5) Fail to surrender a potentially dangerous or dangerous dog to the Mayor for safe confinement pending disposition of the case when there is a reason to believe that the potentially dangerous or dangerous dog poses a threat to public safety;
>
> (6) Fail to comply with any special security or care requirements for a potentially dangerous or dangerous dog the Mayor may establish pursuant to § 8-1903; or
>
> (7) Remove a dangerous dog from the District without written permission from the Mayor.

Much like the DCMR, D.C. Code Title 8 Chapter 19 provides for both a monetary penalty and a period of confinement for those who violate the above Code and gives the Office of the Attorney General jurisdiction to prosecute violators. As D.C. Code § 22-1311(a) provides a monetary penalty as high as $10,000 when a dangerous or fierce dog attacks or causes injury to another, Title 8 Chapter 19 provides the exact same monetary penalty but applies to a broader scope of conduct.

Notably, a CCRC analysis of data received from the Superior Court of the District of Columbia indicates that over the entire 10-year span of 2009-2018 there were no adult convictions for allowing dogs to go at large under D.C. Code § 22-1311(a), D.C. Code § 8-1905, or DCMR 24-900.

D.C. Codes §§ 22-1511 - 22-1513. Repeal of Fraudulent Advertising.

The Commission recommends the repeal of D.C. Code § 22-1511, which criminalizes fraudulent advertising, and D.C. Code §§ 22-1512 and 22-1513, which specify prosecutorial authority and relevant penalties for the offense.

Explanatory Note and Relation to Current District Law
Current D.C. Code § 22-1511 provides:

> It shall be unlawful in the District of Columbia for any person, firm, association, corporation, or advertising agency, either directly or indirectly, to display or exhibit to the public in any manner whatever, whether by handbill, placard, poster, picture, film, or otherwise; or to insert or cause to be inserted in any newspaper, magazine, or other publication printed in the District of Columbia; or to issue, exhibit, or in any way distribute or disseminate to the public; or to deliver, exhibit, mail, or send to any person, firm, association, or corporation any false, untrue, or misleading statement, representation, or advertisement with intent to sell, barter, or exchange any goods, wares, or merchandise or anything of value or to deceive, mislead, or induce any person, firm, association, or corporation to purchase, discount, or in any way invest in or accept as collateral security any bonds, bill, share of stock, note, warehouse receipt, or any security; or with the purpose to deceive, mislead, or induce any person, firm, association, or corporation to purchase, make any loan upon or invest in any property of any kind; or use any of the aforesaid methods with the intent or purpose to deceive, mislead, or induce any other person, firm, or corporation for a valuable consideration to employ the services of any person, firm, association, or corporation so advertising such services.

Repealing the fraudulent advertising statute in D.C. Code § 22-1511 will decriminalize little conduct because nearly all such conduct is already prohibited under the District's current fraud statute[1] and will be criminalized by the RCC fraud statute.[2] The revised fraud statute criminalizes taking, obtaining, transferring, or exercising control over property, with the consent of the owner obtained by deception.[3] However, repealing the fraudulent advertising statute does narrow current District law in one or two minor ways.

[1] D.C. Code § 22-3221. ("A person commits the offense of fraud in the second degree if that person engages in a scheme or systematic course of conduct with intent to defraud or to obtain property of another by means of a false or fraudulent pretense, representation, or promise.")
[2] RCC § 22E-2201. A person commits fraud when that person "Knowingly takes, obtains, transfers, or exercises control over the property of another; (2) With the consent of an owner obtained by deception; (3) With intent to deprive that owner of the property[.]"
[3] RCC § 22E-2201.

First, the fraudulent advertising statute differs from the RCC's fraud statute in that the fraudulent advertising statute covers conduct "with intent to sell, barter, or exchange any goods, wares, or merchandise or anything of value." Consequently, the current fraudulent advertising statute does not require that the actor actually succeeded in defrauding anyone.[4] In contrast, the RCC's fraud statute requires that the actor actually takes, obtains, transfers, or exercises control over property. However, the RCC fraud statute still criminalizes conduct an actor who is unsuccessful in defrauding anyone through the use of deceptive advertising if the conduct is sufficiently close to success that it constitutes an attempt.[5]

Second, the fraudulent advertising statute differs from the RCC's fraud statute in that the fraudulent advertising statute is silent as to whether it includes advertising with immaterial misleading statements or puffery. The plain language seems to suggest even the most trivial, ineffective, or clearly outrageous claims could satisfy the elements of the offense, and there is no relevant D.C. Court of Appeals case law. However, the revised fraud offense specifically excludes liability for such minimal harms by requiring the property of another be obtained by means of "deception" and defining "deception" as "creating or reinforcing a material false impression," and excludes "puffing statements unlikely to deceive ordinary persons[.]"[6] Consequently, to the extent that the fraudulent advertising statute includes displaying advertising that includes immaterial misrepresentations[7] or mere puffery[8], repealing the statute would decriminalize this conduct.

Repealing the fraudulent advertising statute eliminates unnecessary overlap, and improves the proportionality and consistency of the revised criminal code.

---

[4] See, Green v. United States, 312 A.2d 788, 791 (D.C. 1973) (evidence for fraudulent advertising sufficient even without proof that any customers actually purchased falsely advertised goods).
[5] RCC § 22E-301.
[6] RCC § 22E-701 (emphasis added).
[7] For example, if an alcohol vendor advertises liquor as being 50% alcohol by volume, but the liquor is actually only 49.9% alcohol by volume, this immaterial misrepresentation could arguably constitute fraudulent advertising.
[8] For example, if the owner of a diner displays an advertisement that says "word's best coffee," when the diner's coffee is not actually the best coffee in the entire world, these puffing statements would not constitute deception as defined in the RCC, but could arguably constitute fraudulent advertising.

D.C. Codes §§ 22-2301 – 22-2306. Repeal of Panhandling.

The Commission recommends repealing in their entirety D.C. Code §§ 22-2301 – 22-2306 concerning the offense of panhandling.[1] Most panhandling statutory provisions appear to be facially unconstitutional under recent Supreme Court case law, and the most severe forms of behavior addressed by the provisions involve conduct that is already criminalized in the RCC and current D.C. Code. For those provisions of the panhandling statute that may be constitutional and not otherwise criminalized, a criminal sanction does not appear to be proportionate. Panhandling may be regarded as a status offense that criminalizes conduct associated with poverty and homelessness. Repealing the panhandling statutes avoids constitutional challenges, eliminates unnecessary overlap, and improves the proportionality in the revised statutes.

Explanatory Note and Relation to Current District Law.

The statutory sections recommended for repeal constitute the sections in D.C. Code Title 22 Chapter 32, entitled "Panhandling." The primary statute describing the offense is D.C. Code § 22-2302, which provides:

> (a) No person may ask, beg, or solicit alms, including money and other things of value, in an aggressive manner in any place open to the general public, including sidewalks, streets, alleys, driveways, parking lots, parks, plazas, buildings, doorways and entrances to buildings, and gasoline service stations, and the grounds enclosing buildings.
> (b) No person may ask, beg, or solicit alms in any public transportation vehicle; or at any bus, train, or subway station or stop.
> (c) No person may ask, beg, or solicit alms within 10 feet of any automatic teller machine (ATM).
> (d) No person may ask, beg, or solicit alms from any operator or occupant of a motor vehicle that is in traffic on a public street.
> (e) No person may ask, beg, or solicit alms from any operator or occupant of a motor vehicle on a public street in exchange for blocking, occupying, or reserving a public parking space, or directing the operator or occupant to a public parking space.
> (f) No person may ask, beg, or solicit alms in exchange for cleaning motor vehicle windows while the vehicle is in traffic on a public street.
> (g) No person may ask, beg, or solicit alms in exchange for protecting, watching, washing, cleaning, repairing, or painting a motor vehicle or bicycle while it is parked on a public street.
> (h) No person may ask, beg, or solicit alms on private property or residential property, without permission from the owner or occupant.

[1] D.C. Code § 22-2301. Definitions; D.C. Code § 22-2303. Prohibited Acts; § 22-2303. Permitted activity; § 22-2304. Penalties; § 22-2305. Conduct of prosecutions; and § 22-2306. Disclosures.

Other statutes in Chapter 23 concern: definitions;[2] a statement that exercise of a constitutional right to "picket, protest, or speak, and acts authorized by a permit" issued by D.C. government are all lawful;[3] that punishment for the offense is up to 90 days imprisonment, a fine, or both;[4] and that panhandling is to be prosecuted by the Attorney General.[5]

The panhandling statute criminalizes two broad categories of speech that involve use of "ask[ing], beg[ging], or solicit[ing] alms," defined as the "the spoken, written, or printed word or such other act conducted for the purpose of obtaining an immediate donation of money or thing of value."[6] The first category involves asking for donations in any public place in conjunction with some additional conduct—e.g., making a person fear bodily harm, touching a person without consent, repeating requests after being told no, or blocking someone's passage.[7] The second category involves asking for donations in one of several narrowly-specified public locations[8] (e.g., at a bus stop) or any private location.[9]

It has long been established that under the First Amendment, laws that target speech based on its communicative content are presumptively unconstitutional and can survive legal challenge only if they are narrowly-tailored to serve compelling state interests (under a strict-scrutiny test).[10] When the District's panhandling statute was enacted in 1993, however, Supreme Court precedent suggested that the speech involved in asking for a

---

[2] D.C. Code § 22-2301 ("For the purposes of this chapter, the term: (1) 'Aggressive manner' means: (A) Approaching, speaking to, or following a person in a manner as would cause a reasonable person to fear bodily harm or the commission of a criminal act upon the person, or upon property in the person's immediate possession; (B) Touching another person without that person's consent in the course of asking for alms; (C) Continuously asking, begging, or soliciting alms from a person after the person has made a negative response; or (D) Intentionally blocking or interfering with the safe or free passage of a person by any means, including unreasonably causing a person to take evasive action to avoid physical contact. (2) 'Ask, beg, or solicit alms' includes the spoken, written, or printed word or such other act conducted for the purpose of obtaining an immediate donation of money or thing of value.").

[3] D.C. Code § 22-2303 ("Acts authorized as an exercise of a person's constitutional right to picket, protest, or speak, and acts authorized by a permit issued by the District of Columbia government shall not constitute unlawful activity under this chapter.").

[4] D.C. Code § 22-2304 ("(a) Any person convicted of violating any provision of § 22-2302 shall be fined not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01 or be imprisoned not more than 90 days or both. (b) In lieu of or in addition to the penalty provided in subsection (a) of this section, a person convicted of violating any provision of § 22-2302 may be required to perform community service as provided in § 16-712.").

[5] D.C. Code § 22-2305 ("Prosecutions for violations of this chapter shall be conducted in the name of the District of Columbia by the Corporation Counsel.").

[6] D.C. Code § 22-2301(2) ("'Ask, beg, or solicit alms' includes the spoken, written, or printed word or such other act conducted for the purpose of obtaining an immediate donation of money or thing of value.").

[7] D.C. Code §22-2302(a); D.C. Code § 22-2301(1) ("'Aggressive manner' means: (A) Approaching, speaking to, or following a person in a manner as would cause a reasonable person to fear bodily harm or the commission of a criminal act upon the person, or upon property in the person's immediate possession; (B) Touching another person without that person's consent in the course of asking for alms; (C) Continuously asking, begging, or soliciting alms from a person after the person has made a negative response; or (D) Intentionally blocking or interfering with the safe or free passage of a person by any means, including unreasonably causing a person to take evasive action to avoid physical contact.").

[8] D.C. Code §22-2302(b)-(g).

[9] D.C. Code §22-2302(h).

[10] R.A.V. v. St. Paul, 505 U.S. 377, 395, 112 S.Ct. 2538 (1992).

donation of money would not constitute a content-based law subject to strict scrutiny unless the government was signaling disagreement with the content of the speech.[11] Since adoption of the panhandling statute, in the 2015 case of Reed v. Gilbert, the Supreme Court clarified that "strict scrutiny applies either when a law is content based on its face or when the purpose and justification for the law are content based."[12]

The plain language of the District's panhandling statute suggests that it is, in large part, facially unconstitutional under the standard in Reed v. Gilbert.[13] Because §22-2302 only prohibits the solicitation of alms, versus other types of speech, it is a content-based statute subject to strict scrutiny and a claim as to this has been upheld by the United States District Court for the District of Columbia.[14] The most severe forms of the offense involve both a content-based regulation of speech and, through the panhandling definition of

[11] See, e.g., Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 791 (1989).
[12] Reed v. Town of Gilbert, Ariz., 135 S.Ct. 2218, 2228 (2015).
[13] The evolution of Supreme Court First Amendment case law is not the only grounds for questioning the constitutionality of the District's panhandling statute. Even at the time of enactment of the panhandling statute, there appears to have been confusion in the legal analysis. Most notably, the legislative history asserts that the initial bill for the District's statute "was modeled after the Portland, Oregon ordinance on aggressive panhandling," but also states that there was a final Amendment in the Nature of a Substitute that added other provisions. See Committee on the Judiciary Report on Bill 10-72, the "Panhandling Control Act of 1993" at 3. The legal analysis and testimony regarding the initial bill by then Corporation Counsel John Payton specifically recommended alignment of the panhandling statute with the Portland, Oregon municipal ordinances which had been upheld by courts. However, the Portland, Oregon ordinances that Payton referenced and included with his testimony were 10 day, content-neutral "offensive physical contact" and pedestrian blocking statutes that do not criminalize or regulate speech at all. See Committee on the Judiciary Report on Bill 10-72, the "Panhandling Control Act of 1993" at 34-35. The Portland, Oregon "offensive physical contact" statute remains in effect today. Portland, Or., Mun. Code § 14A.40.020. The legislative history for the District statute does not explain whether or how the legal analysis provided by John Payton (representing the Executive) for the original bill was updated along with the final statutory text in the Amendment in the Nature of a Substitute.
[14] See Brown v. Gov't of D.C., 390 F. Supp. 3d 114, 125 (D.D.C. 2019) ("As for the nature of the government's statutory prohibitions and its justifications for limiting speech in this manner, Plaintiffs allege that strict scrutiny applies, because the Panhandling Control Act is a content-based regulation insofar as it prohibits certain speech—i.e. immediate requests for money or things of value—in public areas, based on the message communicated. (See 5AC at ¶¶ 153–156.) Plaintiffs further allege that the Act cannot survive strict scrutiny, because the statutory restrictions are not narrowly tailored to promote a compelling governmental interest. (See id. at ¶¶ 158–62.) Specifically, the complaint contends that there are less restrictive alternatives available to the government, such as "enforcing existing generic criminal laws already on the books in this jurisdiction or enacting new criminal laws that directly target conduct that threatens the District's asserted interests rather than employing regulations that indirectly support those interests by directly burdening protected speech." (Id. at ¶ 161; see also id. at ¶¶ 160–62.) It is by now well established that government regulations are content-based if they "appl[y] to particular speech because of the topic discussed or the idea or message expressed[,]" Reed, 135 S. Ct. at 2227, and that content-based laws that restrict protected speech are subject to strict scrutiny, id. Furthermore, strict scrutiny " 'requires the Government to prove that the restriction furthers a compelling interest and is narrowly tailored to achieve that interest[.]' " Id. at 2231 (quoting Ariz. Free Ent. Club's Freedom Club PAC v. Bennett, 564 U.S. 721, 734, 131 S.Ct. 2806, 180 L.Ed.2d 664 (2011)). Thus, the complaint's First Amendment claims are plainly plausible, insofar as Plaintiffs assert that the Panhandling Control Act is both subject to strict scrutiny (because it prohibits requests for immediate donations of money in various public areas and not any other speech—i.e. it is a content-based restriction), and does not satisfy strict scrutiny (because other less restrictive alternatives are available).").

"aggressive manner,"[15] an additional act that is already criminal under the D.C. Code and RCC.[16] The very fact that other criminal laws that aren't content-based regulation of speech already address the conduct described in the panhandling statute demonstrates that the statute is not "narrowly tailored." Additionally, since Reed, panhandling restrictions based on geographic areas that involve sidewalks, roads, parks, and other traditional or recognized public forums[17] have routinely been struck down by courts.[18] Specific evidence is needed as to the government's interest and, a general "public safety" justification does not constitute a compelling interest.[19] Such evidence is not part of the current legislative history, which is summary in its justification.[20]

Notably, two aspects of the current panhandling statute that may be facially constitutional are the D.C. Code § 22-2302(b) prohibition on panhandling "in any public

---

[15] D.C. Code § 22-2301(1).

[16] For example, D.C. Code § 22-2301(1)(A) ("Approaching, speaking to, or following a person in a manner as would cause a reasonable person to fear bodily harm or the commission of a criminal act upon the person, or upon property in the person's immediate possession") corresponds closely with disorderly conduct under D.C. Code § 22-1321(a) and RCC § 22E-4201. D.C. Code § 22-2301(1)(B) ("Touching another person without that person's consent in the course of asking for alms") arguably corresponds with assault under D.C. Code § 22-404 and offensive physical contact under RCC § 22E-1205. D.C. Code § 22-2301(1)(D) ("Intentionally blocking or interfering with the safe or free passage of a person by any means, including unreasonably causing a person to take evasive action to avoid physical contact") tracks Crowding, obstructing, or incommoding under D.C. Code § 22–1307.

[17] See Minnesota Voters All. v. Mansky, 138 S. Ct. 1876, 1885 (2018) ("Generally speaking, our cases recognize three types of government-controlled spaces: traditional public forums, designated public forums, and nonpublic forums. In a traditional public forum—parks, streets, sidewalks, and the like—the government may impose reasonable time, place, and manner restrictions on private speech, but restrictions based on content must satisfy strict scrutiny, and those based on viewpoint are prohibited. See Pleasant Grove City v. Summum, 555 U.S. 460, 469, 129 S.Ct. 1125, 172 L.Ed.2d 853 (2009). The same standards apply in designated public forums—spaces that have 'not traditionally been regarded as a public forum' but which the government has 'intentionally opened up for that purpose.' Id., at 469–470, 129 S.Ct. 1125. In a nonpublic forum, on the other hand—a space that 'is not by tradition or designation a forum for public communication'—the government has much more flexibility to craft rules limiting speech. Perry Ed. Assn. v. Perry Local Educators' Assn., 460 U.S. 37, 46, 103 S.Ct. 948, 74 L.Ed.2d 794 (1983). The government may reserve such a forum 'for its intended purposes, communicative or otherwise, as long as the regulation on speech is reasonable and not an effort to suppress expression merely because public officials oppose the speaker's view.'").

[18] See, e.g., Norton v. City of Springfield, 806 F.3d 411, 413 (7th Cir. 2015); Cutting v. City of Portland, Maine, 802 F.3d 79 (1st Cir. 2015); Comite de Jornaleros de Redondo Beach v. City of Redondo Beach, 657 F.3d 936, 949 (9th Cir. 2011) (en banc); Thayer v. City of Worcester, 144 F. Supp. 3d 218, 237 (D. Mass. 2015) ("[M]unicipalities must go back to the drafting board and craft solutions which recognize an individuals… rights under the First Amendment…); McLaughlin v. City of Lowell, 140 F. Supp. 3d 177, 189 (D. Mass. 2015); Browne v. City of Grand Junction, Colorado, 2015 WL 5728755, at *13 (D. Colo. Sept. 30, 2015).

[19] Thayer v. City of Worcester, 144 F. Supp. 3d 218, 233 (D. Mass. 2015) (striking down provisions against blocking path and following a person after they gave a negative response)

[20] See Committee on the Judiciary Report on Bill 10-72, the "Panhandling Control Act of 1993" at 5 ("The Amendment in the Nature of a Substitute creates place restrictions on panhandling in these situations because persons engage in certain activity, whether it is parking their vehicle, sitting in traffic, waiting at a bus or subway stop, or conducting banking business at an ATM machine, that prevents them from 1eaving immediately after saying no to the panhandler's request for money. It is because of these situations that the Committee finds it necessary to establish place restrictions on the activities of panhandlers.").

transportation vehicle; or at any bus, train, or subway station or stop",[21] and the D.C. Code § 22-2302(h) prohibition "on private property or residential property, without permission from the owner or occupant." Unlike the other provisions of the panhandling statute which apply over-broadly to "any place open to the general public"[22] and involve otherwise criminal conduct (and so are not narrowly tailored), or occur in traditional public forums like public streets or sidewalks,[23] government has more leeway to regulate more in non-public forums such as these. Supreme Court precedent has upheld "reasonable" speech regulations in non-public forums where the government is not opposing the content of the speech.[24] Unfortunately, the current panhandling statute does not define language in D.C. Code § 22-2302(b)[25] and D.C. Code § 22-2302(h)[26] that may be key to determining the breadth (and facial constitutionality) of these provisions. Moreover, D.C. Code § 22-2302(b) and D.C. Code § 22-2302(h) may be susceptible to arguments that the laws are not reasonable given the government's interests at stake.[27] Consequently, while D.C. Code § 22-2302(b) and D.C. Code § 22-2302(h) may withstand a facial challenge under the First Amendment, this is not clear and does not preclude the possibility that many cases would raise as-applied challenges.

To the extent that the District wishes to regulate panhandling-type speech in public transportation, public transportation stations, or in door-to-door knocking on private residences,[28] such conduct is better addressed through civil sanctions or other regulatory

---

[21] McFarlin v. D.C., 681 A.2d 440, 448 (D.C. 1996) (upholding a First Amendment challenge to D.C. Code § 22-2302(b) where, under doctrine of constitutional avoidance "subway station or stop" under the statute was construed to not include traditional public fora, so strict scrutiny was not required standard of review).

[22] D.C. Code § 22-2302(a).

[23] D.C. Code § 22-2302(c)-(g).

[24] Lehman v. City of Shaker Heights, 418 U.S. 298, 303–04 (1974).

[25] For example, the boundaries of a "subway station or stop" are undefined. The matter is the subject of litigation (see McFarlin v. D.C., 681 A.2d 440, 447–48 (D.C. 1996)) and Brown v. Gov't of D.C., 390 F. Supp. 3d 114, 125 (D.D.C. 2019).

[26] For example, it is unclear if "residential property" is intended to include government-owned (public) housing.

[27] See Watchtower Bible & Tract Soc'y of New York, Inc. v. Vill. of Stratton, 536 U.S. 150, 162–63 (2002) ("Despite the emphasis on the important role that door-to-door canvassing and pamphleteering has played in our constitutional tradition of free and open discussion, these early cases also recognized the interests a town may have in some form of regulation, particularly when the solicitation of money is involved. In Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U.S. 296, 60 S.Ct. 900, 84 L.Ed. 1213 (1940), the Court held that an ordinance requiring Jehovah's Witnesses to obtain a license before soliciting door to door was invalid because the issuance of the license depended on the exercise of discretion by a city official. Our opinion recognized that "a State may protect its citizens from fraudulent solicitation by requiring a stranger in the community, before permitting him publicly to solicit funds for any purpose, to establish his identity and his authority to act for the cause which he purports to represent." Id., at 306, 60 S.Ct. 900. Similarly, in Martin v. City of Struthers, the Court recognized crime prevention as a legitimate interest served by these ordinances and noted that "burglars frequently pose as canvassers, either in order that they may have a pretense to discover whether a house is empty and hence ripe for burglary, or for the purpose of spying out the premises in order that they may return later." 319 U.S., at 144, 63 S.Ct. 862. Despite recognition of these interests as legitimate, our precedent is clear that there must be a balance between these interests and the effect of the regulations on First Amendment rights. We "must 'be astute to examine the effect of the challenged legislation' and must 'weigh the circumstances and ... appraise the substantiality of the reasons advanced in support of the regulation.' " Ibid. (quoting Schneider, 308 U.S., at 161, 60 S.Ct. 146).").

[28] Notably, a person soliciting donations who remains on another person's property without the owner's permission would likely be subject to liability under D.C. Code § 22–3302, Unlawful entry on property, and RCC § 22E-2601, trespass.

mechanisms. Soliciting a donation on public transportation or in a public transportation station appears to comparable to other undesirable conduct (e.g., spitting, smoking, playing loud music, etc.) in such locations that is currently punishable by a $50 civil fine.[29] Charitable solicitations done without meeting regulatory requirements are also subject to criminal fines and penalties under other provisions concerning charitable solicitations per Title 44, Chapter 17 of the D.C. Code.[30]

In addition, the current panhandling statute's assignment of prosecutorial authority to the Attorney General for the District of Columbia (instead of the United States Attorney for the District of Columbia) may run afoul of Home Rule Act limitations on the Council's power to assign prosecutorial authority. The panhandling offense is punishable by a fine or imprisonment or both, which under D.C. Code 23-101 (as construed by the DCCA) means that the statute cannot be prosecuted by the Attorney General for the District of Columbia unless it is deemed a "police or municipal ordinance" under subsection (a) or there is pre-Home Rule Act Congressional law specifying local prosecution per subsection (c).[31]

Case law determining prosecutorial authority in the District is complex and evolving, but the most recent DCCA opinion suggests a multi-factor analysis be used which includes consideration of: 1) the statute's nature as a "Local Regulation or General Prohibition;" 2) "History of Regulation and Enforcement;" 3) "Placement in D.C. Code;" 4) "Legislative History;" 5) "Dual Prosecution;" and 6) "Penalties."[32]

This analysis renders a mixed result for the panhandling statute. The statute is arguably a "local regulation" insofar does not absolutely bar solicitation of alms but does so in specified circumstances. Historically, the Office of the Attorney General (OAG) has prosecuted the offense since its creation in 1993.[33] Moreover, there is a link between the current panhandling statute and a prior vagrancy statute that broadly criminalized begging and was Congressionally-designated as an offense prosecuted by Corporation Counsel.[34] However, this link to the vagrancy statute is tenuous as the panhandling statute is quite different in scope. Panhandling includes conduct that would constitute "simple assault"

---

[29] D.C. Code § 35–251.

[30] D.C. Code § 44-1712 ("Any person violating any provision of this chapter, or regulation made pursuant thereto, or filing, or causing to be filed, an application or report pursuant to this chapter, or regulation made pursuant thereto, containing any false or fraudulent statement, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500, or by imprisonment of not more than 60 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment.").

[31] See generally In re Settles, 218 A.3d 235, 239 (D.C. 2019) ("Otherwise, § 23-101 divides criminal offenses into three general categories: violations of "police or municipal ordinances or regulations," which are prosecuted by the District of Columbia, § 23-101(a); violations of "penal statutes in the nature of police or municipal regulations," which are prosecuted by the District of Columbia as long as the "maximum punishment is a fine only, or imprisonment not exceeding one year," but not both, id.; District of Columbia v. Moody, 304 F.2d 943 (D.C. Cir. 1962) (per curiam); and all others, which (subject to specific statutory exceptions) are prosecuted by the United States, D.C. Code § 23-101(c).").

[32] In re Settles, 218 A.3d 235 (D.C. 2019).

[33] See, e.g., McFarlin v. D.C., 681 A.2d 440, 442 (D.C. 1996); Brown v. Gov't of D.C., 390 F. Supp. 3d 114, 125 (D.D.C. 2019).

[34] See D.C. Code § 22–3302 (1940). ("The following classes of persons shall be deemed vagrants in the District of Columbia: …(7) Any person wandering abroad and begging, or who goes about from door to door or places himself in or on any highway, passage, or other public place to beg or receive alms."). D.C. Code § 22–3305 (1940). ("All prosecutions under sections 22-3302 to 22-3306 shall be in the police court of the District of Columbia, in the name of the District of Columbia, by the corporation counsel or any of his assistants.").

(current D.C. Code 22-404),[35] an offense prosecuted by the United States Attorney for the District of Columbia—heightening concerns that the Council's designation of OAG as prosecutor affects prosecutorial powers that Congress intended to be exercised by the United States Attorney for the District of Columbia. The panhandling offense is codified in Title 22, with other criminal offenses that are generally not regulatory in nature. The legislative history of the panhandling statute does not include any Committee on the Judiciary statement as to the propriety of jurisdiction by the Attorney General for the District of Columbia (or the predecessor Corporation Counsel), and goes out of its way to note that the conduct covered by the panhandling statute from the vagrancy statute.[36] Moreover, it is notable that the final legislation assigning prosecutorial responsibility contradicts without explanation hearing testimony by the Corporation Counsel John Payton noting that a penalty of a fine and imprisonment under D.C. Code § 23-101 would generally entails prosecution by the United States Attorney for the District of Columbia.[37] Lastly, while the penalty for the offense is within the realm of penalties for other offenses that Congress has designated as prosecutable by OAG, it is higher than most regulatory penalties and exceeds the Congressional limitation on penalties for regulations (not otherwise subject to a Congressional grant of authority) to 10 days imprisonment.[38]

While the question is unsettled, on balance these considerations suggest that the panhandling statute is not a police regulation for purposes of D.C. Code 23-101(a), and, for purposes of D.C. Code 23-101(c), is more than a mere amendment of the vagrancy statute that was Congressionally-granted to OAG for prosecution. Were the voyeurism statute to be retained in the D.C. Code, continued prosecution by OAG would be subject to challenge.

---

[35] See Testimony of John Payton, Corporation Counsel, July 10, 1991 in Committee on the Judiciary Report on Bill 10-72, the "Panhandling Control Act of 1993" at 30 ("Much of the conduct which would constitute "offensive physical contact" would constitute the offense of simple assault under D.C. Code section 22-504 (1989)"). Corporation Counsel Payton also recommended raising the penalty to 90 days to better align with the contemporary assault penalty. Id. See, also, Testimony of Jacqueline A. Baillargeon, Public Defender Service, July 24, 1991 in Id. at 89.

[36] Committee on the Judiciary Report on Bill 10-72, the "Panhandling Control Act of 1993" at 3 ("The current vagrancy law (D.C. Code§ 22-3302 et seq.) does not address the issue of aggressive panhandling or offensive physical contact, but it does make begging a criminal offense. Bill 10-72 repeals a provision of this law that was found to be too vague and thus unenforceable constitutionally. The bill is not intended to prevent the needy from begging peaceably, it is intended to rid the street of those who use the plight of the homeless as a means to achieve personal monetary gain through panhandling aggressively as well as those whose behavior presents a danger to citizens in public areas.").

[37] See Testimony of John Payton, Corporation Counsel, July 10, 1991 in Committee on the Judiciary Report on Bill 10-72, the "Panhandling Control Act of 1993" at 31 ("The bill should make clear who would prosecute a person for committing the offense of offensive physical contact (or the offenses of obstructing a sidewalk or an entrance). Under D.C. Code section 23-101 (1989), the general rule is that where both a fine and imprisonment may be imposed, the prosecution is conducted in the name of the United States by the United States Attorney for the District of Columbia. Therefore, if the Council intends that these offenses be prosecuted by the Corporation Counsel in the name of the district of columbia, it should expressly so state in the bill.").

[38] See D.C. Code § 1-303.05 ("The Council of the District of Columbia is hereby authorized to prescribe reasonable penalties of a fine not to exceed $300 or imprisonment not to exceed 10 days, in lieu of or in addition to any fine, or to prescribe civil fines or other civil sanctions for the violation of any building regulation promulgated under authority of § 1-303.04, and any regulation promulgated under authority of § 1-303.01, and any regulation promulgated under authority of § 1-303.03.").

The Metropolitan Police Department in 2017 reported just 19 arrests for panhandling.[39] In contrast, Metro Transit Police over the course of just January 2019 recorded 20 arrests or citations issued for "PANHANDLING/BEG/VAGRANCY" or similar offense codes that include "panhandling".[40] This suggests that a large proportion of the enforcement of the panhandling statutes in recent years is being conducted by Metro Transit Police.

However, according to a CCRC analysis of data received from the Superior Court of the District of Columbia, over the entire 10-year span of 2009-2018, there were fewer than 104 charges and fewer than 40 convictions of adults for panhandling—exact numbers cannot be provided due to limitations on the court data.[41] Panhandling is a crime eligible for post and forfeit procedures,[42] however, which may partly account for the low number of prosecutions.

In a recent CCRC survey, District voters were asked to assign a ranking to the seriousness of "begging for money at a bus stop or on public transportation" when "[t]he begging is not threatening to anyone."[43] The most frequent (modal) response, selected by 48.3% of recipients, was "0," a rating that was equivalent on the chart provided to respondents to: "Not a crime (e.g., a speeding ticket)." The median response was a "1," a low rating less serious than "non-painful physical contact (e.g., pushing someone around)." The mean response was a "2.4," a rating that is one class lower than a "4" which was equivalent on the chart provided to respondents to the harm of causing a "minor injury treatable at home (e.g., a black eye)."[44] More aggressive behavior revealed nearly identical results. Where District voters were asked to rank the seriousness of "continuing to beg for money in a public place from a person who already has said no. The begging is not threatening to anyone," the most frequent response, selected by 27.3% of recipients, was "0." The median response was a "2," and the mean response was a "2.8."

---

[39] See MPD Adult Arrests by Year 2017 (available at https://mpdc.dc.gov/sites/default/files/dc/sites/mpdc/publication/attachments/Arrests%202017%20Public.csv).

[40] https://www.wmata.com/about/transit-police/upload/January-2019-Monthly-Blotter-Report.pdf

[41] See CCRC Advisory Group Memorandum #28 - Statistics on District Adult Criminal Charges and Convictions (October 10, 2019) and Appendix D to Advisory Group Memorandum #28 - DC Superior Court Criminal Division Adult Charges and Convictions Disposed (October 10, 2019) (available at https://ccrc.dc.gov/page/ccrc-documents).

[42] See Superior Court Bond and Collateral List: Non-Traffic Offenses – Collateral (July 5, 2019) (available at https://www.dccourts.gov/sites/default/files/Bond%20Collateral_Non-Traffic%20Offenses-Collateral)_07052019.pdf).

[43] For more information on the survey results and methodology, see CCRC Advisory Group Memo #27, Public Opinion Surveys on Ordinal Rankings of Offenses (October 10, 2019) (available at https://ccrc.dc.gov/page/ccrc-documents).

[44] This conduct is roughly equivalent to simple assault under current District law, punishable by up to 180 days imprisonment. See D.C. Code § 22-404; RCC §§ 22E-1202 and 22E-1205.

D.C. Code § 22-3224. Repeal of Fraudulent Registration.

The Commission recommends the repeal of D.C. Code § 22-3224, which criminalizes fraudulent registration at a hotel, motel, or other lodging establishment.

Current D.C. Code § 22-3224 provides: "A person commits the offense of fraudulent registration if, with intent to defraud the proprietor or manager of a hotel, motel, or other establishment which provides lodging to transient guests, that person falsely registers under a name or address other than his or her actual name or address." This conduct may still be criminalized under the RCC's fraud[1] statute. Repealing the fraudulent registration statute may change current District law in two ways.

Repealing the fraudulent registration statute in D.C. Code § 22-3224 will decriminalize little conduct because nearly all such conduct is already prohibited under the District's current fraud statute[2] and will be criminalized by the RCC fraud[3] statutes. The revised fraud statute criminalizes taking, obtaining, transferring, or exercising control over property, with the consent of the owner obtained by deception.[4] However, repealing the fraudulent registration statute does narrow current District law in one or two minor ways.

First, the fraudulent registration statute does not require that the actor actually defrauded the proprietor or manager of the hotel. The offense only requires registering under a false name or address, with intent to defraud. Consequently, the current fraudulent registration statute does not require that the actor actually succeeded in defrauding anyone. A person who provides a false name or address, but does not actually use the hotel room without payment would be guilty of fraudulent registration. In contrast, the RCC's fraud statute requires that the actor actually takes, obtains, transfers, or exercises control over property. However, the RCC fraud statute still criminalizes conduct an actor who is unsuccessful in defrauding anyone through the use of deceptive registration if the conduct is sufficiently close to success that it constitutes an attempt.[5]

Second, the fraudulent registration statute does not define the term "defraud." Using a false name or address to obtain a hotel room without paying for it would constitute fraud or theft of services[6] under the RCC. However, since the term "defraud" is undefined, it is unclear if the fraudulent registration statute covers cases where a person provides a false name or address to deceive the manager or proprietor of the hotel, but still intends to

[1] RCC § 22E-2201.
[2] D.C. Code § 22-3221. ("A person commits the offense of fraud in the second degree if that person engages in a scheme or systematic course of conduct with intent to defraud or to obtain property of another by means of a false or fraudulent pretense, representation, or promise.")
[3] RCC § 22E-2201. (A person commits fraud when that person "Knowingly takes, obtains, transfers, or exercises control over the property of another; (2) With the consent of an owner obtained by deception; (3) With intent to deprive that owner of the property[.]").
[4] RCC § 22E-2201.
[5] RCC § 22E-301.
[6] RCC § 22E-2101

pay for the room. If the fraudulent registration offense includes use of a false name or address, even when the actor intends to pay for the room, repealing the statute would decriminalize this conduct.

Repealing the fraudulent registration statute eliminates unnecessary overlap, and improves the proportionality and consistency of the revised criminal code.

D.C. Code § 37-131.08(b). Repeal of Penalties for Illegal Vending.

Explanatory Note and Relation to Current District Law. Title 37 of the D.C. Code and Title 24 of the D.C. Municipal Regulations ("DCMR") address a wide array of rules for vending goods from public spaces such as streets and sidewalks. A failure to comply with any of the regulations triggers both civil[1] and criminal penalties.[2] D.C. Code § 37-131.08(b) specifies a maximum penalty of 90 days in jail and a $500 fine for a violation of "any of the provisions of this chapter or any regulations issued pursuant to this chapter."[3] An arrest may also result in significant business losses to a vendor.[4]

Imprisonment does not appear to be a proportionate punishment for conduct that fails to comply with vending regulations does not otherwise involve fraudulent activity,[5] physically harm others,[6] involve the sale of spoiled, contaminated, or food unfit for consumption,[7] or block public use of locations[8]—harms separately addressed in the current and/or revised criminal code. Recent journalism has highlighted that the District imposes some of the highest fees and most stringent requirements for vending of any American city, limiting the ability of micro-businesses and entrepreneurs young and old to legally engage in sales.[9] The scope of illegal vending activity[10] and the relatively small number of prosecutions (see below) also raise concerns about selective enforcement that may disproportionately affect some members of the community.[11]

---

[1] The Commission makes no recommendation at this time regarding civil remedies or penalties. Notably, however, violations involving nonpayment of fees, such as failure to maintain a business license and parking illegally, trigger steeper penalties than do violations involving risks to public safety, such as failure to comply with the District's health and fire codes. See 16 DCMR § 3313.

[2] D.C. Code §§ 37-131.08 and 22-3571.01; 24 DCMR § 575; 16 DCMR §§ 3201 and 3313.

[3] See also D.C. Code § 22-3571.01.

[4] Vendors who are arrested are subject to both lost revenue and lost product. See Associated Press, LA Joins Other Big Cities in Legalizing Street Vending, U.S. NEWS & WORLD REPORT (November 28, 2018) (explaining "If someone complains, the police, they could come in and take everything from us. Make us throw all our stuff away and we lose all our money for that day.").

[5] See D.C. Code § 22-3221; RCC § 22E-2201.

[6] See D.C. Code §§ 22-401 – 22-405; 22-406; RCC § 22E-1202.

[7] See D.C. Code § 48-109 (authorizing a penalty of up to 1 year of imprisonment and fines of up to $10,000 for sale or possession with intent to sell an adulterated food or other item).

[8] See D.C. Code §§ 22-1307; RCC § 22E-4203.

[9] See, e.g., Jeff Clabaugh, Why DC is 2nd-most challenging city for food trucks, WTOP (March 22, 2018) (noting vendors must complete at least 23 specific interactions with regulators, pay high start-up fees, and overcome a significant number of ongoing, city-imposed hurdles in their quest to turn a profit); Robert Frommer, Washington DC vs. Entrepreneurs: DC's Monumental Regulations Stifle Small Businesses, Institute for Justice City Study Series (November 2010).

[10] Vending without a license is an open, longstanding, tolerated practice in many District locations. See, e.g., Orion Donovan-Smith, At Dave Thomas Circle, fixing a traffic nightmare threatens a D.C. vending empire, WASHINGTON POST (August 14, 2019).

[11] In 2017, three black teenagers were handcuffed and detained on the National Mall by undercover U.S. Park Police officers for attempting to sell cold water without a permit. In response, Councilmember Charles Allen sent a letter to the U.S. Park Police Chief, Robert D. MacLean stating, "I can't help but think how the reaction by these same officers might have varied if different children had set up a quaint hand-painted lemonade stand on the same spot. While still the same violation of selling a beverage without proper permits and licenses, I doubt we would have seen little girls in pigtails handcuffed on the ground." See NBC Channel 4 Washington, Teens Detained for Selling Water on the National Mall, (June 23, 2017).

The Metropolitan Police Department reports hundreds of arrests for vending violations each year, including 472 in 2017 (its most recent annual report).[12] However, according to a CCRC analysis of data received from the Superior Court of the District of Columbia, over the entire 10-year span of 2009-2018, there were just 58 charges and fewer than 20 convictions of adults for vending without a license.[13] Vending without a license is a crime eligible for post and forfeit procedures,[14] however, which may partly account for the low number of prosecutions.

In a recent CCRC survey, District voters were asked to assign a ranking to the seriousness of "selling sunglasses on a public sidewalk without a business license or vending permit, as required by law."[15] The most frequent (modal) response, selected by 28.2% of recipients, was "0," a rating equivalent to "Not a crime (e.g., a speeding ticket)." The median response was a "2," a low rating equivalent to "non-painful physical contact (e.g., pushing someone around)." The mean response was a "3.1," a rating that is about one class lower than a "4" which was equivalent to the harm of causing a "minor injury

---

See, also, United States v. Harrison, 2018 WL 5046496 Slip Copy (D.D.C. Aug 7, 2018) at 1 (where a parolee was arrested for vending without a license but was otherwise compliant with his conditions of release).

[12] See MPD Annual Report: 2017 (February 22, 2019) (available at https://mpdc.dc.gov/page/mpd-annual-reports).

[13] See CCRC Advisory Group Memorandum #28 - Statistics on District Adult Criminal Charges and Convictions (October 10, 2019) and Appendix D to Advisory Group Memorandum #28 - DC Superior Court Criminal Division Adult Charges and Convictions Disposed (October 10, 2019) (available at https://ccrc.dc.gov/page/ccrc-documents).

Data labeled as vending without a license specifically cited to 24 DCMR 502.2 which states: "In addition to the requirements specified in § 502, no person shall vend food from public or private space in the District of Columbia without obtaining and maintaining a valid: (a) Health inspection certificate issued by the DOH Director; (b) Food Protection Manager Certificate issued by the Conference of Food Protection Standards for Accreditation of Food Protection Manager Certification Programs in accordance with § 203.1 of Subtitle A (Food and Food Operations) of Title 25 of the DCMR; (c) Certified Food Protection Manager Identification Card issued by DOH in accordance with § 203 of Subtitle A (Food and Food Operations) of Title 25 of the DCMR; provided, that a vendor without such certification may employ a person who holds a valid: (1) Food Protection Manager Certificate issued by the Conference of Food Protection Standards for Accreditation of Food Protection Manager Certification Programs in accordance with § 203.3 of Subtitle A (Food and Food Operations) of Title 25 of the DCMR; and (2)Certified Food Protection Manager Identification Card issued by DOH in accordance with § 203 of Subtitle A (Food and Food Operations) of Title 25 of the DCMR; (d) Required food safety analyses and plans in accordance with § 3701 of Subtitle A (Food and Food Operations) of Title 25 of the DCMR; and (e) Permit from FEMS, if the vendor uses propane gas, open flames, or solid fuels such as wood pellets or charcoal."

[14] See Superior Court Bond and Collateral List: Non-Traffic Offenses – Collateral (July 5, 2019) (available at https://www.dccourts.gov/sites/default/files/Bond%20Collateral_Non-Traffic%20Offenses-Collateral)_07052019.pdf).

[15] For more information on the survey results and methodology, see CCRC Advisory Group Memo #27, Public Opinion Surveys on Ordinal Rankings of Offenses (October 10, 2019) (available at https://ccrc.dc.gov/page/ccrc-documents).

treatable at home (e.g., a black eye)."[16] Given the skewed distribution of responses,[17] the mode or median is likely the best indicator of the central tendency of responses.

In sum, the CCRC recommends the repeal of D.C. Code § 37-131.08(b). This will eliminate imprisonment penalties of up to 90 days for violations of vending regulations but leave in place civil liability under D.C. Code § 37-131.08(a) and 24 DCMR § 575 for violations.[18] This change improves the proportionality of the revised offenses.

Legislative History. The District of Columbia has regulated street vending since 1887.[19] Past regulations have been described as "vague and practically impossible to enforce."[20] After a comprehensive reform effort in 1974 proved ineffective, the District imposed a moratorium on new vending licenses in 1998.[21] Eight years later, the Department of Consumer and Regulatory Affairs ("DCRA") produced a report comparing best practices in other cities, the moratorium was temporarily lifted, and the District began passing emergency and temporary legislation to regulate vending based on the DCRA's research.[22]

The purpose of the Vending Regulation Act of 2009 was to reestablish[23] a vibrant vending program in the District that provides residents and visitors safe and varied foods, goods, and services.[24] The bill was expected to encourage entrepreneurs and bolster the District's tax rolls.[25] The Council recognized that, "historically, vending has provided a means for people to earn a living independently while gaining experience in the operation

---

[16] This conduct is roughly equivalent to simple assault under current District law, punishable by up to 180 days imprisonment. See D.C. Code § 22-404; RCC §§ 22E-1202 and 22E-1205.
[17] Notably, 20.5% of survey respondents selected a value of "1," the lowest possible criminal conduct, rated a class less than to "non-painful physical contact (e.g., pushing someone around)."
[18] The fine amounts appear in D.C. Code § 22-3571.01 and 16 DCMR §§ 3201 and 3313.
[19] See Report on Bill 18-257, the "Vending Regulation Act of 2009," Council of the District of Columbia Committee on Public Services and Consumer Affairs (June 25, 2009) at Page 3.
[20] See Id. at 3, 5.
[21] Id. at 3.
[22] Id. DCRA based its research on vending programs in Boston, Atlanta, New York City, Philadelphia, Chicago, Miami, and Portland.
[23] The Afro-American Vendors Association testified:

> Street vendors have been a hallmark in Washington, D.C. since the turn of the century when the first pushcart peddlers began selling their wares around the Capitol. Most vendors are people of color who earn very little money and work under harsh conditions. They perform an important service by providing convenient and affordable goods to both Washingtonians and tourists alike. Street vendors are entrepreneurs who ask for nothing more than the opportunity to earn a decent living. Yet, the city continues to treat these small businessowners as criminals.

Report on Bill 18-257, the "Vending Regulation Act of 2009," Council of the District of Columbia Committee on Public Services and Consumer Affairs (June 25, 2009) at Page 152.
[24] Id. at 2.
[25] Id. at 11.

of a small business"[26] and explained that the legislation aimed to balance interests of "safety and economic opportunity."[27]

In contrast to the substantial public comment, discussion, and controversy preceding passage of the Vending Regulation Act of 2009,[28] there was minimal community input or discussion on the record regarding amendments in 2014[29] and 2015[30] that included the criminal penalties.[31] The criminal provisions were introduced as a technical correction of an inadvertent oversight in failing to provide criminal penalties in the Vending Regulation Act of 2009.[32]

On two occasions since the current laws were passed, the Council has recognized some instances of vending without a license[33] that should not be penalized. First, in 2015, the Council authorized the mayor to establish exemptions from the licensure requirement "when the public interest would be served by establishing such an exemption." The Council explained, "[P]unishing Girl Scouts for selling cookies outside of a grocery store without a license would not serve the public interest."[34] Second, in 2019, the Council unanimously introduced the "Lemonade Stand Amendment Act of 2019," which proposes an exemption for any minor who is operating on a small-scale[35] without a business license or vending site permit.[36]

---

[26] Id. at 6.
[27] Id. at 18.
[28] The hearing record includes 26 witnesses, 30 letters, and a petition with 305 signatures, overwhelmingly advocating for deregulation and decriminalization. See Report on Bill 18-257, the "Vending Regulation Act of 2009," Council of the District of Columbia Committee on Public Services and Consumer Affairs (June 25, 2009).
[29] D.C. Act 20-354 (temporarily adding a D.C. Code § 37-131.08(b) and a 24 DCMR § 575.4 ("A person convicted of violating any provision of this chapter shall be punished by a fine of not more than three hundred dollars ($300) or by imprisonment for not more than ninety (90) days, or both, for each such offense.")).
[30] D.C. Act 21-261.
[31] Only two parties testified at the public hearing on Oct 5, 2015, both of whom supported the addition of the penalties. The first was a panel of executives from the Washington Nationals Baseball Club, and the second was a Government Witness, Melinda Bolling, the Director of DCRA.
[32] See Report on Bill 21-113, the "Vending Regulations Amendment Act of 2015," Council of the District of Columbia Committee on Business, Consumer, and Regulatory Affairs (November 4, 2015). Notably, however, the Committee Report on the Vending Regulation Act of 2009 does not indicate a clear intent to criminalize improper vending. See Report on Bill 18-257, the "Vending Regulation Act of 2009," Council of the District of Columbia Committee on Public Services and Consumer Affairs (June 25, 2009).
[33] The D.C. Code provides that "a person shall not vend from a sidewalk, roadway, or other space unless the person holds" the proper licensure, and unless the person is located in a specifically approved vending location that has been assigned to them by lottery. D.C. Code §§ 37-131.02 – 131.04. The DCMR provides that "[n]o person shall vend any product, service, or merchandise from public space in the District of Columbia without obtaining and maintaining a valid…business license for vending…issued by the [Department of Consumer and Regulatory Affairs] Director…" 24 DCMR § 502.1.
[34] See Report on Bill 21-113, the "Vending Regulations Amendment Act of 2015," Council of the District of Columbia Committee on Business, Consumer, and Regulatory Affairs (November 4, 2015) at Page 2.
[35] "Small-scale" means selling no more than 10 types of items on a sporadic basis, and in operation no more than 100 days per year.
[36] Bill 23-398; see also Natalie Delgadillo, D.C. Council Stands United On…Lemonade Stands, DCist (July 11, 2019).

However, neither the 2015 amendment nor the pending legislation exempts a child (or adult) from other requirements such as obtaining a Health Inspection Certificate, Food Protection Manager Certificate, Certified Food Protection Manager Identification Card, or food safety analyses and plans in accordance with 25 DCMR § 3701.[37] Nor do these exceptions apply to adult owners of micro-businesses. Also, neither the 2015 amendment nor the pending legislation specify what culpable mental state, if any, a person needs as to the existence of vending regulations. A person generally is not liable for reasonable mistakes of fact about the circumstances and results of one's behavior.[38] However, neither the D.C. Code nor the DCMR address these matters, and the District of Columbia Court of Appeals ("DCCA") has not yet addressed whether a person must be notified of (or otherwise familiar with) the vending rules and whether a reasonable mistake of law is an available defense.[39]

[37] See 24 DCMR § 502.2.

[38] There is a presumption that the legislature intends to require a defendant to possess a degree of knowledge sufficient to "mak[e] a person legally responsible for the consequences of his or her act or omission" regarding "each of the statutory elements that criminalize otherwise innocent conduct," even when the legislature does not specify any scienter in the statutory text. Rehaif v. United States, 17-9560, 2019 WL 2552487, at *3 (U.S. June 21, 2019) (citing United States v. X-Citement Video, Inc., 513 U. S. 64, 72 (1994); Morissette v. United States, 342 U. S. 246, 256–258 (1952); Staples v. United States, 511 U. S. 600, 606 (1994); Black's Law Dictionary 1547 (10th ed. 2014)); see also Elonis v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2001, 2009 (2015) ("[O]ur cases have explained that a defendant generally must 'know the facts that make his conduct fit the definition of the offense,' even if he does not know that those facts give rise to a crime." (Internal citation omitted)).

[39] Some street vending rules are more obvious than others. For example, 24 DCMR § 503.3 categorically prohibits peddling counterfeit goods, pornography, and drug paraphernalia. However, it also prohibits selling large luggage and carpets, which may not be as intuitive. Moreover, a person who observes someone vending a particular item in a particular location may innocently assume that they, too, may vend. See, e.g., Mikaela Lefrak, What's the Story Behind Those $5 Baseball Hats at Nationals Park?, WAMU 88.5 (Oct 5, 2017).

D.C. Code § 48-904.07. Repeal of Enlistment of Minors to Distribute.

The Commission recommends the repeal the enlistment of minors offense, under D.C. Code § 48-904.07, which criminalizes a person who is 21 years of age or older, enlisting, hiring, contracting, or encouraging any person under 18 years of age to sell or distribute any controlled substance.

Explanatory Note and Relation to Current District Law

Current D.C. Code § 48-904.07, provides:

> Any person who is 21 years of age or over and who enlists, hires, contracts, or encourages any person under 18 years of age to sell or distribute any controlled substance, in violation of § 48-904.01(a), for the profit or benefit of such person who enlists, hires, contracts, or encourages this criminal activity shall be punished for sale or distribution in the same manner as if that person directly sold or distributed the controlled substance.[1]

Repeal of D.C. Code § 48-904.07 may reduce the severity of penalties a person is subject to,[2] however, it would appear to have little or no effect on the existence of criminal liability because such liability already exists in overlapping statutes in the RCC and existing D.C. Code offenses. A person engaging in conduct constituting enlistment of minors may still be held criminally liable for such conduct: as an accomplice to the minor's trafficking of a controlled substance, or for causing an innocent or irresponsible person to commit the crime; for committing criminal conspiracy to traffic a controlled substance; and/or under the separate offense of contributing to the delinquency of a minor.

First, any conduct covered by the enlistment of minors offense in which the minor actually distributes, or attempts to distribute, a controlled substance would still be criminalized under the rules of accomplice liability set forth in RCC § 22E-210.[3] Accomplice liability requires that a person assists another person with the planning or commission of conduct constituting that offense, or encourages another person to engage in specific conduct constituting that offense. Enlisting, hiring, contracting, or encouraging

[1] D.C. Code §48-904.07 (b) specifies penalties for violation of this section: "Anyone found guilty of subsection (a) of this section shall be subject to the following additional penalties: (1) Upon a first conviction the party may be imprisoned for not more than 10 years, fined not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01, or both; (2) Upon a second or subsequent conviction, the party may be imprisoned for not more than 20 years, fined not more than the amount set forth in § 22-3571.01, or both."

[2] The maximum penalties for accomplice liability and crime by an innocent, both under current District law and the RCC are the same as the maximum penalties for the predicate offense. Penalties for conspiracy are half the maximum penalty of the predicate offense in the RCC. The maximum penalty for Contributing to the Delinquency of a Minor under D.C. Code § 22-811 varies from 6 months to 10 years.

[3] The revised trafficking of a controlled substance offense specifies that Chapters 1 through 6 of Subtitle I of Title 22 of the D.C. Code apply to the offense.

a minor to distribute a controlled substance satisfies this actus reus requirement.[4] Accomplice liability also requires that the person had the purpose to assist or encourage another person in the planning or commission of the conduct constituting the offense. The enlistment of minors offense requires that the person enlists, hires, contracts, or encourages a minor "for the for the profit or benefit of such person[.]"[5] In virtually every case in which a person acts for his or her own profit or benefit, that person would also have purposely assisted or encouraged the minor to distribute a controlled substance.[6] In addition to accomplice liability, any effort that results in the minor distributing or attempting to distribute a controlled substance may render the principal liable for causing crime by an innocent or irresponsible person, as set forth in RCC § 22E-211.[7]

Second, short of the minor actually distributing, or attempting to distribute, a controlled substance, there may be liability for a conspiracy to commit the underlying controlled substance offense. If a person 21 years of age or older agrees with a minor to engage in or aid the planning or commission of conduct which, if carried out, will constitute distribution of a controlled substance or attempted distribution of a controlled substance, and either party engages in an overt act in furtherance, criminal conspiracy liability would apply.

Third, short of the minor actually distributing, or attempting to distribute, a controlled substance, a person who merely encourages or solicits minors to engage in such conduct appears to be liable under the separate contributing to the delinquency of minors offense.[8] D.C. Code § 22-811 makes it a crime for "an adult being 4 or more years older than a minor, to invite, solicit, recruit, assist, support, cause, encourage, enable, induce, advise, incite, facilitate, permit, or allow the minor" to possess a controlled substance[9] or to violate any criminal law of the District of Columbia.[10] [4] Outlaw v. United States, 604 A.2d 873, 875 (D.C. 1992) (holding that acting as an aider and abettor to a minor's distribution of a controlled substance is sufficient to satisfy the elements of the enlistment of minors offense).

---

[5] D.C. Code § 48-904.07.

[6] Under RCC § 22E-210 a person may be convicted as an accomplice even if the principal has not been prosecuted or convicted, has been convicted of a different offense or degree of an offense, or has been acquitted. Even if the minor who distributes the controlled substance is never prosecuted or convicted for a criminal offense due to being a juvenile, accomplice liability may still apply to the person who encourages the minor to distribute a controlled substance.

[7] The revised trafficking of a controlled substance offense specifies that Chapters 1 through 6 of Subtitle I of Title 22 of the D.C. Code apply to the offense.

[8] D.C. Code § 22-811.

[9] D.C. Code § 22-811 (a)(2).

[10] D.C. Code § 22-811 (a)(5), (7).